fact that sin has corrupted and cut off all men, in their natural state, from the favor of God and the hope of heaven. It has a great deal to say about the universal fatherhood of God, but fails to show how that fatherhood has been effected by the fall of man. The Manual abounds in expressions like the following; "All men have God for their Father;" "Our God is the universal Father," &c. God is certainly not the Father of all men by regeneration and faith in Christ, because only a fractional part of the whole race are true Christians. The majority of the human family are therefore simply his natural and not his spiritual children. And yet, the Manual, p. 222, says the ever living is our Father and will make us ("all men") the sharers of his immortality and eternal life, as revealed in the Bible." Here then we find the order teaching the doctrine of universal salvation! The same is true, even if "us" above refers only to members of the order, which is open to Jews, Gentiles, Turks, deists, infidels and skeptics of all kinds. And if God will make all these Odd-fellows, sharers of his immortality and eternal life, just as they are, without the proper spiritual change, then all the rest of mankind have the same chance of being saved—thus giving us the same false doctrine, whatever construction is put upon the language used in the Manual.

And this doctrine it claims to find in the word of God. It closes the statement above given, with the words, "as revealed in the Bible." Thus it perverts the true meaning of the Bible and makes it teach falschood! But Odd-fellowship teaches that God will save all men.

4. It puts Christianity on a "common basis" with the false religions of the world and thus virtually rejects it.

We have already shown that Odd-fellowship claims to be a fraternity, whose principles are as broad as humanity—that in its eyes all religions are "equal." Hence it avoids all "affinity with sects," among which it classes the Christian religion. The Manual on p. 387 says that "Judaism, Christianity and Mohammedanism are the three great religions of the world and have for their "common basis" the law of the ten commandments. But Christianity is essentially unlike any other system of religion and has Christ for its real basis. And what is the character of the other two religions with which it is here connected? Ancient Judaism was all right in its proper time and place, as going before Christ and preparing the way for his coming. But the Judaism of to-day consists of unbelieving Jews, who reject Christ, and is a false religion directly opposed to the Christian religion. Mohammedanism, devised by Mohammed, an impostor, who claimed to be greater than Christ, is a compound mixture of truth and error, taught in the Koran and drawn from heathen, Jewish and Christian sources. And yet Odd-fellowship puts Christianity, which is the only true religion on earth, on a "common basis" with the two false religions just named and treats them all with equal honor and respect!

And it does this, under the specious name of "toleration," as set forth in the Manual and Pocket Companion, under the "Golden Rule Degree." Webster defines toleration, as "the allowance of that which is not wholly approved." Hence it does not require us to yield or compromise our own faith or convictions. It simply requires us to allow, suffer or permit others to have theirs. But the toleration here enjoined, involves the yielding or giving up of the very truth, essence and glory of the Christian religion. It involves the giving up Christ in the order, for the sake of those who deny him. And this is necessary, because all the members stand on a "common basis." Christians must therefore recognize Jews, Turks, infidels and all deniers of Christ as brethren.

And in order not to offend these brethren, they are urged to practice a kind of toleration that requires not a mere allowance of the faith of others, but a radical change of their own! The Manual p. 383 says, "the high barriers which in the world separated men from each other, are here removed. They have left their prejudices at the door (of the order) and mingle in one circle of brotherhood, harmony and love. The descendants of Abraham, the divese followers of Jesus, the parials of the stricter sects, here gather around the same altar, as one family, manifesting no differences of creed or worship." And the order is trying to bring about this very state of things. It calls it the "glorious era," when its principles, "shall have been received and obeyed by all the tribes and nations of men." And where will Christianity be by that time? It will be virtually supplanted or set aside. If Christians are ever led to believe and practice these false principles, then will they not only give up Christ personally, but along with him, the sum and substance of the Gospel, including all its distinctive feature and doctrines, everything offensive to Jew, Mohammedan, heathen, deist or infidel! They must do this. Otherwise they could not unite with all others, around the same altar, as one family, manifesting or knowing no differences of creed and worship. No man can have two sets of opinions, two creeds or two modes of worship, radically different. Hence no true Christian can become a true Odd-fellow in principle, in conviction, in faith and practice, without giving up Christ and Christianity! From such toleration, "good Lord deliver us."

How far does Christian toleration require us to bear with false teachers and false doctrines? Only this far, that we are not to oppose them with wrong means or motives or feelings. But the word of God requires us to oppose them in truth and love, with all proper arguments and influence and efforts at our command. We dare not let them alone, or allow them free scope in their efforts to corrupt, deceive and destroy the souls of men. We are exhorted to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong," says Paul. He and Barnabas, at one time, had "no small dissension and disputation," with certain Judaizing teachers and brought the case before a special council of all the Apostles at Jerusalem, where their Jewish doctrines were condemned and rejected as being utterly at war with the Gospel of Christ. Does that look like tolerating Judaism and placing it on a "common basis" with Christianity? Paul told the Philippians, "to stand fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the Gospel, and in nothing terrified by their adversaries." Among the Galatians he met "false brethren, to whom he gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour, that the truth of the Gospel might continue." He even "withstood Peter to the face, because he was to be blamed," for tolerating Jewish opinions on one occasion. In short, he stood up for the pure truth of God's word against all opponents and says, "though we or an angel from heaven preach any other Gospel, let him be accursed." That is the kind of toleration enjoined upon Christians—no quarter to false teachers, no compromise with error, no yielding of our religious doctrines and convictions to suit others, no toleration of Judaism or Odd-fellowship or any other false system devised by men.

The fact is, Christianity permits no compromise of its doctrines and principles with any religion under heaven. It claims to be not merely a religion as the order regards it, but the religion, the only true, divine, inspired religion in existence. All others are false and must be opposed. To compromise with them or put itself on a "common basis" with them, would be a suicidal course, a fatal ruinous policy, ending finally in its own destruction. And that would be the result, if the false teachings of Odd-fellowship were universally received and obeyed—the overthrow of Christianity.

5. It rejects the Triune God and therefore worships a false God. *

O. F. professes to believe in "a Supreme Being." This Being must be of a very peculiar kind, to suit all the different parties, creeds and shades of opinion found in the order, so that Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, etc., may all unite in worship around the same altar. It would seem to be very difficult to find or make such a God as this. But the order has proved equal to the task, in setting up an idol of human reason, which each worshiper is allowed to invest with such attributes as he likes best. The Christian may, if he choose regard this idol as the true God revealed in the Bible. The Turk may regard it as the God of the Koran; the Jew, as the God which he prefers. The heathen and infidel may each have his own notions about it; only so that all agree to call it "a Supreme Being," and worship as the order prescribes!

If the mere belief in a God of some kind is sufficient, then the heathen who regards and trusts his idol as a God, is just as well off as the Christian and idolatry must be approved as true and right. But there is only one true and living God in existence. All others are false and dead, and exist only in the imagination of their worshipers. This one true God has a certain specific and well-defined character, in which alone he can be rightly known and rightly honored. The Bible clearly reveals him as the Triune God, Father, Son and Holy Ghost, consisting of one essence, but three persons. This doctrine concerning God, as three-one, runs through the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation; and is the faith of all true believers in the whole Christian church. These three persons are all equally essential to the one true God. And if we leave out or set aside but one person, we see him in a false light and worship him in a false character, contrary to the bible. What remains after one person is taken away, is therefore not the true God, but a false God. Odd-fellowship cannot acknowledge and worship the Triune God as revealed in the Bible, consistently with its own creed. It simply demands faith in some sort of a Supreme Being, without any fixed and definite character. When Jews, deists, and free-thinkers of all classes, who deny the Holy Trinity, are asked at their initiation, whether they believe in the Supreme Being recognized by the order, they all answer in the affirmative, and hence that Supreme Being cannot be the Triune God.

We have already shown that O. F. denies the Lord Jesus Christ. But the Holy Scriptures clearly teach that in denying or ignoring one person of the Godhead, it thereby divides and destroys the Trinity and shuts out the true God entirely. 1. John 2: 23. "Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father; but he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also."2 John 9. "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, hath both the Father and the Son." John 5: 23. "All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him." These passages prove beyond dispute, that the denial of the Son involves the denial of the Father also. The Bible demands absolutely the paying of equal honor to both, yea to all the persons of the Trinity. And where this is not done the true God is rejected, as he is by all who deny Christ.

*"The Odd-fellow," June 1871, speaks of a "latent power which we call God."

Topics of the Time.

The pitch of folly to which their logic leads those who would cast the Bible out of the schools has been the subject of much sarcastic comment. But the school board of Dubuque, Iowa, has made that folly a reality over a school-boy declamation, praising the great German and reformer, Martin Luther. The squeamish president of that body declared on learning of it that the points "upon which the board is most sensitive is the utter exclusion of all political and sectarian questions."

The priests of Rome must be nearly ready to give "extreme unction" to the "sick woman of Mexico" and abandon her to fate. They have administered false faith and false ceremonies so long that not only is health gone, but the means to pay their heavy bills also. The Bishop of Tulancingo, in a pastoral letter, depicts the straits to which Romanism in that country is reduced. The salary of the priests does not average the wages of a day-laborer. The Bishop himself has frequently to dine on a crust of bread. There is not money enough in the clergy's hands to keep the churches and ornaments in proper repair, and hence the Bishop says the sacristies are being filled with useless rags, giving the churches a most forlorn appearance. False and idolatrous rites in religion cannot long subsist after the devotees have been stripped and plundered.

The Tweed case has at length come to a verdict before Judge Westbrook, and in spite of "the law's delay" the people are victorious and the Tammany chief must return to them over six and one-half millions. David Dudley Field conducted the defense, and was not indifferent in maintaining his own character against the attacks of the press, which has not failed to connect this gentleman more or less intimately with the bad character and great frauds he was assisting to escape justice. On the other side, Charles O'Conor, appeared in the court room as from the grave, Tweed's Nemesis, appearing at this final act of retribution. A month ago he had been given up to die by the physicians, but he clung to his strict temperance principles and refused stimulants of any kind, when he could digest nothing but the pulp of pears. He is now again in health and will see that the interests of the people are sustained and the judgment of the courts made effective.

Our reform is indebted to Judge Zearing of Chicago, now in Washington, for the presentation of the petition against the Masonic Hall Association of the District, etc., which was widely circulated a year ago. At the solicitation of the Corresponding Secretary of the National Christian Association he undertook the delicate task of putting this petition in the hands of some Congressman who would present it. Representative Caulfield of Chicago, who is a Catholic, and so an Anti-mason by religious vow, quailed when approached on the subject, but Judge Zearing persevered and his success is chronicled in the Congressional Record and the daily press all over the land.

The Belknap explosion was little more than a flash in the pan after all. The testimony of Marsh, the witness who was in favor of throat-cutting rather than perjury, was alone and unsupported except by the reported confession of Belknap, however much or little that might have been. Against the protest of at least one of the Republicans on the investigating committee, Clymer, the chairman, and other Democratic members discharge this sole witness, assist him in getting his fees, and hint that he would serve their purpose better in a foreign land. Thereupon he gets into Canada without delay. The only witness gone, of course the impeachment collapsed and the bluster about a criminal trial blew itself out. Other witnesses must be found and they were promised in plenty, but fail to appear. The Republicans in the House have challenged the other side to allow them to take up the case and put it through. The majority does not accept. So it is charged that the Democrats fear to prosecute, as it will introduce other cases for which their party must furnish heroes. But there is another possible solution. Marsh is a Freemason if his words mean anything. He with Belknap was sure to be tried for fraud. So he is slipped away to save him. Or more, if Belknap is a Freemason, by removing the only witness, both trials, before the Senate and the court, fall through, and after the flurry is over the case will be forgotten, or will appear trivial beside Schenck or the Pacific Mail or Credit Mobilier and so escape its just sentence. Whatever the solution the wound is there and the nation's honor will wear the scar hereafter.

Beecher, challenging the truth "from God himself" in his sforzando before the Advisory Council, seems nothing less than a blasphemer. His language and manner indicated no reverent use of the Almighty name, but an overwrought effort to impress the Council and the public. His remarks on approaching God in prayer at a recent Plymouth prayer-meeting show the ideas of Divinity upon which he practices. He urged a manly approach, "not crawling on our bellies and calling ourselves worms. If I called God a gentleman, the reporters would put sixteen exclamation points after it. But God is no Oriental despot, whose subjects must wallow in the mire when they approach his throne. He wants honesty and simplicity. We should approach God as one would ask favor of a large-hearted, whole-souled gentleman." Again he remarked, "I worship God laughing, loving; God, a full-orbed MAN!"

Not such are the views of a holy God taught in a meeting on the other side of the East River. Read the description of the inquiry meetings at the Hippodrome: "After the sermon of Mr. Moody, he, with other Christian workers, may be found seated by the side of penitents, instructing them and quietly praying for the divine enlightenment. A solemn quiet pervades these rooms, broken by the clear song of some sweet-voiced singer, the sobs of some women, or the prayer of a faithful disciple. Here may be found all classes—the rich, the poor, the ignorant, the educated, learned divines and earnest laymen, all on the same level, engaged in the same grand work. They are in groups, scattered here and there, while gliding about from groop to groop may be seen Mr. Moody. Here are infidels who come to scoff and reason, remaining to receive the arrows of conviction as word after word, not of sophistry, but plain irrefutable truth, passes through the fervid spirit of some saint of God into the very inmost nature of the one who would have overthrown the true and faithful Christian worker. Certainly the work of these men and women is not in vain and the future shall attest by its list of glorified ones, its purified, the grandeur of this work which men, without a laugh of derision or scowl of malice, pause in the midst of trade and pleasure to contemplate and admire.

A Parallel Case.

Masons are great at drawing parallels—especially where there are none, but where they wish to destroy the force of a moral idea. I will draw one.

In the year 166 of our era the Roman general Verus returned from East, bearing the trophies of victory; but at the same time his army was pursued by a strange disease that outweighed all the glory it had won on the banks of the Euphrates. This disease followed the army from province to province, mouldering away its strength as it proceeded, even to the remote frontiers of Gaul and the northern shores of the Rhine. Italy felt its most deadly ravages, and in Rome itself the dead bodies were transported out of the city, not on the decent bier, but heaped up in wagons.

The origin of this frightful disease was attributed to several causes; but among others, one was peculiar. It was this: that the soldiers had entered a temple in Seleucia or Babylonia, and had opened a mystic coffer, inscribed with magical signs, from which issued a pestilential air, which laid waste the whole world.

Now it is indeed possible that the soldiers of Verus may have opened the sarcophagus of some prince who had died of the small-pox, and the disease, infecting the air, followed the army wherever it went.

Be this as it may, however, I can see in it a perfectly parallel case, where soldiers, forgetting their duty to the state, might enter a Masonic temple, become initiated there into its signs and mysteries, and thus contract a moral disease under which all that is manly and vital in them as good citizens and faithful servitors of the state would moulder away until the whole army and all that it should come in moral contact with would become utterly demoralized, even to the degree of their very funerals being rendered indecent and void of immortal hope.

We glory over our successes in the war of the rebellion; but if, in that war, our soldiers have contracted the disease springing from mystic signs and symbols, our glorying will prove empty and void of all honor and life. The nation will have become infected with a moral disease under which its moral life will moulder away.

Let us examine into this matter before it is too late. Let us carefully exclude the contagion from our churches, beginning with our pastors, thus establishing asylums where the sane, at least, may escape the calamity, and thus limit its spread.—F. H. C. in Telescope.

Masonic Religion.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

The following, part of a "poetical address by brother Andrew C. Mitchel," appears in the reply of Luther Pratt to Solomon Southwick, published in 1828, and as it was designed to defend, so it illustrates the spirit of the institution.

"The Bible, compass and the square proclaim Religion, order, equity, her aim;
And that her laws such principles impart,
As mend the morals and improve the heart.
Yet still to keep the sacred spot secure,
From interruption and from steps impure,
Mysterious rites and solemn signs are given,
Symbols of earthly love inspired by heaven.
These like the night and never-ending time,
Live in obscurity yet live sublime.
Searched for by all, yet still by all unfound,
Like diamonds buried in the deepest ground,
Except by Masons whose unfilmed eyes
Explore the azure of the vaulted skies.
And as they worship mysteries they feel,
Revere those rites they dare not to reveal."

Poor, pitiable slave, nay, most selfish and inhuman wretches! Those principles calculated "to mend the morals and improve the heart," which are "searched for by all and yet by all unfound" except Masons, they dare not tell to their fellow men! How dare they withhold them? When the world is so full of sin and sorrow, what dreadful wickedness to withhold the true remedy!

Again our poetic Mason says:

"Yet not alone to mysteries allied,
The Mason boasts a talismanic guide,
His shield and buckler in the hour of woe,
Which oft hath saved him from the infuriate foe.
If by a savage corsair he be met,
And death must be the forfeit of defeat,
Suppose him here by savage fury pressed,
Or high upraised is brandished o'er his head,
Which if it fall he slumbers with the dead,
Our hope yet lives, he lifts his eyes to heaven,
And gives that sign by none but Masons given.
As quick as lightning falls the conqueror's sword,
Palsied his arm, and grasping for the word,
An instant pause—he folds him in his arms,
Guards him from ill and shelters him from harms."

Now this is all very fine for Masons to be saved from "savage corsairs" by giving "the sign by none but Masons given." It is doubtless very kind in those "savage corsairs" to meet with their brethren on the level and part with them on the square. Of course it would be very wicked to fight those "savage corsairs," or even to appear against them in a court of justice. It matters nothing if they continue to prey on the rest of mankind so long as they respect "the sign by none but Masons given." Hence the author exclaims in his transport of joy:

"Are such thy powers, blest Masonry?
Bless'd be thine altars, cherished be thy shrine;
And may His hand who heaven's high thunders hurled,
The mighty Master Mason of the world,
Protect thy temple, that thy deeds may rise,
With virtue crowned, immortal to the skies."

"The virtue indispensably necessary in Masons is secrecy. This is the guard of their confidence, and the security of their trust. So great stress is laid upon it, that it is enforced under the strongest penalties, and obligations.—See Masonic work entitled "Book of Constitution."

What Sayest Thou to These Things?

RESPECTED BROTHER DUBS:—In my former review I referred to the fact that the religious press of our land, with few exceptions is silent on the evil of secret societies.

Why is this so? The fact is, that the lodge power is dominant in the leading and popular churches of the land; and either through fear of offending this power or a willing subserviency to it, the editors of those papers exclude everything that is calculated to strike at the root of this evil. Some editors who dare to take up an occasional communication, or take in an extract from another paper against the evil, are sometimes threatened by those lodge-men in those churches who act as watchmen for the lodge; as was the case with a certain editor of the Evangelical Messenger, who inserted from another paper an article telling why a certain New York editor had not become a Freemason. For this he received threats in anonymous letters. Does this not show that these men are determined to control the religious press as well as the secular?

Editors who continue to speak fearlessly against this evil are either hampered in the circulation of their papers by members and preachers of their own denomination who belong to these orders, or they destroy the peace of the church by getting up a rival papert hat defends the lodge power. Do not these men fear an outspoken press because it condemns their position? Do they not fear the light because their deeds are evil?

These deeds are not wrought in God. The press is a great power for good or evil, truth or error, and should be the warning trumpet against sin and wrong. This, Freemasons as well as papists know but too well; therefore the threatening attitude toward the men and papers who speak out fearlessly against them. It would not do for them to have the whole religious press unfettered against them; because the evil system cannot be defended in open combat. A certain Presiding Elder said to the writer, whom he intended to reprove us for having said that he was a Freemason, when we replied, "Why do not you men stand up and defend it, if it is as good as you say?" "Well," said he, "it is not defensible; I never saw one who knew anything about who would defend it in that way." No, not openly, but privately. So Satan comes like an angel of light! If the thing is not defensible why do they not cast it to the dogs where it belongs! "For without are dogs, sorcerers, whoremongers, and murderers, and idolators, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie. Rev. xxii. 15.

Do these men fulfill their ordination vow—"Will you be always ready with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away from the church all erroneous and strange doctrine contrary to the Word of God?" But instead of doing this, do they not lust after these things, as the Israelites did after the flesh-pots of Egypt? Will not God visit these things and as he sware in his wrath to them of old that they should not enter into his rest, are these things not a warning to us in these times?

I have often wondered why ministers of the blessed Gospel of Christ join those orders. The fact came out in a conversation with a brother whom we esteemed highly on account of his good qualities. Said he, "I joined a certain secret order in order to bring a greater influence to the church—." But what would the Master say to such a watchman? "O ye of little faith," or, "where is now your faith?" If Satan by his orders must give the church and pastor influence, that church and pastor need a thorough reformation. Must not the true reforming influence for the church come from the blessed Spirit of God, the faithful preaching of the pure Gospel, and the godly and humble life of the ministry and membership? Why then go to the witch of Endor for counsel and help against the Philistines? Is not this the "victory that overcometh the world, even our faith?" When ministers thus court the friendship of the world they have departed from the first principles of our holy religion and instead of seeking the honor of Christ, do they not seek their own honor?

Our duty as embassadors of Christ, is to show the errors in evil systems that destroy the souls of men, as well as evil and sinful habits in society, and invite sinners to Christ. "This ye should do, and not leave the other undone." This must be done even at the expense of our good name or popularity for the truth's sake, and the sake of Him who has sent us. "Blessed are ye when men speak evil of you for my name sake; but wo unto you when all men speak well of you; for so did their fathers the false prophets."

The mania of popularity has destroyed the peace and power of the church of God under the old dispensation and is destroying its vital power in the present day, and nothing will save the churches in our day but true repentance from these things. I am your humble brother in the Gospel of Christ. H. W. HAMPE.

The Tobacco Curse.

Having abstained from the use of tobacco for nearly forty years, after having used it by smoking and chewing for nearly half that time; and having witnessed its effects upon myself and others, both physically and morally, I feel prepared to say something on the subject without incurring the charge of being wise in my own conceit, or denunciatory of others.

I feel impelled from a sense of duty to do what I can to persuade men to abandon its use; and thoughtless young men not to acquire the habit. But alas! the enemy of all righteousness manages to get unripe young men and even boys thoroughly confirmed in the habit at an early age, well knowing that in most cases he has secured them his victims for life, and not a few to a drunkard's grave, and a drunkard's hell.

From my own observation of mortality among men, I have no doubt that the use of tobacco shortens men's lives from five to thirty years; they literally smoke and spit away their best youthful life.

That the narcotic quality in tobacco creates and intensifies the alcoholic appetite is fully demonstrated in multitudes of cases. Most drinkers of alcoholic stimulants smoke or chew the poisonous weed, and some indulge in both. Ministers of the Gospel intend to be, and we gladly admit that for the most part they are examples to their flocks in "denying themselves ungodliness and worldly lusts, living soberly, righteously and godly;" but are sometimes referred to as using tobacco. Would they do so, is often asked, if they thought it was wrong. They do think it is at least uncomely, or they would be as willing as other men to be seen in public places with their cigar or pipe in their mouths, or openly taking their quid.

After having embraced the Gospel, and becoming a member of the First Presbyterian Church in Lockport, in New York, I began to question seriously whether it was right or becoming in me, as a self-denying Christian, to indulge in, and be seen pouring forth from my mouth the smoke of a most poisonous, filthy weed, that no creature on earth (we are told) will put in their mouths, but the tobacco worm, the rock goat and poor, fallen, sinful depraved man, who creates for himself an appetite and craving for a deadly poison. My mind was so depressed upon the subject that I went to the faithful pastor of the church of which I was a member, Rev. Mr. Curr, with my mind so impressed with this idea, that I could not give it up. He simply told me to put it away, never again to indulge in its use in any way. I did so and through the grace of God have never failed to stand firm to my purpose, and will to the end by the grace of God. Sinful ways and habits which we acquire in our early, impenitent lives we have to meet and war against under the leadership of the Captain of our salvation, who, if we follow and trust in him, will give us a triumphant victory over the world, the flesh and the devil."

"Fight on my soul till death
Shall bring thee to thy God.

I had a brother who smoked and chewed tobacco pretty freely for forty years of his life; gave it up at once, using not a particle of it for the last fifteen or twenty years of his life, securing better health, improved appetite and died at the age of eighty-three years. Another brother, in New York, whose health was very much impaired by its use, as his physician (and a good one) told him, was restored to health by utterly abandoning it. A brother-in-law in Hartford, Conn., who was an excessive smoker of cigars, say six or eight per day, found by entire abstinence improved appetite and health and deliverance from an intolerable bondage.

I meet men frequently who regret earnestly that they ever became victims to its use, but Satan has made many of them think they cannot give it up. Now if that be true then does tobacco rule him instead of his ruling his own spirit. "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city," and that I believe every man is qualified to do by grace imparted to all men. Jesus would not say to sinners, "Come unto me all ye that labor [or weary] and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," if they could not do it. Nor would he say to them, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have rest;" if they did not refuse to do what they have power to do by grace imparted to every one who will avail themselves of it. It would not be said, in the language of God's Word, "Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him turn unto the Lord, who will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon," if he had not the power of chosing to do so, and to do it.

Physicians who use tobacco (and few there are who do not) acquired the habit when boys or young men, and become on that subject as morally debased as other men; notwithstanding their knowledge of medical science and the effect of such a deadly poison upon the human frame, they still continue to use it and thus unfit themselves to be truly faithful to a patient suffering from indulgence in that direction, because he cannot do his duty faithfully without self-condemnation. When I had chewed or smoked some eight or ten years, I found a hacking cough gaining ground upon me, which I afterward found to be a tobacco cough. I called on a physician, who well knew my habit and was addicted to the same himself; and all the counsel and advice I secured was that I must take care of it or it might amount to something serious.

We have three practicing physicians in this small village, and no doubt reliable, except perhaps when tobacco is in the way. One of them told me voluntarily that he knew it was injuring his health, and that the tendency of its use was to get up a demand in the system for alcoholic stimulants. There is no necessity for proof in the matter for it is demonstrated in multitudes of cases.

I have little or no hope of a triumph in the temperance cause so long as the use of the filthy weed, which is the stepping stone to the use of intoxicating liquors, is made popular by the example of men in all ranks of society from the elevated position of the President down. Now and then it is even a minister of the blessed Gospel, the means which God has provided by his grace in Jesus Christ to elevate the fallen race of man to the exalted position of victor over the world, the flesh and the devil. Yes, we have elders and deacons of churches who will buy and sell to their own brethren the demoralizing article, instead of denying themselves ungodliness and worldly lusts, living soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. So long as these mighty influences are at work to give respectability and popularity to the pernicious habit we can expect no other results than an army of recruits from the young men and boys growing up in every community. In this village of seven or eight hundred inhabitants I once counted forty-nine boys between the age of eight and sixteen years addicted more or less to the use of the poison.

No man in its habitual use can have and maintain any just sense of its character in a moral aspect. To see sin in any or all its forms a man must break off from them, and looking from that standpoint he will see it in such an odious light as he never saw it before. Many men who indulge in cigar-smoking will become so lost to a sense of propriety and even decency that they will ride in a public or private carriage where there are delicate women and children, blowing the smoke and breathing the fumes of (to them) an exceedingly offensive, sickening smell. Our railroad companies consider it wrong, out of character and a nuisance or they would not shut up a smoker in a car set apart for that purpose.

That so few women get into the habit is somewhat strange, being exposed as they are in so many ways to inhale such a loathsome, narcotic breath. Babes have been seen to turn away from the loving kiss of a father because they could not endure such an odor and its effect upon their tender stomachs.

It is said that many upper-class ladies (if such they are) meet in private to have a ladies' cigar-smoke, and then go through a thorough process of cleansing their mouths lest they should be suspected or detected in the indulgence of (to them evidently) a low, vulgar, filthy habit, unbecoming any lady of refinement and purity. After all, if a husband and father does so, why may not a wife, a son or even a young lady daughter?

An incident, published by a father, who when walking with his little son by the hand, met a boy about the age of his smoking a cigar. The father having one in his own mouth at the time, said to his son, "Don't you ever do what you see that boy doing; it is a bad thing for boys." As they walked on, the little fellow looking up in his father's face said, "Pa, ain't it bad for men, too?" The father was so impressed in view of the superior wisdom and sagacity of his little son that he at once threw away his cigar forever. The blind eyes of a loving father opened by his little son.

JOSIAH TRYON.

Daniel Webster says, "It is my opinion that all such oaths (Masonic) and obligations should be prohibited by law." J. Q. Adams says, "Secrets written in blood should be revealed; a tree that bears such fruit should be hewn down." In a letter to Ed. Livingston, he says: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws o morality, or of Christianity, or of the land." Chief Justice Marshall in a letter to Ed. Everett says, "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of producing much evil, and incapable of producing any good that might not be effected by safe and open means." (The Chief Justice was an adhering Mason.) Gov. Ritner, of Pennsylvania, proved that Masons had forged two letters at least in the name of Washington, commending the institution. (See Spark's letters of Washington.) Was his letter to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts one of these? It may be objected that most of these men knew nothing about Masonry. Can any one imagine such men men as Webster, Adams, Ritner, and Marshall as writing publicly and in such terms about that of which they knew nothing? It is simply ridiculous.

Political.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

OUR POLITICAL TRACT.

A special fund is desired in order to pay for half a million copies of this tract. Hundreds of reliable friends are ready to distribute them if others will pay for them. One friend pledges a dollar for every other contributed, and this tract of eight pages costs post paid but $1, per 100, and $8, per 1000. Can you possibly make better use of ten dollars if you have it to spare, than by aiding to put this tract in the hands of two thousand five hundred voters? We desire a special fund for this purpose, and it will be used for nothing else. Now is the time to distribute them while all have time to read and none have their votes pledged. Send on your contributions and your orders now if you would accomplish the greatest possible good.

Indana Politics.

The said committee are hereby requested to meet in Marion, Grant Co., on Saturday, April 1st, 1876, at 10 o'clock A. M. Brethren let us have a full attendance. Our cause is just, and we wish to perfect the best plan for the work before us, then knowing the right, dare to do it.

WM. HALL, Chairman.

—An item will show how the lodge leads off on the temperance issue. Last week local elections were held in some of our Illinois cities. At Dixon the issue was license or no license, and James A. Hawley, Past Grand Master of Masons of Illinois, who presided at the Custom House corner-stone laying in this city, was elected Mayor on the license ticket. In Elgin on the same issue D. M. Barclay, member of Elgin lodge, No. 117, was elected Mayor also on the license ticket.

—Anti-masons in Illinois will find the "Masonic Register" of the lodges of the State a handy and valuable book in pursuing their inquiries in regard to the lodge. It contains the names and number of members of all the lodges of the State, and name and number of every lodge or other Masonic body. For sale at this office, 25cts.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., Feb. 25, '76.

Your tract No. 25, entitled, "The American Party," is received. I like it much, especially the platform of principles upon which it is proposed to build the "American Party," every plank of which is sound on questions vital to the prosperity of our beloved country. While it is not proposed to unite church and state (as those who destroy both will assert) the state should in its legislation acknowledge and revere the Higher Law, remembering that "the wicked shall be turned into hell and all the nations that forget God." Respectfully,

J. A. CONANT.

LAWRENCE, Mich.

I had a conversation the other day with a man who says that he will be with the Anti-masonic movement with his whole might and strength after the next fall election; but is afraid that the Democrats will get into power if the Republican party goes to splitting up. This appears to be the prevailing idea with some of our best men. I do not know how to get along without the Cynosure. M. GAGE.

OAKLAND CITY, Ind.

I heartily endorse the principles advocated in the Cynosure, but I doubt the propriety of bringing out a Presidential candidate at this time, for we cannot now hope to elect a President; and I think it is the best policy to choose the least of two evils. If we run a candidate it will be so much advantage to the Democrats. Consequently I think if I am spared to vote again, I will have to vote the Republican ticket. I would like to see this argued pro and con in the paper. N. H. DORSEY.

Temperance.

The Daily Gospel Temperance prayer-meeting continues with unabated interest and numbers.

Next Sabbath evening the Chicago W. C. T. U. will hold an important meeting in the Clark St. M. E. church. All are invited to attend.

Temperance meetings for the special benefit of street car employees are being organized in Chicago.

Temperance Reform clubs at Douglas place and Burr Mission hold interesting and instructive meetings.

"Mr. Moody is striking a grand blow by setting apart Friday as a day for weekly prayer and effort against the drink and the dram-dens. This plan wrought glorious results in Philadelphia. Why will not Temperance Christians make it a day of prayer everywhere?"—Rev. Dr. Cuyler in Temperance Advocate.

A New York liquor dealer has been converted and given up business. Temperance prayer-meetings are now held in his saloon.

There is a great temperance revival at Gloucester, Mass. A grand temperance demonstration was held there last week, under the auspicies of the Reformed Men's Club, consisting of a procession of all the temperance organizations, and public services at the City Hall. Some fifteen hundred men were in line. At Marble-head, over two hundred signed the pledge, and a club at Gloucester, which numbered sixteen members on the 5th of December, now has thirteen hundred.

The Pittsburgh ladies are crusading again. They meet with some opposition, but nothing damps their zeal.

The first temperance society of this country was organized in Boston, Mass., February 18th, 1826. W. Natl. G. T. U.

The brewers are preparing for a striking exhibition at the Centennial. They are to have on hand barley, hops, malt, machinery, drawings of breweries, malt liquors, &c. In addition to this, they expect to have statistics presenting the amount of production, the acreage in barley and hops, together with statements of the extent of the enterprise in all its length and breadth. No doubt they will make a good showing, for there is hardly any business that seems to prosper better than theirs; but their exhibition will not be complete unless they include in it statistics which shall tell the business they destroy, the loss they occasion through fights, officers and courts, the homes they desolate, the hearts they break, and the ruin they spread over and through society. And in addition to all this they ought to have ready a few specimens of drunkards, bloated, disgusting and dying in shame, with a section from a graveyard properly labelled to represent the final triumphs of breweries.—United Pres.

The Work in New Hampshire.

The reform work is progressing well in the Granite State. Anti-masonic books, tracts and lectures are in demand. I lectured Feb. 11th, in the Clarktown meeting-house in Barnstead, to a very interesting audience, composed largely of young men. I had Bro. Stoddard's chart and one manufactured by myself by pasting the Masonic illustrations of Mr. Ronayne, cut from the Cynosure, on white cotton cloth, with a roller. A number of the craft were present and I insisted that if I misstated a word that they should correct me. They kept quiet until I proposed to read an extract from the Master Mason's oath. One of them asked that the whole be read in order that the connection might be understood. That was their fatal mistake. The jewel of a silent tongue was lost, and from that time they continually interrupted me with explanations, apologies and questions, making my lecture a far greater success than it would otherwise have been. Three Masons arose in succession and positively denied the corrections of the Master Mason's oath as read. I gave overwhelmning proof that the revelation was substantially correct, and then asked every Mason present who was willing to deny the substantial corrections of the oath as read to hold up his hand. Three hands appeared, and although there were others present, no more would vote to sustain the denial of the three champions. Then one of the Masons wanted the audience to vote as to their willingness to believe men who claim to have taken the Masonic oaths, and to have exposed them. I then asked the audience whether they could believe Bernard, Finney, Colver, Williams, Rathbun, Ronayne and Stockman when testifying as to their Masonic experience. I took the vote as before by a show of hands, and eleven voted that they believed the revelations to be correct. I then took the vote negatively and asked all who believed these reformed Masons and the 102 New York seceders to be false witnesses against Masonry to hold up the hand. Not a hand was raised. Thus the Masonic champions were unanimously voted down by their own neighbors.

One Mason said I knew nothing about Masonry. I gave the grand hailing sign of distress, walked down to the pew where he sat and offered to give him the grips of the first three degrees. He refused to receive the grips amid roars of laughter. One Mason summoned Solomon, Josephus, and the Bible in proof of the antiquity and excellence of Masonry. I answered that neither Solomon, Josephus, the Bible, nor any other ancient book made any mention of Speculative Freemasonry, and cited that Masonic orator recently quoted in the Cynosure as proof. One of the Masons then asked how it happened that I knew so much and they so little about Masonry. I answered that it was probably because they did not take the papers. Again the audience roared with merriment. Again one of the craft asked me what the second step of the Entered Apprentice was inside the lodge-room. That gave me a capital chance to exhibit the candidate "duly and truly prepared," and to follow him through the degree. The Mason said no more.

At the close of the lecture, one of the Masons bustled up towards the desk. He "wanted to see Ronayne's pictures." I ordered the people to give way and let him come, but the moment he got near enough to get a glimpse of the pictures, he halted as suddenly as if shot, and sneaked off amid the laughter of the crowd. How sorry I am that Bros. Stoddard and Rathbun could not have had such help when they lectured in New Hampshire. So far as I know not a Mason lost his jewel during their visit. More anon,

From Greene County, Wisconsin—Effective School-house Meetings.

Juda, Wis., March 4th, 1876.

Dear Cynosure:—For the encouragement of the friends of reform, I wish to say that Rev. P. Elsea came into this vicinity some two weeks since and delivered some twelve lectures in four school districts within that time. Four of said lectures I had the pleasure of hearing; they being the first anti-secret lectures I ever attended. Suffice it to say I am much pleased with his efforts here. His audiences were large and with few exceptions very attentive. I am fully persuaded that if every school district in our land could enjoy a series of such lectures as we had, the result would be good. Our lecturer seems to be posted, even some of the craft admit that "he knows what he talks about."

Permit a friend of humanity to suggest to our friends in the good work, that ours is a warfare upon principles, not upon men. Many good men have been decoyed into the secret oath bound lodges of our times. Let us remember that a just and righteous cause supported by the sympathies, prayers and material aid of all truly enlightened men and women of this age will not fail. Your object, dear friends, as I understand it, is to restore man to his native manhood, by convincing him of the great injury he inflicts upon his manhood when he swears to do he knows not what. May God grant all our unfortunate fellow beings in the lodges, light, honesty and courage to come out from among them; to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." "Truth is mighty and will prevail." Fraternally yours, in the cause of humanity and freedom,

George Eley.

Footfalls among the Wolverines.

Dear K.—Since my last the footfalls have been somewhat numerous in spite of mud and other obstructions. From Howell Bro. Remington and I made our way by rail, via. Fentonville, to Lenawee Co., where we refreshed ourselves with a sight of the faces of our President, C. Quick, Esq., and the other friends who abound in that region. The town of Fairfield where Bro. Quick resides is the banner town of the State for subscribers to the Cynosure. Here owing to the mud and other contretempts nothing was done for one week in my line, save one sermon on Wednesday evening at Weston, Jan. 26, but on Sunday the 30th, I preached two sermons in the Christian church in the eastern part of Fairfield township, which I followed up with a lecture on Monday evening to a crowded house. While here I received much kindness from a Bro. Pratt and wife of this church, as well as from Bro. Holland and wife of the Baptist church. These are staunch Anti-masons, and their sympathy was spontaneous and rendered without stint when sorely needed. They will not soon be forgotten. Tuesday evening found me at a place made somewhat famous by the finding of that fearfully mutilated human body, an account of which you published some two years since. A diversity of opinion exists in that place respecting the matter to this day, and a stigma will for a long time rest upon the authorities for refusing a coroner's inquest, for allowing the body to be exposed on the ground until after dark, and then burying it under circumstances more befitting savages than aught else.

Tuesday night was fearfully stormy, and but few were out to my lecture. The next night, however, the U. B. house of worship was well filled, and close attention was given as I held forth on the despotic nature of Masonic government,its fearful oaths, disgusting ceremonies, and the interesting manner of teaching and impressing the doctrine of immortality, through the murder, burial, and resurrection of a mock Hiram Abiff. During this exhibit the Masons were disturbed and uneasy, and seemed much troubled to keep their jewels, which they however succeeded in doing until the congregation was dismissed, when the atmosphere was made to reek with "He lies!" "He lies!" "It's all a lie!"etc. At closing I had given a close challenge to give me the lie to my face and in the presence of the audience. This they dared not do. While one of the craft was thus venting his rage, saying I had "lied" all through, an old lady took him up indignantly, and said, "You go 'long! 'Twon't do you any good to say that now. Why didn't you tell the man so when he asked you to? You get out now!" and with a look of scorn she left him to ponder her rebuke. Here I found a home with a dentist named Wm. A. French, who with his amiable wife did all in their power to render my stay comfortable. On Thursday morning I left in a cold snow storm for a twelve mile ride in an open stage across the country to the village of on the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Road. Here I found a pleasant resting place with a gentleman and his family whose name I have forgotten. He, however, was from my native county in Connecticut—was sprinkled in infancy by old Dr. Beecher in Litchfield; but better than all he is a Christian gentleman of the Anti-masonic stripe. Here I gave two lectures to good and attentive audiences well seasoned with Masons, who were greatly divided in the expression of sentiment—some accusing me of lying as usual, while other some said I had told the truth. One of these latter told me I had spoken truly and had given Masonry much more correctly than he could have done it himself. Here I made the acquaintance of Rev. S. D. Burlingame, pastor of the Baptist church, who asked me to preach for him twice on the following Sabbath. To him I am indebted for many kindly tokens.

On Saturday I left this place for some fifteen miles west, where I opened battery on the "old handmaid" that evening. After lecture I took a freight train for Clayton, reaching that place a little after one o'clock in the morning. Here I preached twice among my own people, and returned the following day to Pittsford, where I spoke again on Monday and Tuesday evenings to a crowded house, having the Wesleyan Methodist house. Here Bro. Joel Martin, presides, who has lately published a very forcible discourse against Masonry. Here again I found one of those good resting places so precious to the worn lecturer, in the home of Axel Barnes, if I remember rightly, whose wife I found had been reared in my native town in Ct. This fact added much to the interest of my visit. This brother and others signed liberally for our work. Here almost every Mason in the place attended all three of my lectures, and kept their jewels well. May their peace be great when they renounce Masonry for Christianity.

From Pittsford, on Wednesday I took the cars for Litchfield where I found my co-laborer, Remington, who with a friend had come four miles for me in a drenching rain. Once more in an open wagon with umbrellas up we started for a locality four miles away, called

QUAKER MILL.

Here I found Elder Limbocker, a Free Will Baptist minister, with whose friends I stayed two days, preaching for the Elder two nights, while my friend was looking up work for me in Butler, Branch Co., and in Homer, Calhoun Co. On Friday and Saturday nights I lectured in a school-house near Herrickville, in Butler, and on Sabbath following preached an Anti-masonic sermon in another school-house where Elder Limbocker has a small but growing church. Here in this section I found hospitality with the families of Stevens, Rossman, Edwards and Drinkwater.

On the 14th and 15th we were at where we had an interesting time though Anti-masonic sentiment has not hitherto been very prevalent. In the place we found a Mr. Freneh, who is fearless and outspoken. Here the Masons, Odd-fellows, grangers, etc., were out in goodly numbers and the latter seemed hugely to enjoy the doses I was administering to the Masons, but did not seem so delighted when I held the chalice to their lips. But here I must stop and tell you the rest another time.

J. L. BARLOW.

Ronayne's Visit to Rossville, Ill.—A Turbulent Scene.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Past Master Ronayne, at the earnest request of several friends in Vermillion Co. Ill., paid a hurried visit to Rossville, on the 27th of January, where he publicly worked the three degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry, initiating a candidate under the name of Dr. O. A. Tiffany. To say that the people of this usually quiet town were greatly astonished at the miserably absurd and blasphemously wicked and idolatrous ceremonies of the lodge-room is only putting it in the very mildest form possible.

During the initiation all went on smoothly until he came to administering the oath in the third degree, and to that clause in the oath where he swears that he "will not sit in a clandestine lodge of Masons." Here Mr. Ronayne made some remarks on the oath and stated that "if he was a perjured villain for revealing the secrets of Masonry, every Mason in Rossville, who sat in that clandestine lodge was a perjured villain as well. At this a prominent citizen and Mason arose and denounced him as a liar and began to draw his coat as though he meant business, and created quite a sensation for a little while, until some one took hold of him and induced him to leave the house. After which he went to a hall where there was a concert and secured the brass band and a number of others to join him and returned to the church just at that part of the initiation where Hiram Abiff is buried, and to be raised. One of the craft mounted a seat and commenced a harangue and demanded that Mr. R. retract what he had said in regard to Rossville Masons, asserting that he had called every Mason in Rossville a perjured villain.

Mr. R. denied the charge, and reasserted what he had said before, if he was a perjured villain, every Mason in Rossville that sat in that clandestine lodge was a perjured villain; and proposed to submit his statement to the congregation. But all would not do. The Masons demanded his retraction. Finally, as there was considerable excitement among the female part of the congregation, he consented thus far to retract: "If I said every Mason in Rossville was a perjured villain, I take it back," but did not once admit that he had said it. With this they seemed to be satisfied and withdrew from the house.

It being quite late, by the advice of friends, Mr. R. concluded to close, without raising Hiram, which was quite a disappointment to many.

These are the facts in this matter. Mr. Ronayne conducted himself through all this as a gentleman; and the people are satisfied that he gave a truthful expose of Masonry. The conduct of the craft only served to clinch his arguments. Several copies of the handbook were purchased, and we hope these with the truthful and accurate revelation which Mr. R. gave will save our young men from joining the lodge, and induce others to forsake its dark dominions.

We hope and pray that Mr. Ronayne may be long spared to bring to light the hidden things of darkness. Hoping his visits may everywhere prove successful in opening the eyes of the people to what the realities of Masonry are, we are respectfully yours for light and truth.

Lectures at Salem, O.—The Local Society Re-officered.

SALEM, O., FEB. 22, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR SIR:—Rev. Henry Cogswell came to our place Tuesday, Feb. 15, 1876, and gave us a series of Anti-masonic lectures on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings. The lecturer treated the subject principally from a religious standpoint; that Masonry claimed to be a religious institution, but the speaker showed that its religion is false, opposed to Christianity, Christ and the Bible; that instead of making man better it has a tendency to make skeptics and infidels; that the institution degrades and corrupts men; that its oaths were wicked and not binding as they conflict with the laws of God and man; that these oaths make the Mason and hold him by a cord stronger than the cable-tow; that Masonry intrudes itself into our courts and there obstructs the course of justice and screens the guilty from the punishment due to his crimes.

Thursday evening the subject was Royal Arch Masonry. In which the lecturer showed the wickedness, inconsistencies and blasphemy of the same; its mock-religious ceremony; the Ark of Covenant and the representation of God behind the burning bush; also the oath in which a companion is sworn to protect, defend and help a brother companion in all cases whatsoever, right or wrong, and to extricate him from any difficulty if in his power.

On Friday evening the lecturer demolished the antiquity of Freemasonry and gave its origin at the Appletree Tavern, London, in 1717, and proved the falsity of claiming Solomon as its founder, and that no authority could be found in the Bible for the establishment of any such institution, and the legend of Hiram Abiff and all other Masonic legends have no foundation in substance or in fact.

The lectures were interesting and instructive, and every point the speaker made was well sustained by abundant proof, and challenged successful contradiction, which Masons cannot or will not do. The lectures were held in a large country church and at every lecture there was a large and attentive audience who by their actions gave evidence that they believed what the speaker said was true in relation to the dark system of Masonry. I think that Mr. Cogswell had done much good in our place and that much good seed has been sown which will bring forth much fruit and prevent many from joining the lodge.

On the Sabbath he gave us two good sermons long to be remembered. In the morning from the text, "Ye are the light of the world;" in the evening from the words, "What is truth?"

On Friday evening, Feb. 18th, we elected officers for our Anti-masonic society for the year 1876: for President, S. S. Butler; Vice-Pres., L. N. Bodley; Treasurer, G. W. King; Executive Committee, Avery Emerson, George Cary and D. D. Denison; Secretary, H. P. Butler.

May God give Rev. Henry Cogswell long life and strength to help overthrow the strong man of sin. Yours for the truth and the right,

H. P. BUTLER.

GENEVA LAKE, Wis., Feb. 27, '76.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

The Wisconsin State meeting has passed, and the Secretary's report been published in the Cynosure. It was truly an interesting and profitable meeting. Many felt that it was good to be there, not only to hear and see the works of darkness thoroughly ventilated by able, earnest, Christian men; but by each one meeting with other friends and workers in this reform work, and shaking hands with those that before were strangers, but "now are brought nigh" by a oneness of heart. O how cheering, how strengthening it is for one who lives in a community entirely controlled by the enemies of truth, to have such a privilege, occasionally, where they can breathe and talk in the pure atmosphere of truth!

Our State meeting was too short for the work to be done. Another half day was needed. One thing was necessary to be done and much desired by many, viz., the organization of Walworth Co. for political action. I am aware that this was not the State meeting business, but it was the intention of the friends to organize at the State meeting, but there was not a moment spare time, hardly enough to get our necessary food. So this county business is left undone for want of time. But this can and should be attended to yet, not only this county, but every county should organize for thorough work without delay.

The State lecture question could have been left in a better shape by having a little more time, both by doing our duty to Bro. Elzea, and providing for the coming year. Well, this matter is left with the official board. There should be a faithful, well-qualified lecturer kept in the field the year round. The fact that next fall comes our Presidential election, makes this an important season. One step backward now will have a damaging effect.

The secretary, in his report in Cynosure, Feb. 17th, makes an appeal to the financial committee. Will the official board please notify each member of said committee of the modus operandi of our work. There is money enough in the hands of our friends if it could be turned in the right direction, to do a thorough work. But it is hard to make them turn square about and stop paying Masonic preachers, and pay the same amount as the Lord requires; stop taking papers controlled by the lodge, and take those only that are free from such shackles, &c. God's Word says "Come out from among them and be ye separate."

H. W. Clark.

What Shall be Done in Connecticut?

Dear Cynosure:—I feel that I can give a hearty amen to the article in the paper of Feb. 17th, from Joseph Keel. Reformers must certainly see the importance of being aroused to the work when we realize what the enemy are doing.

I want to say a few words to the friends of the Lord's cause, more especially to the brethren and sisters in our State of Connecticut. No doubt we Anti-masons have as large an army as Gideon had when he was about to make war with the Midianites. But the same trouble exists now as then. Many are fearful, and say boldly that we are not able to be successful against the hosts of the Midianites, i.e., lodgemen, forgetting that all things are possible with God.

What we want now is men and women of faith and courage; those who can believe that the "Lord can save by many or by few." How much the people of the present resemble those of Gideon s time! When Gideon asked for a little bread for his brave and faithful band of the men of Succoth that they might continue the pursuit against the kings of the Midianites, "then the princes of Succoth said, Are the hands of Zeba and Zalmunna now in thine hand that we should give bread unto thine army." Judges viii. 6. Shall we be discouraged when one so chosen of God as Gideon was refused assistance to carry forward the Lord's work.

My friends, have we the three hundred in Connecticut who are ready to blow their trumpets for the Lord? I feel that it would be very encouraging to have your names enrolled. Will you not write at once to the Secretary of our State Society, D. J, Elsworth, Windsor, that we may know that the Lord has an army who are ready with their lamps and pitchers.

The Lord needs an army now as much as in Bible times, and I cannot see any impropriety in having an enrollment. I think that was practiced with the armies then; we read on one occasion when Saul had the roll called, he found that "Jonathan and his armor-bearer were not there.

Much of the efficiency of an army depends on having every man in his right place. Suppose that when God told David to place his men behind the mulberry-trees that they had been scattered, giving heed to their own ways; do you think that they would have been able to discover "the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry-trees," and been ready to go forth to battle at a moment's notice, thus securing the victory? I fear that many great victories are lost for the Lord's cause because his people are not where they can see and hear his signals.

I believe that the Lord is moving among us now; we see his stately goings in many places, men's hearts are easily touched in regard to truth and duty. Lodge-men are questioning whether Baal be the true God—where is Elijah? I am very anxious that the good work begun in our State should go forward and as we are not favored with lectures as in many places, let us prove what can be done by other means. Let us not forget the mighty results from one small stone flung by a faithful hand. God can bless the simplest means.

Will not the friends who have the means contribute for a tract fund to be used at once to prepare the way for the Lord's coming. Send money to our Treasurer, Chas. T. Collins, Windsor, specifying that it is for tract fund. And will not those who have not money to give but who would be glad to distribute tracts in their communities, send their names as above, also let us have the names and address of those who you know are in sympathy with our work. Let us all take hold as one man, trusting in Gideon's God for success. I I cannot close without calling attention to a sermon preached at Woodstock, Ct., by the Rev. Daniel Dow, of Thompson, in 1829, which has recently been republished by E. A. Cook & Co. Without wishing to detract from other valuable documents which have been published, I think that this is one of the best arguments that can be put into the hands of intelligent people. We ought to have ten thousand of these tracts circulated in this State within one month. It can be done. Where are the hearts that respond, Amen! Dear friends, do not wait for further invitations, but send on your contributions and names at once as above. The walls of Jericho must come down. Yours in faith and hope of better times coming. P. Bacon.

Correspondence.

Washington Dishonored.

Peru, Ill., Feb. 25, 1876.

Dear Brother:—On Washington's birthday at a certain church festival, a picture of Washington in the lodge room and in lodge regalia was hung in the most conspicuous place in the room, at the top of an arch over the table nearest the door; being the one presided over by the minister's daughters. In what biographies of Washington is his position on secret societies correctly given? Please state in the Cynosure for the benefit of readers.

A former pastor of the same church alluded to above, at a certain funeral recognized the Freemason lodge with which the deceased was connected, both in his remarks and prayer, and marched with them in the procession. (He afterwards acknowledged to me that he was ashamed to do it.) His house had previously been fired into and he had been threatened in many ways because of his out-spoken and strong opposition to the saloon keepers. One of the fraternity said, "Why didn't you let us know that you were one of us; then you would not have been molested."

I consider the platform published in Cynosure every week as the best of all party platforms in the country. Think I shall vote that ticket next fall if there should not seem to be much danger that the Democrats will carry the election. Can't act with the Prohibition party while that continues to act through secret politico-temperance lodges. Yours truly,

G. S. Bacom.

Note.—"Sparks' Life" contains letters written by Washington to Rev. Mr. Snyder on this subject; also a very rare pamphlet by Gov. Ritner of Penn., who proved that the Masons forged letters to prove the Masonic connection of the Father of his country. John Q. Adams says: "The use of the name of Washington to give an odor of sanctity to the institution as it now stands, is as unwarranted as that of my father's name."

The Knox County Court Case.

Galesburg, Ill., Feb. 22, 1876.

Mr. Editor:—In continuation of my report of the legal proceedings instituted against J. W. Hensley, W. M. of Yates City Lodge, No. 448, to compel him to furnish me an answer to my application for a demit from said lodge, said application having been made three or four months before my expulsion from the Lodge, I desire to say that after having obtained from the court permission to prosecute my suit as a poor man, I next on the tenth day of the term asked for and obtained from the court an order requiring the defendant to produce the papers belonging to the case (which said papers had been in his possession since the first day of the term) within twenty-four hours or show cause why they were not forthcoming. At the last minute and when he found that there was no longer any chance for dodging, he produced the papers and filed his demurrer or answer to my petition. But before going any further I propose to give you a complete copy of my petition as amended, the original being informal:

State of Illinois, Knox County } In Circuit Court S.S. Feb. term, A. D. 1876.

W. H. Robinson Vs. J. W. Hensley, W. M. of Yates City Lodge, No. 448, A. F. & A. M.

To the Hon. Arthur Smith, Judge of the Circuit Court in and for said county:

I, W. H. Robinson, hereby respectfully represent to your Honor, that I was a member in good standing of Yates City Lodge, No. 448, A. F. & A. M., of the State of Illinois, from the 25th day of Dec., 1870, to the 19th day of June, A. D. 1873. On or about the 1st day of March, A. D. 1873, I paid up my lodge dues and made application in due form in writing and in accordance with the requirements of Masonic law, for such cases made and provided, for a demit, or certificate of withdrawal from membership of said lodge. My said application for a demit was submitted to a vote of the lodge some time during the month of March, A. D. 1873, and it was resolved by at least a majority vote of the lodge that I should not be permitted to withdraw from membership of the lodge; and it was furthermore resolved that the action of the lodge on my application for a demit should be concealed from me (as I am informed and verily believe the same to be true); and accordingly it was concealed from me for nearly two years. Now there is no provision made in the Grand Lodge by-laws for concealing from a Mason who is in good standing the action of the lodge of which he is a member on any question whatever, much less on a question of such importance as an application for a demit. But on the contrary it is entirely inconsistent with the precepts of the order. I have several times while a member in good standing of the lodge asked the proper authority for an answer to my application for a demit and have uniformally been met by an evasive answer. I therefore respectfully ask the court for a peremptory writ of mandamus requiring the defendant to furnish me a certificate under seal of the Lodge of the action of the Lodge with reference to my application for a demit.

Respectfully submitted,

W. H. Robinson.

To this declaration the defendant makes the following answer or demurrer:

And the defendant by his attorney comes and defends the wrong and injury to him, etc., and says that the petition in the above case and the matters therein contained in manner and form as therein stated are not sufficient in law for the plaintive to have or maintain his said action against this defendant and that he, the defendant, is not bound by law to answer the same and this he is ready to verify, etc.

J. W. Hensley, by his Attorney.

I have not been in court since the demurrer was presented but have been informed that the demurrer was sustained on the grounds that I had failed to prove to the satisfaction of the court that it was contrary to Masonic law to conceal from an applicant for a demit the action of the lodge with reference to his application. Now as that thing would be very difficult to do, I propose (although I am allowed a week in which to amend) to present this morning to the court the following communication: "Having accomplished the object for which this suit was instituted, that is to say, having procured from the defendant an admission expressed in tolerably plain terms that I attempted, while in good standing, to withdraw from the lodge but was not permitted to do so, I propose to abandon the further prosecution of the suit."

W. H. ROBINSON.

A New Farmers' Organization.

COATSVILLE, Ind., March, 1, '76.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I clip the following from the Weekly Indiana State Journal of Feb. 23:

The constitution of the Grand Lodge of the Farmers' Union, of the State of Indiana has been filed with the Secretary of State. The objects of the organization are stated to be the advancement of the cause of agriculture, the promotion of the interests and condition of the farming community, and the diffusion of a greater degree of intelligence and knowledge among the farmers of the State. Any one over sixteen years of age, of good character, and with money enough to pay his initiation fee, can become a member. The constitution defines at length the duties of the officers, who were elected as follows, at a stated meeting held at Spring Station, Spencer county, Jan. 3: G. W. C., Milton P. Beasley; G. W. V. C., Andrew A. Egnew; G. W. R. S., Isaac W. Heron; G. W. A. S., W. T. Barus; G. W. F. S., Conrad Egnew; G. W. T., Milton F. Wright; G. W. Con., George Harden; G. W. A. C., John E. Wright; G. W. Ch., W. L Shrode; G. W. I. S., O. P. Burns; G. W. O. S., E. G. Lee; G. W. R. S., J. W. Boyce; G. W. L. S., T. G. Going; G. W. L., Stephen Hahn.

Evidently the grange is getting stale; hence the necessity (?) of something "new."

OUR MAIL.

Thos. Relyea, Watertown, N. Y., who is in his seventy-sixth year, writes:

"I have been an Anti-mason since Morgan's time. In 1840 voted for Harrison, and then for Tyler after Harrison's death. The liberty party came up and I went for that single and alone in the town I then lived in. In 1860 I went for Lincoln. Slavery was abolished and now it seems Masonry has got up its hydra head as high or higher than ever. Masonry and other secret societies are very numerous in this city and county, and our county and city officers are mostly secret society men, and some of them very respectable, honest men, but I shall cast my vote against all secret society men that come up for office, if I can get tickets for that purpose. If I can get none here I hope some friend will send me some. I like the platform of the American party and shall vote for the candidates that support that platform."

H. H. Hinman, writes from Annawan, Ill.:

"Had good meetings at Tiskilwa. I go from here to Genesee and from there to Morrison."

D. J. Wilson, West Branch, Iowa, writes:

"I am trying to prepare the road for some one to raise old Hiram. If I can have a little help just before the April meeting or right after, I think a door would be open that would tell for the national cause. The Masons begin to threaten and that is a good sign."

Wm. Randall, Tomah, Wis., sends four names, and writes:

"I can find plenty who want the paper, but they have no money."

We thank you for the names you send, and would suggest that you make a list of those who have no money now, and call on them again when they are in funds.

David Foreman, Milton, Ill., writes:

"I shall, if spared, vote for the anti-secrecy President. Expect to call on you for tickets for Pike county, Ill."

D. D. Beal, Hamilton, O., writes:

"I think you have set your battery against one of the strongest strongholds the devil has in this world. I pray for your success, and you will succeed."

E. Meredith, Otsego, Wis,, sends his renewal and writes:

"I want to see how the battle is going on between light and darkness. Shine forth, bright star, until the darkness disappears."

Lewis Gibson, Springville, Ia., writes:

"There was an M. E. minister at our house last Sunday, and I handed him the Cynosure of the 20th of Jan. I opened it at those pictures representing the lodge and and after he had looked at it for some time, I asked, 'Do you see anything that looks natural?' He said, 'Yes; that is a complete representation of the lodge.' I pointed him to the farce of killing Hiram, and asked him if that was correct. He said it was; and this preacher is a Royal Arch Mason. I asked him how he got along with his oath. He said, 'Very easily; they lied to me and deceived me, and there are no secrets to reveal; for twenty-five cents any one can be a Mason.' He said when he came to Iowa twenty years ago he went into a lodge and found Morgan's book kept as a guide in initiating candidates. He had talked with a presiding elder, told him how he felt about it, and the elder said that was the way he felt, and he thought he should never enter another lodge; but in about three weeks this elder went to a festival and made a speech for the Masons, and they sent him to their Grand Lodge as Grand Chaplain. O consistency, thou art a jewel! O shame, where is thy blush! I have commenced a war against these works of darkness and am determined to fight it out on this line."

Caleb Lamb, Ames, Ia., writes:

"We are very much in need of more light on the subject of secrecy, especially a thorough lecture to awaken the minds of the people to its importance. We have never had a lecture or anything to call out the thoughts of the people, excepting my own efforts. Please take this under advisement, and see if you can't do something for us in the way of a lecturer. I feel a deep interest in the subject and will do all I can and want you to render me all the help you can consistently. You will please send me what tracts you think best and as many as you can."

Cannot one of the Iowa lecturers help Mr. Lamb in his work?

A. Henderson, Harrisville, O., writes:

"Secret societies have nearly destroyed the church. I hope their time is short."

J. W. Murray, Otterville, Can., writes:

"We are right in the midst of a hot-bed of Masonry, and some of the Masons are getting quite excited because we read the Cynosure. My employers take advantage of every opportunity they can find for speaking their minds on the subject, which the Masons do not like; and this I think clearly shows that Masonry is wrong or else why should they get angry? For we claim that ours is a free country and therefore every man has a right to discuss whatever subject he pleases. There has also been a lodge of Odd-fellows started here during the present month."

B. B. Salmon, Larwill, Ind., writes:

"We have just had an exhibition of Masonry in this county. Ely W. Brown, a farmer, clerk and Mason of this county, has withheld a large amount of funds due the county; a thing clearly proved, yet a Masonic jury has cleared him. I wish to relate another case: the Methodist minister had been holding a meeting of some weeks' duration; the Odd-fellows had a festival in Pierceton and he closed to tend the festival, and resumed his meetings the next night."

C. P. Dow, Magog, Can., writes:

"In my boyhood I read Morgan's revelations and Anti-masonic matter and after reaching manhood I decided on principle to oppose all secret oath-bound societies, although their ostensible object might be good, as temperance, etc.

P. S. Since writing the above, I have found out that a book of mine, 'Finney on Masonry' lent to a family here, where a young man visited and read the work, caused him to give up the idea of joining the lodge, and I send herein 35cts of his money for another copy. I am posting myself and am waking up to the subject. What a curse is Free(?)Masonry! I will lend books, read and talk—it is duty to do so I think."

Jas. McMillan, Nunda, Ill., writes:

"I have been through the Masonic mill to the tune of twelve hundred dollars, which in these hard times about does it up for me. May God bless your cause and bring the works of darkness to naught."

Watchfulness over our spirits every day will tend to elevate our effections on the first day of the week, and prevent us from carrying into spiritual exercises a carnal temper.

No one should be satisfied who is not daily adding to his stores of knowledge, and at the same time increasing his facility in using what he has.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house.

TWO WEEKS! TWO WEEKS!!

Two weeks left to secure Mr. Carpenter's munificent offer. The treasurer's books Monday morning, Mar. 13, showed $1200 yet to be raised to compl-te the first $10,000. No enterprise now proposed is of so much importance to the reform as the establishment of a Publishing House for which Mr. Carpenter gives the building. Read his proposition:

WHEREAS, I, the undersigned, Philo Carpenter of Chicago, Illinois, desire to aid the "National Christian Association," a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, to oppose and counteract the influence of secret societies, by furnishing suitable head-quarters and accommodations for the transactions of its business, and I desire also to furnish an inducement to others to aid said Association.

Now this witnesseth, that for the purpose above mentioned, and in consideration of one dollar to me in hand paid by the said corporation, I do hereby covenant and agree with it, that if there shall, within one year from the first day of April [1875] be donated unto it the sum of ten thousand (10,000) dollars in money, or in good negotiable, interest bearing notes, I will, as soon as such donation shall be made, put said Corporation in full possession of the real estate and property hereinafter described, said Corporation to retain possession and receive the rents, issues, and profits thereof up to the first day of April, A. D. 1878. * *

Mr. Carpenter further agrees, if the additional sum of $20,000 be raised by Apr. 1st, 1878, for the use of the Association, to give a clear title of the property.

The first installment is nearly raised, but only fifteen days remain; the General Agent who has been laboring for this object is sick and may be compelled to entirely cease work for a season. So if the friends of this reform would see it prosper they must every one WORK for the next two weeks.

MANY FRIENDS have sent in contributions for the Publishing House during the last week. Bro. Conant of Connecticut with a $100 note says: "Would I could make it larger, but I hope to do more on the succeeding installments. WE MUST HAVE THE BUILDING."

Richard Platt, Lockport, Ill., sends post-office order for $25 and adds: "As I wish to help you a little and do pray the Lord may bless your labors in the Lord."

Several friends have promised help. Do not put off till TOO LATE.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 16, 1876.

OUR PETITION TO CONGRESS.

THE SENATE.

Washington, March 8th.

Mr. Cameron presented a petition signed by over 16,000 persons in regard to secret societies. The petitioners declare their opposition to all secret organizations, and ask Congress to withdraw the charter granted to the Masonic Hall Association of the District of Columbia, and that a law be passed making it unlawful to appoint any person to office under the government who is a member of a secret organization, and also that members of such organizations may be challenged as jurors. Referred. Mr. Cameron, in presenting the petition, said he had been informed that the petitioners were residents of every state and territory in the United States. He asked that the petition be read, and printed in The Record. So ordered.

This richly repays us for all our toil. The above extract from the Chicago papers shows that the American press has stated our objects succintly to American people, viz: to withdraw lodge charters as from alien bodies, irresponsible to law-making power; to refuse office to men owing a foreign allegiance, and to a secret government and tribunals; and to exclude foresworn jurors from our courts which Freemasonry ignores.

Senator Angus Cameron, elected as an Independent to succeed Matt Carpenter, had the moral courage of placing this matter before Congress, and to him will belong the honor of presenting the first petition to that body against the lodge.

OUR REFORM AND THE CENTENNIAL.

The recommendation of friends in consultation in the Cynosure office some three weeks since, in regard to a representation of our reform at the Centennial Exhibition, has been acted upon by the Corresponding Secretary, and the answer is that no space remains which can be given to the N. C. A., and no tracts or papers are allowed to be distributed, only business cards and circulars of exhibitors. In view of the importance of the reform and the occasion it is unfortunate indeed that such reasons should prevail to shut it away from the Centennial grounds. The un-American lodges will be in some way largely represented before the multitudes of every nation. The grange has chartered a Patron's Centennial stock company which will erect a building and form an encampment three miles from the Centennial grounds, and the order will be urged to attend in force to display its power as an American institution. Other "orders" have signified their intention to hold meetings in Philsdelphia during the exhibition, among these are the Odd-fellows Grand Lodge and Grand Encampment of the United States and Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania; the Knights Templar Grand Commandery; Grand Army of the Republic; Patrotic Order of Sons of America and the B'nai B'rith. The Canadian Masonic News in a long article advocates the assembling of a Congress of Freemasons from all parts of the world where the order flourishes at the Centennial, and the Square of New York echoes the suggestion. So these foreign born and bred organizations, which from first to last are constitutionally hostile to American principles are sure to display their false colors and proselyte at will. Cannot some measure be planned to counteract their work, and show all people that on this centennial year we yet honor the fathers of the Republic and will labor to restore their ideas of integrity and truth to that eminence and popularity from which these lodges would cast them down?

"HELP LORD, FOR THE GODLY MAN CEASETH."

We have received the following:—

KNOXVILLE, Ill., March, 8, 1876.

Rev. J. Blanchard:

DEAR SIR:—The enclosed is from the Knoxville Republican. In the death of Mr. Bailey, the Cynosure has lost one of its best helpers and friends; hope some one will be raised up to fill his place soon.

Yours truly, W. H. HOLCOMB.

Below we give the obituary from the Knoxville Republican. Read it carefully to observe two things: its lavish praises of Mr. Bailey, and its silence concerning his fearless and faithful condemnation and abhorence of the lodge! How will such Americans hold up their faces before a God of integrity and truth! My last visit with this precious saint was on my return from our Peoria meeting. He was then getting up a Cynosure club. "Help Lord, for the godly man ceaseth."

Died at his residence, one-half mile west of this city, on Wednesday, March 1st, 1876, Homer Bailey; aged 74 years and 11 months.

Mr. Bailey was born in the year 1801, at Goshen, Ct., and in the 18th year of his age moved to Brownsville, Pa., which was then the far West. It was there he made a profession of religion. In 1828 a Presbyterian church was organized at Brownsville, and he was chosen one of the elders, a capacity in which he served with honor for 36 years. He came to Knoxville in 1864, and purchased the farm formerly owned by Mr. G. Evans, where he remained until his death. On coming here he united with what was then the Old School Presbyterian church.

With Mr. Bailey religion was no secondary matter, but the affairs of life were all weighed in the light of the Gospel. His whole life was spent in an earnest, hearty, loving service of his Master—whose commandments it was his pleasure to obey. Leading the life that he did in following the precepts and rules of the Bible, he was loved and reverenced by all who had the good fortune to be intimately acquainted with him. His kind words of loving admonition to those who were seeking the better part will be long and gratefully remembered. To the last his mind was not obscured by a single doubt, and his vision was clear and distinct. Almost the last words he uttered were that he knew the sweet promises of the Lord were true and that he could fully trust them.

Thus has passed from earth one who in life was a blessing to the community in which he lived, and in death left an example of what the religion of the Bible will do for humanity. He was sick but one week, and on the evening of March 1st, sank peacefully to rest in the arms of the Lord without a struggle. "And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

Mr. Bailey leaves a widow and seven children to mourn his loss. Their sorrow is not without hope, for they rejoice in the blessed hope of a joyful reunion on the evergreen shores of the New Jerusalem.

SECEDING MASONS.—This list does not yet receive many additions. We hope our readers will give this a few minutes, thought, and send us any names properly belonging to the list not already in it. We are assured there are many more than are now reported. Thanks to Bro. Adams of the Christian Expositor, Council Bluffs, for the following:—"Rev. J. M. Dosh, of Iowa, who died in December, 1875, was a seceding Mason, having taken, I believe, about thirty degrees. He was a veteran champion against the dark orders, and richly deserves to be classed with the noble men who, in defiance of threats and slander have thrown off the shackles and published the doings of and workings of the dark orders. Bro. Dosh left some unpublished revelations and addresses which we hope soon to place before the public. Place his name among the heroes.

—Elder Freeman objects to the types making him say "divine" Luther instead of daring in his late article.

—Enoch Honeywell, of tract fame, has prepared another "appeal" for general circulation of the same size as his "Address to Young Men of America." Eighteen thousand of these stirring leaflets are now ready for free distribution with 54,000 of his first tract. They will be sent from this office on receipt of postage at the rate of 5 c. per 100, or 45 c. per thousand. Send them everywhere on their good errand.

—In connection with the convention for the Religious Amendment to be held in Chicago, March 21st, and the National Convention in Philadelphia in June, the opinions of the late Pres. Finney will be interesting. The Christian Statesman says he endorsed the movement with his well known emphatic manner. "When brothers H. H. George, and J. S. T. Milligsn visited Oberlin several years ago, in behalf of this measure, he received them to his house. In the morning as he led in prayer at the family altar, he offered fervent supplications for their success, and exclaimed, 'O! Lord God of our fathers, has it come to this, that two men must go up and down this country to call our nation back to thee?'"

—The Guibord case at Montreal which excited such attention not long since, was a singular freak of Catholic obstinacy. While Guibord's body was waiting for interment in the Catholic cemetery, two Freemasons, one a member of the same Institute Canadein to which Guibord belonged, which was his offense, were buried there with the blessing of the priest. It would seem that the Bishop, having driven the Guibord case into the courts wished to maintain the old-time prerogative of popery to the last extremity.

—The lodge affiliation of correspondents and agents of the Associated Press is an item to be considered in the dispatches of our daily press. The General Agent of this organization was a "leading light" at a recent Masonic banquet in Brooklyn.

—The warden of the Massachusetts penitentiary says from personal knowledge that "there exists in the city of Boston a regularly organized society of criminals, with a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. This society has a regular form of admitting members. The prison he has graduated from, his offense, with information in regard to the prison, are all duly recorded. The society discusses the most approved plans for burglary, tools, equipments, etc.; they also keep a regular register of the best criminal lawyers in the country, and of the judges of the courts; and they know at once what the prospects are for a brother criminal. If his case comes before what they call "a hard judge," they raise the money to secure a postponement of the case. They also have a fund for mutual support and protection; and through this source they are often able to send delicacies to their brethren when sick in the prison hospital." One necessary feature of this new offshoot of Freemasonry the warden does not mention. Secrecy is the prime virtue of such a band. The organization, initiation and management mark the connection with the lodge, by means of which, doubtless, most of its information is communicated, and outside work carried on.

—The Methodist Episcopal Bishop Haven describes the ceremony of feet-washing, as he recently saw it performed in a colored Baptist church in New Orleans, and says: "This ceremony is not confined to colored people. They learn it from the whites, of whom there are or were many churches in the South. They are called 'Primitive Baptists.' The largest society, it is said, in Atlanta before the war was of that sort. It was broken up by the war, but is reorganizing. They are devout in this duty, as they understand it, and seem to get shouting happy in discharging it." Friend John Fetterhoff, of Indiana, has written us an article presenting some Scripture reasoning against the practice. He argues that the evening on which Christ washed his disciples' feet and ate the Passover was prior to that on which he was betrayed, and the sacramental feast ordained. However the chronology may be, the religious observance of feet-washing does not seem to have prevailed in the early church.

Religious Intelligence.

—The contract for excavation and foundation walls for the new Wesleyan Publishing House in Syracuse has been let and the work will begin as soon as the weather permits.

—Miles Grant, editor of the World's Crisis, and a leading Second Advent minister, writes of that church that it began with the labors of William Miller, about 1832. It now numbers 100,000 members and 1,000 preachers in the United States. It has five papers. They worship much like the Methodists, and are opposed to church fairs and festivals. They have given up preaching the exact year of Christ's coming, but believe that the time is near, judging from the political and moral condition of the world and the present state of Roman power. He rejoices that during the last two or three years many preachers and lay members in other denominations have become interested in the doctrines held by the Adventists, and are looking at them with much favor. Some of the prominent revivalists on both continents are telling the people that we are near the coming of Christ.

—A correspondent, writing to the Friend of India, suggests that prayer should be earnestly and universally offered up for an outpouring of God's Spirit upon the nominal Christians of India. All Europeans, even though they be infidels, are known among the natives by the title "Christians," and the conduct of very many of them is the strongest obstacle to the progress of the Gospel in India.

—A number of families living in the neighborhood of Cincinnati have recently organized an undenominational church, on the basis of the Evangelical Alliance. Desiring to install a pastor, and to obtain recognition as a Christian organization, they called a council on the 14th of December last, which was made up of "Methodists, Baptists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians and others." Dr. Nast (Methodist) was Chairman of the Council, Dr. Morris, Moderator of the last Presbyterian General Assembly, preached the sermon, the Rev. Mr. Mellish (Baptist) made the address recognizing the church, and the Rev. Mr. Smith (Methodist) made the address to the pastor. The pastor installed was the Rev. W. C. McCune (Presbyterian). The Council by resolution, recognized this Union Church as "resting on the foundations of the common Gospel, bound together by a true temper of Christian love," and as such commended it to the confidence of Christian people of whatever name.

—The increase of population in the United States from 1840 to 1870, according to the census, was 66 per cent., while the increase of churches during the same period is 90 per cent.

—There is a wide-spread lamentation all over the country over the absence of Sunday-school scholars from the public church services. Bishop Peck, of the Methodist church, in a revival address, said "there is reason to fear that we are rearing in our Sunday-schools a generation of church neglecters."

—The late Rev. Henry Boehm, the centenarian, read his Bible through more than seventy times, and when he died the book mark was at the first page, showing that he was beginning to go through it again.

—The Methodist Episcopal church has seventeen Sunday-schools in Lucknow, India, eight for boys and nine for girls, with an attendance of 927 pupils.

News of the Week.

—The Chicago Times it is said is to be placed under a new management and become a straight Democratic paper. Eastern members of the party have responded to the appeals for funds to carry out the transfer.

—The President has nominated Judge Alphonso Taft of Cincinnati to succeed Belknap as Secretary of War. The nominee is a man of high social and political standing, and considered one of the very best men in the State. He was the choice of a large body of Republicans for the nomination of Governor last time, and came within a few votes of being selected. As member of the Supreme Court of the State he rendered the memorable decision shutting out the Bible from the Cincinnati schools.

—Richard H. Dana, Jr., of Boston, Mass., has been nominated by the President Minister to England, in room of Mr. Schenck. Mr. Dana was born at Cambridge, Mass., in 1815, and educated at Harvard. He was admitted to the bar in 1840, and his early practice related chiefly to admiralty cases, of which he possessed a very intimate knowledge. He published "The Seaman's Friend," "The Seaman's Manual," and "Two Years Before the Mast." In 1861 Mr. Dana was made the United States Attorney for Massachusetts, and in 1868 he published an addition to "Wheaton's International Law." He has also been a member of the Massachusetts Legislature, and is an orator of more than usual power; his orations on Edward Everett in 1865, and at the Lexington Centennial last Spring being justly celebrated. He will adorn the post that Everett, Adams and Motley so honorably filled.

—Accounts are received of a fearful tornado which on Friday last visited Hazel Green, Wis., a thriving town situated in the middle of a large fertile prairie about 12 miles north of Galena, Ill. Death and destruction were dealt out at a terrible rate. Nine persons are known to have been killed outright, a large number were seriously injured, and the damage to property was appalling.

—An appalling disaster occurred Monday night about twelve o'clock on the Harper's Ferry & Valley Branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at the Narrow Passage bridge, 63 miles southwest of Harper's Ferry and the same distance southeast of Staunton, by which a train comprising eleven loaded cattle-cars, five freight cars, and one passenger coach, was wrecked. Eleven lives were lost and seven or eight persons wounded. The train was precipitated through the middle span of a wooden bridge 114 feet to the rocky bottom of a small stream.

—Last Tuesday at 3P.M. one wing of a Catholic Home for aged persons in N. York took fire and was destroyed. That part of the building was occupied by old men, many of whom were palsied and unable to help themselves. Several jumped or fell from the windows and perished. Eighteen bodies were found after the fire was extinguished. The means of exit in such a calamity were undoubtedly too small.

The Home Circle.

Now.

Arise, for the day is passing
While you lie dreaming on,
Your brothers are cased in armor
And forth to the fight are gone,
Your place in the ranks awaits you—
Each man has a part to play,
The past and the future are nothing
In the face of the stern to-day.

Arise from the dream of the future,
Of gaining a hard-fought field,
Of storming the airy fortress,
Of bidding the giant to yield,
Your future has deeds of glory,
Of honor (God grant it may),
But your arm will never be stronger
Or needed as now—to-day.

Arise! if the past detain you,
The sunshine and storms forget,
No chains so unworthy to hold you
As those of a vain regret.
Sad or bright she is lifeless ever,
Cast her phantom arms away,
Nor look back, save to learn the lesson
Of a nobler strife to-day.

Arise, for the hour is passing.
The sound that you dimly hear
Is your enemy marching to battle—
Rise! Rise! for the foe is near!
Stay not to brighten your weapons,
Or the hour will strike at last,
And from dreams of coming battle
You will wake and find it past.

A Help to Read the English Bible.

It is not generally known that in the Bibles of the American and British Bible Societies, and also in those of some publishing houses, at least three different names of God in the Old Testament are indicated by a difference of type.

Let any one read the Bible with a knowledge of the meaning of these names, and of the hint given in the kind of type, and many passages will shed forth more light. Especially will this be found true of many psalms and prophecies wherein different persons are heard either as speaking or as spoken to, as in Ps. ii., and cx., and in Is. vi. The full force of certain quotations or allusions in the New Testament will then be felt; and the identity of Christ with the God of the Old Testament will be clearly proven.

Elohim is the general name of God as God. By it he is related to creation and providence. It is the plural of El which radically signifies force or strength. El as a name of God is often used in poetry, and elsewhere usually with an adjective or epithet. The plural form suggests a fullness of powers, though scholars differ as to its origin and import. Kindred to these two names are two more, Eloah and Elah, these latter being Chaldee, and all these are translated by the one name God.

The name Jehovah is explained in Exod. iii. 13–15, vi. 1–8, Rev. i. 4. Jehovah is God as the eternal unchanging one. His special relations under this name are to grace and redemption. He is the God who promises and covenants. Being the everlasting God he will keep the everlasting covenant, no matter how many centuries of seeming forgetfulness and delay, or apparent impossibilities come between the promise and the fulfillment.

As Jehovah he is the God of Israel.

"Jehovah is thy Elohim."—

JAH is a contraction of Jehovah.

The name Adonai or Adon signifies Lord, Master, Owner. Adon is rarely used for God and is applied generally to men. Under the name Adonai, God is related to his people as one who owns and disposes, judges and delivers, rebukes and helps, and all, it might be said, because they are his possession through redemption.

This name is peculiarly illustrated by what Jesus has done for and is to the church as his body, his bride, his servants, his house, his own. He has all power and is head over all things to the church, and he is the Saviour of the body. In brief, he is our "Lord Jesus Christ." On comparing Ps. cx. 1 with Rev. iii. 21; and Is. vi. 1 with John xii. 41, and on reading what follows in that psalm and in that prophecy, it is evident that Jesus is the Adonai, and as the Adonai he is addressed by the name Jehovah, and Jehovah is the Elohim. Exod. xxxiv. 23; Amos v. 16.

The following is the help to recognize each name:

LORD—Jehovah.

Lord—Adonai or Adon.

GOD—Jehovah.

God—Elohim, Eloah, El., &c.

Lord GOD—Adonai Jehovah.

Lord GOD the GOD of Israel—The Adon, Jehovah, Elohim of Israel. Exod. xxxiv. 23: "Trust ye in Jehovah forever, for in Jah Jehovah is a rock of ages." Is. xxvi. 4.—Selected.

Bible in the School.

A young Frenchman, W——M——, became interested in the New Testament, which was then used as a reading-book in the school which he attended during the winter months. In connection with his daily perusal of this book he became a subject of Divine grace, and thinks he was converted while nominally in the Roman Catholic church, and even then had experiences which he characterized, in true Methodist phraseology, as "real Holy Ghost times." But though nominally a Roman Catholic, he began, from the time of his conversion, to grow more and more estranged from its service and ceremonies, till finally he resolved to withdraw altogether. Resigning the official position which he occupied in that church, he began attending Protestant services. A younger brother becoming aware of his intention to join a church a few miles distant, the following Sunday, hastened to the priest, Father Mc——, of Malone, to inform him of his brother's purpose. The priest expressed great sorrow, and after thinking awhile, said:

"There is only one way that I see to bring him back to the church. Will you have the courage to do what I tell you?"

To quote the language of his brother who related to me this almost incredible story, "I told him I had nerve to do anything that would save my brother."

"You tell me," said Father Mc——, "that William is to be away from home till Monday on his wicked business of renouncing the holy Catholic religion. Well, on Sunday night, go and set fire to his barn. On his return he will very probably think that this is a judgment sent upon him for his wicked apostasy. He may repent and return. Be careful that you are not discovered."

"I was started at first, but the more I considered the priest's advice, the more justifiable it appeared to make this attempt to reclaim my brother from the dishonor and ruin of heresy. When Sunday night came, I felt equal to the emergency. Taking a bunch of matches, I set out in the darkness across lots to my brother's barn."

We were with him in his buggy at the time, driving over to his brother's. Pointing to the way through the fields, he said with much emotion:

"I went in the darkness of the night right over there, through by yonder clump of trees, till I stood by a stump which I will show you when we get nearer my brother's. There I stopped, or rather the Lord stopped me. Standing near the buildings, just filled with my brother's hard-won harvest, I began to realize what I was doing. I began to tremble, literally to shake. Well, I thought at first I never knew that I was such a coward. But is this cowardice? Is this, can this be right? No, it cannot be. I'll never set fire to my brother's buildings. I took the matches from my vest-pocket, flung them on the ground and threw myself on my knees to ask God's forgiveness for the thoughts of my heart, and I hastened back to my home oppressed with conflicting feelings of guilt and shame."

He then related to us how gradually his opposition to his brother's faith became modified, till at last, under the conviction of his sins, he called his brother in, as he was passing by his house, to pray for him.

The conversion of these two men of influence in that community, together with meetings inaugurated by them, led to a revival of religion among the French in this district, with results as before referred to. The story, incredible as it may appear to many, was not doubted in the least by us, both on account of the trustworthy character and respectability of the narrator, and from what we know, from long experience as missionary among Roman Catholics, of the spirit of the papacy.—The Standard.

The Predominant Language.

Dr. J. A. Weisse, of New York, in a recent lecture at the Cooper Institute, on the "Origin, Progress and Destiny of the English Language," maintained that at no distant period it will become universal. Besides citing the excellences and capacities of the language itself, and its room for improvements, which the speaker suggested, he presented some curious statistics and advanced certain linguistic theories. In support of the view that the English language will become universal, Dr. Weisse said that it is now spoken by active, energetic people, in every part of the world, and of all races. It commands most of the world's mechanical skill, and most of its political, moral and social and religious influence. Wherever English has been planted it has taken strong root, and borne abundant fruit. How the language has spread is shown in the following proximate, if not exact statements; One-fourth of the habitable area of the world is governed by English-speaking people; and this fourth of the world supports one-fifth of its inhabitants. Of the commercial navy of the world over one-third, and of the war navy one-fifth belong to the English-speaking races, including nearly two-thirds of the tonnage. Over one-half of the railroads, nearly one-half the telegraph wires, and the ocean cables almost entirely are controlled by the speakers of English. Of the letters despatched by post from 1868 to 1871 inclusive, over one-half were by the mail service of the United States, Great Britain and her dependencies. One-half the maritime commerce of the world, as shown by import and export tables, is in the hands of the speakers of the English language, and they expend over one fourth of the money paid for governing the world. Of course calculations of this kind cannot pretend to accuracy in all points, but they show enough of probability to demonstrate the wide diffusion and the potential influence of the language of the United States and Great Britain.

Influence of the Centennial on the Study of American History.

It is one of the great benefits of the Centennial year that it will stimulate the study of American history, and by refreshing the memory of the patriotic devotion of the fathers and that of their ancestors, will inspire a noble emulation. To most cultivated Americans the history of England has a charm of which our own has not. "Why is it?" asked a distinguished judge, "that the story of English politics is so interesting, and that of our own so dull and dry?" There is, in reply, the constant charm of distance to be considered, and the scenery and events which a great literature has illustrated, and the fascination of a long-extending multitude of men of genius of our own race devoting their powers to our welfare. England itself is touched with poetic association, while America is as yet, and with great exceptions, bare of that interest. But the more closely our story is studied, the more heroic and satisfactory it will be. We are still too near the early epoch for tradition to revolve itself into legend. We cannot have an Arthurian cycle. Our Cecrops and Cadmus and Romulus and Remus are too near the eye. Our antiquity encounters the modern time of England, and our history, therefore, lacks that vague and vast setting of mystery and remoteness which the imagination loves.

Then, colonial annals are always reflective. The last century in this country was not so interesting in its Indian and French wars as in the details of uneventful life, in the routine of towns, and the romance of settlement. The governor was a little shadow of a king, and his council of a parliament. But the moment the great debate of the Revolution begins, the interest in our history is commanding. We had, indeed, and unfortunately, no men so conspicuous for genius as many Englishmen, no oratorical figure, for instance, so superb as Burke, whose single splendor fills his time with light,

Patrick Henry and James Otis were electric speakers, who fired an assembly and kindled a people. But they have left nothing which is a part of the treasures of our literature, and over which the poet, the statesman, and the student all hang with delight. Jefferson said of Henry that it was the inspiration of hearing him which was his great gift. He could not remember what he said. Lord Chatham was correct in saying that the Continental Congress was an assembly of sages as illustrious and dignified as any of Greece or Rome. But it was weight of character, purity of purpose, heroism, patriotism, good sense, and intelligence which distinguished them. There was no Pym, no Strafford, no Falkland, no Cromwell.

Yet, when all this is conceded, there remains the fact of the unobserved growth of a nation upon this continent, the development, under most favorable conditions of many of the most characteristic institutions of the race from which England and her colonies sprung, and the masterly management of one of the greatest international debates in history, conducted by men of the clearest insight and the utmost intrepidity, and of remarkable ability. It is the setting, the scene, which is wanting to the imaginative reader; but it is little more; for our fathers' cause was that of England herself, and their attitude and devotion were in the qualities that had made the glory of great epochs in England. It is quite time that there was a more careful study of American history in schools and colleges, and the Centennial year will quicken an interest in it which is sure to be repaid.—Harper's Mag. for Nov.

Children's Corner.

The First Pocket.

What is this tremendous noise?
What can be the matter?
Willie's coming up the stairs
With unusual clatter.
Now he bursts into the room,
Noisy as a rocket;
"Auntie," I am five years old—
And I've got a pocket!"

Eyes as round and bright as stars;
Cheeks like apples glowing;
Heart that this new treasure fills
Quite to overflowing.
"Jack may have his squeaking boots;
Kate may have her locket;
I've got something better yet—
I've got a pocket!"

All too fresh the joy to make
Emptiness a sorrow;
Little hand is plump enough
To fill it till to-morrow,
And, ere many days were o'er,
Strangest things did stock it;
Nothing ever came amiss
To this wondrous pocket.

Leather, marbles, bits of string,
Licorice-sticks and candy,
Stones, a ball, his pennies too;
It was always handy.
And, when Willie's snug in bed,
Should you chance to knock it,
Sundry treasures rattle out
From this wondrous pocket.

Sometimes Johnny's borrowed knife
Found a place within it;
He forgot that he had said:
"I want it just a minute."
Once the closet key was lost:
No one could unlock it;
Where do you suppose it was?
Down in Willie's pocket?

Make Mother Happy.

"Mother's cross," said Maggie, coming into the kitchen with a pout on her lips. Her aunt was busy ironing, but she looked up and said: "Then this is the very time for you to be pleasant and helpful. Mother was awake nearly all night with the baby."

Maggie made no reply. She put on her hat and walked off into the garden. But a new idea went with her. She was trying to be a Christian. Thinking of her aunt's words, she said to herself: "The very time to be helpful and pleasant is when other people are cross. Now's the time for me to try and be useful. I remember when I was sick last year, I was so nervous, that if any one spoke to me, I could hardly help being cross; but mother never got angry or out of patience. She was as gentle as could be with me. I ought to pay it back now, and I will."

Then lifting up her heart in prayer to God for help, she sprang from the grass, where she had thrown herself down, and went into the house. Her mother was minding the baby who was teething, and very fretful. Maggie brought the pretty ivory bells, and began to jingle them for the little one. He stopped fretting and began to smile.

"Couldn't I take him out for a ride in his carriage, mother, it is such a nice morning?" she asked.

"I should be very glad if you would," said her mother.

The little hat and sacque were brought, and baby was soon ready for the ride.

"I will keep him out as long as I can," said Maggie, "and you please lie down on the sofa, mother dear, and take a nap while I am gone. You look very tired."

These kind, thoughtful words of Maggie and the kiss that went with them, were almost too much for her mother. Tears filled her eyes and her voice trembled, as she said:

"Thank you, my darling. It will do me a world of good if you will keep him out an hour; for my head aches badly this morning, and the air will do him good, too."

How happy Maggie felt as she was trundling the little carriage up and down the walk. She was denying herself and trying to be like Jesus, "who went about doing good." And it always makes us happy to do this. And then she made the baby happy, and made her mother happy. And this is the way in which Jesus, "the plant of renown," shows his power to bless people. Suppose we were all trying to deny ourselves and do good, as Maggie was, what blessings we should be wherever we went, and how happy our lives would be!—S. S. World.

Laplander Babies at Church.

I want to tell you how the mammas away up in Lapland keep their babies from disturbing the minister on Sunday.

Poor babies! I suppose it is growing bad style everywhere to take them out to church. And I suppose too, that the ministers are as privately thankful as they can be. But the Lapp mammas don't stay at home with theirs. The Lapps are a very religious people. They go immense distances to hear their pastors. Every missionary is sure of a large audience, and an attentive one. He can hear a pin drop—that is, should he choose to drop one himself—his congregation wouldn't make so much noise as that upon any consideration. All the babies are outside buried in the snow. As soon as the family arrives at the little wooden church, and the reindeer is secured, the papa Lapp shovels a snug little bed in the snow, and mamma Lapp wraps baby snugly in skins and deposits it therein. Then papa piles the snow around it, and the dog is left to guard it, while the parents go decorously into church. Over twenty or thirty babies lie out there in the snow around the church, and I never heard of one that suffocated or froze—smoke-dried little creatures, I suppose they are tough!

But how would our soft, tender, pretty, pink-and-white babies like it, do you think?—Wide Awake.

A Tall Chimney.

The tallest chimney in the world is the Towsend chimney, Glasgow, Scotland. It was built by Robert Corbett, of Glasgow, for Joseph Towsend, of Crawford street chemical works. The total height from foundation to top of coping is 468 feet, and from ground line to summit, 454 feet; the outside diameter at foundation being 50 feet, and ground surface 32 feet, and at top of coping 12 feet 8 inches. The number of bricks used in its erection were as follows: Common bricks in chimney, 1,152,532; composition and fire bricks for inside cone, 157,468; common brick, for flues, etc., 100,000 total, 1,400,000. The weight of bricks at five tons per 1,000, is equal to 7,000 tons. When within five feet of completion the chimney was struck with a gale from the northeast, which caused it to sway seven feet nine inches off the perpendicular, and it stood several feet less in height than before it swayed. To bring back the shaft to its true vertical position, "sawing back" had to be resorted to, which was performed by Mr. Towsend's own men, ten working in relays, four at a time sawing and two pouring water on the saws. The work was done from the inside on the original scaffolding, which had not been removed. Holes were first punched through the sides to admit the saws, which were wrought alternately in each direction at the same joint on the side opposite the inclination, so that the chimney was brought back in a slightly oscillating manner. This was done at twelve different heights and the men discovered when they were gaining by the saws getting tightened by the superincumbent weight.

Old Uncle Jimmie was a colored man over seventy years of age, who attended school, and was trying to learn to read. His efforts and the patience of his teacher were at last rewarded by his mastery of the alphabet. Then he was introduced to the mysteries of orthography, and the little word "it" was under examination. After naming the letters several times, and pronouncing the word after his teacher, he still seemed puzzled. "Do you understand it now?" asked his teacher. "Well," he said, "I see the 'i' and the 't' but I can't see the 'it.'"

Home and Health Hints.

Good Butter in Winter.

For the benefit of my lady friends, I will give my experience of twenty-five years of making as good butter in winter as in summer. In the first place, we suppose the cows to have been fed on good feed. After the milk has been strained, put it on the stove to heat, either in the pans or in any other way thought proper. Do not make it too hot, or the cream will not rise; it may then be placed in a clean cellar, free from vegetables or anything that will give the cream an unnatural taste, or in a cupboard with a canvass door, in a moderately warm room; if in the latter place, it should not be put in until the steam has passed off, otherwise the shelves will be liable to mould. The milk should not stand longer in winter than in summer, or the butter will be bitter. In thirty-six or forty-eight hours it should be skimmed, if in a cool place, sooner if in a warm one. If the milk is thought to be too rich to give to the pigs, let it stand longer, and use the cream that rises on it for shortening, or in some other way than for butter.

If the milk has been kept in a cool place, take the cream to a warm room a day or two before churning. If you wish the butter to look and taste like grass butter grate orange carrots, put some hot water or milk to the pulp, strain and add it to the cream, which should be a little above sixty degrees when you commence churning. A common sized teaspoonful will color six pounds of butter. After churning draw off the buttermilk, put cold water in the churn, and churn a few minutes, and if managed right you will never fail of having good butter. I rejoice that the prejudice against washing butter with cold water is slowly passing away. Heating the milk I believe is an English method, and ought to be more generally practiced, then there would not be so much poor butter in the market.—Cor. American Agriculturist.

To Polish Cuffs and Shirt Fronts.—Procure at the hardware stores a polishing iron, that with a bulge at both ends is the best, and will cost $1. Iron the linen as usual, then place it on a board with a layer of muslin on the board, pass a damp cloth over the linen, and rub with the polishing iron until the desired degree of glossiness is obtained. The iron should not be very hot, or it will scorch; if it is too cool, the polish will be long coming. Gum arabic dissolved and added in small quantities to the starch improves it; a lump of sugar is almost as good, and so is sperm, or soap, or butter, or white wax.

How to Cook Codfish.—Wash, pick up a little and soak it for a long time, say four or five hours in summer or all night in winter, in warm water; change the water and drain; pick out the bones and heat in scalding water, but do not boil. Make some good milk gravy, adding cream if you have it, and a small piece of butter, with a dash of pepper. Let this boil a little, then add the fish, in about the proportion of a pint of soaked fish to a quart of gravy. Never let the codfish boil; it hardens it.

Faded silks may be renovated by sponging them with soft water and soap; then rub them with a dry cloth on a flat board; and afterward iron them on the inside with a smoothing iron. Old black silks may be improved by sponging them with spirits. In this case the ironing may be done on the right side, thin paper being spread over to prevent glazing.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. J. Sarver, Sunday, Dec., 19th, 1875, in the Evangelical Lutheran Church, Leechburg, Pa.

(CONCLUDED.)

It is of no avail that they believe in "a Supreme Being," which does not really exist.

The one true God cannot be known or had or worshiped apart from Christ, because the Father and the Son cannot be separated. To reject the one, is to reject both. "He that abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." That is, he has no God at all—nothing but an idol, by whatever name he may call it. This places Odd-fellowship in the ranks of idolatry, teaching a false religion and worshiping a false god, an idol of its own invention! Whoever gets a false idea or conception of God from reason, contrary to the Bible, has an idol for his God, whether he has that false conception embodied in some external object, or keeps it simply as an ideal in his own mind. It is all the same.

After forming this idol, Odd-fellowship rears a temple, dedicates a hall, forms a lodge, with its priest and altar, where it is set up for worship, even by Christians! In what light Christians are to regard such idolatry may be learned from the fate of Dagon, whose body was found in broken pieces on the floor after the Ark of God was temporarily put in the temple of that idol—showing that the true God will not "tolerate" false gods, nor allow them to stand on a "common basis" with him under any circumstances. We have another illustration of this, in connection with the giving of the law from Mount Sinai, where the Israelites made and worshiped a golden calf—as a punishment for which three thousand offenders perished, while the molten image itself was burned in the fire, ground into powder and strewn upon the water, which the rest were made to drink!

6. It virtually denies and rejects the supreme authority of the Bible.

The Bible is the only divine, infallible, perfect book, inspired and given by God himself. Its authority in religion is therefore supreme. What it teaches and determines, as the book of God, must be accepted as final and fixed forever. From its lofty position, far above all pretended revelations or rules of faith, it judges and condemns as false all religious teachers, doctrines, authorities and societies, that do not harmonize with its teachings. And from its supreme decision there is no appeal or escape. Our faith must either stand or fall, as it agrees or disagrees with the word of God. And this supremacy it claims in explicit terms. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." "Though an angel from heaven preach any other Gospel * * let him be accursed." "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

Accordingly, in our confessions, we as a church, declare: "With our whole heart, we receive and embrace the Holy Scriptures, and believe that they alone are the sole and infallible rule, by which all doctrines and teachers must be judged and tried." And this is substantially the basis of all evangelical churches on this point.

And what place is accorded to the Bible by this order in its system of religion? We have already shown that it seeks to unite in fellowship men of all nations and creeds, concerning whom it says: "All are equal—all are brethren." Hence, it equalizes Christianity with various false religions represented in the fraternity. And in doing so, it necessarily equalizes the Bible with the false books of those religions. On p. 388 of the Manual, we read: "Followers of different teachers—ye are worshipers of one God, (?) who is Father of all, and therefore ye are brethren." Through its unscriptural toleration, all religious teachers, doctrines, and books, represented in the order, are therefore officially recognized as equal—as standing on the same "common basis." Hence, the fraternity does not acknowledge the supreme authority of the Bible as the Christian church does, and as God himself requires; but simply puts it on the same level with the Koran, Shaster, Zendavesta, and others, and simply allows it equal authority with them. Indeed, the order could not do otherwise, without violating the fundamental principle of brotherhood on which it professes to stand.

But this is not all. It makes the Bible inferior to natural conscience, as a source and rule of religious faith. The Pocket Companion, p. 127, says: "Conscience should be permitted always to govern us, and, as it directs, so should we ever act." In Odd-fellowship Illustrated, the Chief Patriarch says to the candidate for the Golden Rule Degree: "The authority of conscience should at all times be respected, and, as it determines, so should we act in all the relations of life." The Manual, p. 376, says: "The authority of conscienee in religion must be paramount." Paramount means highest, supreme—superior to all other authorities, civil or ecclesiastical, human or divine. Neither church nor state has a right to oppress and persecute men for the free exercise of conscience in religion. But every man is responsible to God for his views, and every man's conscience must be subject to His Word, as the highest law or rule to guide and govern him in all things. And yet Odd-fellowship makes the Bible subject to conscience, instead of making conscience subject to the Bible. If it would require man's conscience to be enlightened, quickened, and controlled by the Word and Spirit of God, then the case would be radically different. But that would be "sectarian," and the order dare not instruct its members to that effect. Hence, when it says: "The authority of conscience in religion must be paramount," it must mean natural conscience blinded and perverted by sin, which conscience it thus places above the teachings of prophets, apostles, and evangelists—"holy men of God, who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost"—yea, above the divine utterances of the Son of God himself. "If the heart beats only for what is good and noble," says F. S. Ostheim, "it needs no other religion than that which it dictates to itself."* The Holy Scriptures are virtually set aside, and the dictates of the corrupt heart are to be followed instead!

* See "Odd Fellow," June, 1871, p. 369.

And the natural result is, a false system of religion that conflicts with the Bible in all its vital and essential doctrines. We have already shown that Odd-fellowship rejects Christ and the Holy Trinity, and in their stead worships an idol of its own making; teaches salvation without Gospel limits or conditions; ignores the necessity of the new birth, repentance, faith and sanctification; places Christianity on equal footing with false religions, and gives supreme authority to natural conscience, instead of acknowledging the Word of God as the only perfect rule by which all teachers and doctrines are to be judged and tried.

In the light of all this, let us see what the Manual says on pp. 221 and 222: "The Bible is therefore placed among our emblems, because it is the fountain whence we draw instruction—the store-house whence our precepts are derived, and most of our emblems are found in its pages. No lodge can be held without it." This language, taken at par, would leave the impression that the order stands fairly and squarely on the Bible. But with what consistency or sincerity can the order speak of the Bible in this pious strain, after it has virtually denied and rejected its supreme authority? Does not this look like hypocrisy and deception—like dressing a wolf "in sheep's clothing"—like putting on a Christian appearance, in order to draw unsuspecting Christians into the lodge and deceive them as to its real character and designs?

We have only time left to discuss briefly and in general terms, some of the other secret societies, prominent among which is Masonry. The religious principles of this order are, if possible, more decidedly anti-Christian than those of Odd-fellowship. We simply give one or two specimens. At first, it professes to receive and honor what it calls the "Holy Bible." Further on, in one of the degrees of Knighthood, it says to the candidate: "The Bible is the only law you ought to follow. It is that which Adam received at his creation. . . . is called natural law." As to the doctrines of the Bible, the Mason is urged "not to admit that which is not demonstrated as clearly as that two and two are equal to four"—thus setting aside all the mysteries of the Bible, which, of course, cannot be thus demonstrated, and allowing no exercise of faith!

Again, in order to be "a good Mason," it says to the candidate: "You must shake off the yoke of infant prejudice concerning the mysteries of the reigning religion," which is Christianity! "Behold! my dear brother! what you must fight against and destroy before you can come to the knowledge of the true good and sovereign happiness. Behold the monster, which you must conquer!—the serpent, which we detest as an idol that is adored by the idiot and vulgar, under the name of RELIGION!"

For a full and reliable exposure, we refer the inquirer to "Light on Masonry" by Bernard, who had taken fifteen degrees before his withdrawal from the order, and, in writing his book, had the assistance of others who had gone much higher. This book is indorsed and recommended by men of the best and highest character, including many seceding Masons, who speak from personal knowledge of what they passed through. It is vain for Masons to deny the truth and credibility of this book. No candid, unprejudiced man can read it carefully and then pronounce it false. It contains an array of facts and proofs that cannot be resisted. The Grange is a recent invention designed as a trap for the farmers—a class of men whom other societies of this kind had failed to reach. Secretary Kelley, one of the founders, says: "Many of our originators were Masons of the 32d and 33d degrees, and prominent Odd-fellows." Among the latter is the Rev. A. B. Grosh, the Universalist, who prepared the Ritual—the order of worship used by grangers. From the simple fact that Masons and Odd-fellows took a leading part in framing the laws and principles of this society, we might infer that it is substantially like them in character. And examination shows this inference to be correct. The Rev. A. W. Geeslin, in his "Exposition of the Grange," calls it "a religion at variance with the Christian religion—a heathenish religion on Christian soil." In its installation ceremonies, it claims that: "Its teachings are the loftiest that man can seek"—higher and better than those contained in the Bible itself! Christ is excluded from all the religious forms and ceremonies of the grange, except the prayer and benediction which conclude the burial service in which he is recognized.

But such a partial recognition can neither satisfy Christ, nor satisfy a true Christian, whose conscience is properly enlightened. Christ accepts no partial homage or obedience. He demands the whole heart and the whole life. Paul says, "Do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." He must be duly honored always in all our prayers—not simply once a week, month, or year; not simply at the grave, but in all meetings, whenever and wherever we engage in worship. Like Masonry and Odd-fellowship, the grange is essentially anti-Christian in its religious character. Hence, it is a poor, miserable subterfuge to recognize Christ at funerals, which may not occur once in years, when it ignores him entirely in all other ceremonies on all other occasions! It reminds us of Badlaam's vain wish to "die the death of the righteous," though he persisted in living the life of a heathen!

Another fraternity is called Knights of Pythias—a significant name borrowed from heathenism, because Christendom could not furnish one as suitable and congenial to the spirit and aims of this order! Its religious character is of the same general type with that of Masonry and Odd-fellowship. When a candidate applies for admission, he is asked: "Do you believe in a Supreme Being, the Creator and Preserver of the Universe?" With this latitudinarian creed, all the religious principles, forms, and ceremonies of the order coincide. Hence Jews, Turks, idolators, deists, and free religionists of every species, may be admitted to membership on a platform broad enough for all!

But why occupy time in discussing these societies one by one in detail? They all agree, substantially, in their first principles. They all teach the same religious doctrines. They all belong to the same family. Hence the exposure of one is virtually the exposure of all. One feature especially is common to all—the denial of the Lord Jesus Christ, from which follow by legitimate inference and logical development, all the false, unscriptural, anti-Christian doctrines which we have found in Odd-fellowship!

And now the important question arises: What relation should Christians sustain to these societies, which teach a false religion and admit to membership unbelievers? We answer, the Word of God clearly and emphatically forbids religious fellowship with unbelievers. To unite with them as brethren in these secret orders, necessarily involves such fellowship. And hence union with them cannot exist without sin. Even if a particular lodge in a particular locality, has no infidel members, that does not alter the case of Christians in that particular place, because they are in communion with the whole fraternity, and all the unbelievers connected with it.

Fellowship with unbelievers in more temporal or worldly things, is quite different, and is not forbidden. It is right for Christians to mingle freely with all men in the ordinary affairs and transactions of life. To avoid all intercourse with men of the world, we must, as Paul says, "needs go out of the world." The common interests of society, in which we are mutually dependent, necessarily brings us in contact and sympathy with our fellow-men of all classes and conditions, whom we must treat with civility, whose rights we must respect, and whose welfare we must promote. Hence, it is lawful to have dealings with all as neighbors, and as members of the community in business, trade, commerce, civil affairs, and all matters of public interest. The Word of God commands us to "do good to all men as we have opportunity," giving help or relief to every one who stands in need of our kind offices, no matter of what creed or country he may be—whether he is a Jew or Gentile, infidel or atheist. God himself has bound us all together in one great human society or brotherhood, including not merely a select number who are best able to care for themselves and their families, but also the young, the poor, the sick, the infirm, the aged, and the helpless of both sexes, and of all complexions! It is therefore both proper and necessary to have more or less intercourse of a temporal or worldly nature with human beings in general, be their creed or character what it may.

But believers are not allowed to mingle with unbelievers in religious fellowship in common acts of worship. Such fellowship is fraught with evil to both parties. It is liable to pervert believers gradually from the pure truth, and confirm unbelievers in their soul-destroying errors. It identifies the friends of God with his enemies in the guilt of their unbelief and rebellion. It implies toleration of doctrines and principles, which the Bible severely condemns. It conveys the idea that God approves of false religion and false worship, which he hates. Hence, Paul warns Christians against it in the strongest terms. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers. For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness; and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? . . . . Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you." In another passage he says: "Be not partakers of other men's sins." And the Apostle John says: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine (of Christ,) receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed; for he that biddeth him God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds."

This settles the question of religious fellowship with unbelievers, to the satisfaction of all who accept the supreme authority of the Word of God. These passages demand a completc separation in this respect. As Christians, we are here positively forbidden to have any religious communion or agreement with infidels. We are required even to close our doors against false teachers as such. We are not allowed to bid them God-speed—to wish them success, or show them any countenance in their evil works. In short, we are carefully to avoid giving the least help or encouragement to those who hold and teach false doctrines. And this applies with special force to these secret orders which deny the Lord Jesus Christ, reject the Triune God, pervert the Gospel plan of salvation, put conscience above the Bible as a rule of faith, and equalize Christianity with the false religions of the world. We dare not be identified with them in these errors under any circumstances, or for any purposes whatever—not for the sake of "pecuniary benefits, success in business," or temporal advantages of any kind—not even for the sake of aiding and relieving the needy and suffering, who can be helped in other ways and by other means not condemned by Scripture. Right ends never justify wrong means of attaining them. We are not to "do evil that good may come."

Since union with these unchristian societies necessarily involves religious fellowship with unbelievers, how can Christians justify their connection therewith? How can they reconcile it with the plain teachings of the Divine Word? Do they not thus become partakers of other men's sins? By uniting with workers of iniquity, either directly or indirectly, we share their guilt. He who aids a murderer in any way, becomes particeps criminis—a partaker of his crime, and also of his punishment. And the same principle applies here. If you belong to a society whose doctrines you know to be false and unscriptural, you are responsible for any evil fruits and consequences flowing therefrom. If you sin ignorantly, it lessens your guilt. But you are utterly without excuse, as soon as you get proper light on the subject.

If you remain in it, after you know the true character of the society and the sin of belonging to it, then you sin wilfully, deliberately, presumptuously—because you sin with your eyes open. Those who have founded these societies and made them what they are, have to bear the main burden of responsibility. But God also places a responsibility upon you to examine these institutions carefully and candidly, without pride or prejudice, and with the earnest prayer that you might "know the truth," and that the truth would "make you free."

To unite with unbelievers in the false worship of the order, may seem to be a matter of little importance in itself, but it involves a great principle. Thousands have suffered martyrdom, rather than do something which seems trifling compared with that. During those terrible persecutions in early times, Christians had the choice of dying at the stake, or of casting a small piece of incense upon the altar of heathen gods. By simply doing that, they might have avoided a horrible death. And why did they refuse to perform that simple act, when their very life depended upon it? Ah! that simple, little act, was nothing less than an act of worship paid to false gods, and really involved a denial of Christ. It was so regarded. And for this reason they firmly refused to obey the command, knowing full well that the fires were already kindled to burn up their bodies!

It is no light matter to be identified with a society that you know denies the Lord Jesus Christ. Your connection with that society, if continued and persevered in contrary to God's Word, leaves your soul in imminent danger. "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him will I also confess before my Father, which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father, which is in heaven."

Gain in one week, 27

Several persons have suggested that we put the letter addressed to our readers last week into the paper again. A word to the wise is sufficient and we hope that this column will give abundant proof in coming weeks that the Cynosure has a large number of successful agents at work for it.

Some persons think that the money raised for the Publishing House is to be used for the Cynosure This is a mistake. The Cynosure must look entirely to its readers for support. A large subscription list with the presence of the Holy Spirit in its utterances will make the Cynosure a successful paper.

Spring Term begins Feb. 29, '76. Summer Term May 16, '76.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Topics of the Time.

The sovereigns of England have lost their popish title "Defender of the Faith." The "infallible" pope, Leo X., permitted Henry VIII, to use it as an ad captandum title, but its application in that respect has long been lost. Another infallible pope Pius IX. has just given it to the recalcitrant German bishop, Ledochowski.

On Thursday last Chicago laid in his last resting place a citizen whom she with the nation has long held in highest esteem—Gen. J. D. Webster. At the time of his death Gen. Webster held the trying and responsible office of Collector of Internal Revenue, and it is believed that the severe labors of the office connected with the whiskey frauds now coming to trial aggravated his disease and caused his death. He has long been connected with the interests of Chicago, and planned the sewer system of the city which included raising the grade of the streets and business blocks—at the time considered a marvelous feat. He entered the army as civil engineer, but saved the day for Grant at Shiloh by a skillful handling of the artillery; and afterwards he served as chief of staff to Grant and Sherman till the war closed. He was always and everywhere known as of uncorruptible integrity and his sudden death in these trials of official delinquency and public fraud is the more felt as it is also the brighter from the contrast. Prof. J. C. Webster of Wheaton College, who presided at the Chicago Convention of the National Christian Association is the eldest brother of this lamented citizen.

Following close on the death of Gen. Webster came the question of a successor. Politicians had involved the government interests in the series of extensive frauds and harrassing suits at law. No more of their work was wanted by the citizens who are sometimes flattered by stump orators as the real sovereigns in their political affairs. Mr. Derickson, an old and well known resident of Chicago was appointed to the vacant position and the President's selection was received with almost universal approbation, but not altogether; the politicians in Congress claimed the appointment as their prerogative, and Mr. Derickson's name was withdrawn for some political favorite. The Tribune puts the case in a plain light in speaking of the influence of Senator John A. Logan and Representative Farwell, who, as residents of Chicago know Mr. Derickson's reputation and that "while he is Collector there will be no dishonesty perpetrated or permitted, hidden, suppressed or apologized for. Knowing this their objection to his appointment can raise but one presumption, and that is, they don't want a man of that kind in the office." This is plain, but common people are coming to believe it true for the whole political system. It is built up with bribes. In his appointment of a new Secretary of War the President seems to acknowledge the dark fact. Judge Taft has no knowledge of political strategy, nor of the war department, but he has of the first principles of honesty.

This same political chicanery appears in a yet more dangerous light. The government investigations need investigating. The Clymer committee dropped a shell into the war department but placed themselves before the breach it made. So of the Pacific Mail and the Safe Burglary cases. If fraud comes out on the fair-looking skin of high officials, rouge and powder it out of sight. And here comes in the "benevolence" of the lodge for its favorites. Who knows how many of them escape, like Eneas, in its cloudy mantle? Bribery and peculation turn out with every thrust of the spade, yet the men who are punished for these high crimes can almost be counted on the fingers of one hand. Some influence widely prevailing and intricate in its operations works to suppress the facts of crime and get the criminal out of the grip of law. When honest and unsworn men are put in office we may learn what it is.

—The cause of the great number of feeble churches in the United States is much discussed of late years. The Advance thinks that it is partly "sectarian competition, which has organized three or four times as many churches as can be sustained. All denominations (it thinks) have sinned in this matter, and must retreat to a better position."

An Appeal to Christian Reformers.

BY ALPHA BETA.

We assume, as a fundamental principle, that secretism in a proper sense of that term is sin. We do not pause to offer proof of this proposition to the readers of the Christian Cynosure; for they are fully acquainted with its wickedness and moral turpitude. We believe that if secretism is not a sinful practice, then it is impossible to conceive of any act of man which deserves that name, and all distinction between right and wrong, truth and falsehood must be abandoned. Assuming this proposition to be true, we pass to another, with which all are familiar, viz.; influence of a wrong action in corrupting society, is in exact proportion to the rank, dignity, and reputation accorded to the wrong doer.

Ecclesiastic organizations claim in rank, dignity, and reputation to occupy the highest and holiest position of earth, and the world has been trained to accord their right to this claim to them. They claim to be clothed by the Almighty God with the loftiest possible official character. They claim to be commissioned by the Lord Jesus Christ as his witnesses and embassadors, and to represent the character of God and the principles of his divine government. With this official character claimed by them, and acceded to them, they wield, therefore, under all circumstances and inevitably, the whole amount of influence which belongs to that exalted station. They cannot be shorn of this influence even by their own conduct, however they may forfeit their right to their claim, because they stand before the world always claiming to be the official representatives of Christ, although failing to present a true transcript of his spirit and principles. If, therefore, they become sinning organizations, or the patrons of, or defenders of sin, this influence of position is not thereby destroyed, nor even lessened, but their undiminished power is exerted in favor of evil, e. g. the Roman Catholic church.

If, then, secretism be sin, and if the ecclesiastic organizations, in their official character, claiming as they do to be the earthly representatives of Christ, and claiming to occupy a position above all other institutions, and to transcend them all in influence, and they be found, moreover, in fraternal connection with secretism, then they afford thereby to this iniquitous and blasphemous system the most authoritative and influential sanction of which we can conceive. Because if all the millions of earth should, in their individual capacity unite in the approval of secretism, it would only be the opinion of frail and erring men; if all governments should legislate for its support and extension, they could claim no Divine sanction for their enactments; but ecclesiastic organizations stand forth claiming to have been actually and formally commissioned to utter the voice of Christ, to speak for him, and to act in his name, and they claiming to unroll this commission before the world, and in the name of Christ approve of sin, they give to it by this act a character and currency among men, which nothing else can possibly bestow.

If this reasoning be correct, and if secretism is sanctioned by ecclesiastic organizations, baptized into its membership, and sanctified by Christian fellowship and communion, then the most efficient support of the system is not given by political leaders, nor for its inherent advantages, nor in inalienable rights protected by constitutional provisions; but we discover that its only really impregnable defenses are those thrown around it by those ecclesiastic organizations themselves. We do not propose to inquire what organizations are most to blame in admitting and encouraging and sanctioning and thus propagating secretism, for it is a notorious fact that there are few indeed but do; and even some who have a strong "paper testimony" against secretism have admitted, and having admitted still retain secretists in their communion; and others admit them without a renunciation of the order either public or private, but simply on a promise that they will no longer attend the lodge meetings. Nor need we think strange that this is done; the garden of Eden had its devil in it, and we all feel the degrading consequences, and ecclesiastic organizations are no more sacred than Eden was, and his Satanic presence in those organizations are working out their frightful results, for the highest official act of an organization is the admission to its membership and communion, which is a welcome and approval in the name of Christ; and when a secretist is thus received the highest possible sanction is given to his character and practice; and no anti-secrecy paper testimonies nor protestings by these organizations in public, or the press, can materially weaken the far more potent teachings of example—these official recommendations of these organizations. Christians, individually, may protest against and denounce secretism in the severest terms, and what will or can that avail so long as these organizations, claiming to act officially, take it to their bosom in the name of God.

Who will be convinced that secretism, with its impiety and blasphemy, is a grievous offense, or earnestly to be avoided, if organizations, claiming to speak for Christ, declare that it throws no suspicion upon a man's

Christian character; that it does not exclude them from membership, nor the highest and holiest office in the organization, nor forbid a well-grounded hope of the joy and happiness of heaven.

We are, therefore, from necessity, led to the conclusion that ecclesiastic organizations, through their fellowship and communion with secretism, do shield it and afford it a direct and most effective support; and if this were withdrawn, and if secretism were condemned and prohibited in the name of God, it could not survive the rebuke and would be speedily abolished.

We would also invite attention to the fact that ecclesiastic organizations, by their action on this subject, present to the world false and delusive views of holiness, their own nature and mission, and the character of God. Christ is represented in the Scriptures as the model Christian, the type and head of the Christian species, and theoretically and practically, the Bible allows of, nor presents no lower standard than this: that each member of the Christian family should present the distinguishing characteristics of the head and type. Like him, they should, therefore, hold themselves "separate from sinners" as spiritual, having no fellowship with the carnal, as religious not fraternizing with the secular. The essential idea of a Christian then is of one, who, being distinct from the carnal world, should also "come out" and be "separate from sinners" in his practice and his spiritual relations, having no fellowship with iniquity. Consequently the idea of secession from sinners; of a separation between those who serve God and those who would divide his service between God and the devil; of a coming out from them, is inseparable from our conception of a Christian—and one who does not separate himself from iniquity, but who sanctions sin and encourages sinners by maintaining with them connection, fellowship and communion, does not answer to the Bible description of a Christ-man, because in these things he neither exhibits Christ's spirit, nor follows his example.

Christians are not permitted to remain in worldly connections and relations without separation in order that the world might be at least morally reformed; but they are "called out," that the world may thus be reproved by the contrast of position as well as of practice, theory and character, for it is not enough to hold the truth, but it must appear by our practice that it is held in righteousness. "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men who hold the truth in unrighteousness." Rom. i. 18. This coming out from among them; this separate position; this standing apart is in order to reflect back the power of both example and truth.

If then, ecclesiastic organizations gather a promiscuous assembly of men, some of whom are guilty of palpable and acknowledged sin, the secretist with his impious rites and blasphemous ceremonies, and love of false oaths, being among them; if they are all seated at the table of Christ as his peculiar people, the holy body, the sanctified ones, surely such organizations are guilty of false teaching of the most pernicious character in regard to holiness and even to God himself, who they thus claim to represent as having fellowship and communion with unrighteousness: as unrighteous himself.

This view becomes the more impressive and alarming from the important fact that the world obtains its theology, not mainly from the Bible, nor from our religious literature, so much as from the individual and associated practice of those claiming to be Christians, for by their living example they define what they mean by terms employed in their formulas of doctrine. The whole system of Christian doctrine and practice is thus in danger of being corrupted, while the written theories of the ecclesiastic organizations remain unchanged, by causing the old language to become the sign of new ideas and thus retain "the form of godliness but denying the power thereof," and the command to be holy is interpreted to mean the becoming as good as the secretist, as righteous as a God who sanctions this iniquity.

We remarked that no principle is more clearly stated in the word of God than the individual responsibility attaching to organic bodies, or more strictly acted out by God in the administration of his government than that of associate responsibility, by which each member of an organic body is held responsible for the wrong-doing of the organization, association or society to which he voluntarily belongs. Each nation, each distinct community, each religious body or denomination, by its statute and organization, is without exception treated by God as a unit, as a legal corporation, a moral partnership, each member of which is responsible for the doings of the body while his organic connection with it remains.

The sin of the organization is the sin of the individuals who compose it, which is so much the more flagrant than a private offense, as the influence of the imposing public body is greater than that of the individual. From this sin and its consequences there can be no escape except in severing the organic bond, which is secession from the body; by continuing in connection we add the weight of our influence on the side of wrong; we give countenance by our presence to the wrong, and by our influence and countenance we bid the wrong doer "God speed," and become "partaker of his evil deeds." 2 Jno. x. 11. To escape complicity we must avoid them which cause divisions and offences, Rom. xvi. 17. By remaining in connection with them we voluntarily become a member of the body. "What! know ye not that he which is joined to a harlot is one body? (for two, saith he, shall be one flesh)," 1 Cor. vi. 16. We may protest against the wrong; may have been virtuous and pure until we became an integral part of the organization, but as soon as we attach ourselves to the organization our individuality, our virtue and purity are gone, and our example neutralizes the force of our protest. Hence the necessity of secession or withdrawal. In seceding it is not for the purpose of discarding or thrusting into the background those sublime and distinguished doctrines of grace which cluster around and center in the cross of a crucified Saviour, but that we may live consistently with the requirements of the Gospel of Christ, and for the purpose of vindicating those doctrines from the charge of countenancing and sustaining the iniquitous system of secretism by such a faithful and impartial application of them in every direction as shall render them mighty through God.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

"Flunkeyism."

BY JOHN T. KIGGINS.

In an article under the above caption, the editor of the Kentucky Freemason makes some statements and admissions calculated to show the rea spirit of the institution. He says (italics, etc., ours): "We see it stated that, by order of the Grand Master, the Masonic flag floating over the Masonic temple of New York city was lowered at half mast in token of respect to the memory of Vice-President Wilson, lately deceased. . . . Political opponents could afford such an honor; but it is well known that the dead Vice-President was a most powerful enemy of our institution. He belonged to the

and was largely responsible for the Anti-masonic excitement and persecution of the order in its martyr period. For the grievous offense he has never atoned to our brotherhood. . . . We owe him no funeral honors. A decent respect for what we know to have been wantonly assailed . . . would have seemed to suggest that our flag float in its wonted air, and while his catafalque was rolling along the streets."

Now how sublime the thought, that the American Republic fosters and protects, charters and patronizes an institution which exults in the death of its most honored statesmen! And why? Simply because they have refused to fawn upon a system in which they see eternal antagonism toward the principles of free government, and have dared to express their views! John Quincy Adams, Daniel Webster, William Wirt, William H. Seward, Charles Sumner, Henry Wilson!—what brighter list of names can be selected from the galaxy of American statesmen? But while the nation lifts up its voice and weeps over the death of its defenders, Masonry exults, and shouts for joy, for they have been its enemies.

But, he says again, "The simple fact is, Henry Wilson was an opponent to our order; struck at its vitals in the most exposed era of its career; never explained, apologized or amended his course; and therefore there was no propriety as Masons in paying him funeral honors. . . It may be proper our lamb should lie down along side the dead lion of Anti-masonry, but we can't see it in that light."

The point developed is an important one, viz.: The system of free, civil and religious institutions under which we live is one thing, Masonry is another. While the flag of the nation is draped and lowered in mourning for those who have been chosen to fill its most exalted stations, the flag of Masonry, (yes, Masonry has a flag) is thrown to the breeze, as over a joyous event!

MORAL:—A National calamity is a Masonic victory.

A Clergyman's Experience.

A Congregational minister, writing to a friend in Oberlin recently, gives this testimony:

I assure you I am a most thorough Anti-mason, and that I yield to no one in the world in detestation of the system of Freemasonry. I have always been opposed to the system years before I read Dr. Finney's book; and I rejoiced in the publication of his letters in the New York Independent on the subject as the heaviest and most courageous blow which I have ever known to be dealt to it. While I have always been strongly opposed to secret societies on principle, I have grown into decided antipathy to Freemasonry from what I have witnessed of its operations and influence in various communities. Repeatedly I have seen the Masonic body in a community rally unitedly to the protection of a brother under charges of outrageous crimes and bring him off clear against the most conclusive evidence of his guilt. I have seen them unite to utterly destroy the witnesses against him. This is their invariable practice. I cannot understand how any Christian person, above all how any Christian minister, can ever be a Freemason. Yet I know a great many in the State of Maine, and I have seen no less than four of them in a particular instance rally to shield a brother-Mason in most outrageous crime clearly proved. I have no confidence whatever in the fairness, impartiality and honesty of any Freemason on earth when called to take action by word or deed in respect to a brother Mason under charges of crime, however clear the evidence against him. I believe Freemasonry to be one of the most dangerous organizations in the world, and that the Christian church is called to oppose it quite as much as slavery or Romanism.

The Symbolism of the Masonic Shoe.

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

The uncovering of one or more of the feet in the various degrees of Masonry constitutes a part of the ceremony. It is called discalceation. The SHOE symbolizes:

1st. The existence and divine character of the Masonic Trinity in the human personality of the THREE SUPERIOR OFFICERS of the lodge.

2d. The holiness of the "Masonic ground-floor" consecrated to such Trinity.

3d. The immediate presence of such Trinity in all the convocations and labors of the craft.

4th. The contrition and purity of heart with which service and worship should always be rendered to such Trinity, and the sacrifice and respect, love and devotion due to them in their sacred character of a God-head.

5th. The theocratic nature of the Masonic government and the wisdom, liberty, infallibility, omnipotence and omniscience of its head.

6th. The surrender of the right of private judgment and the abdication of self-sovereignty in all matters that pertain to the good of the order.

7th. The supremacy of the Masonic over all worldly power, secular or religious, and the engagement to perform all the duties of Masonry without question of propriety.

8th. The sincerity of intention with which the craft, of their "own free will and accord," and "for life," have declared their allegiance to, and made their alliance with the Masonic institution, without any revocative or possible power of release from engagement.

9th. The pledge of unswerving fidelity on the part of the craft, collectively and individually, to the articles of compact entered into between themselves and their institution, whereby they have formed a joint and indissoluble partnership and perpetual union.

10th. The promise of unconditional obedience to Masonic authority, supreme and subordinate, and of unflinching loyalty and adherence to the constitutions, landmarks, laws, rules, regulations, customs, and usages governing the Masonic institution.

11th. The acknowledgment of the polluting, unholy and profane character of all the institutions and governments of earth, outside of the Masonic, and the contaminating nature of all those worldly duties, responsibilities, ties, relations, obligations, customs, and usages which unite and bind mankind together in civil society.

12th. The total disruption, dissolution, and extinction of all claims upon the fraternity by the outer world, and the perpetual abjuration of their rights by the Masonic membership wheresoever dispersed around the globe.

13th. The eternal renunciation by the Masonic fraternity of the whole outer world, and of all governments, powers, and sovereignties, existing or to exist, outside of their own institution.

14th. The covert treason and masked disloyalty lurking about the Masonic throne, which is to eventuate in the final overthrow and destruction of all the existing governments of earth, and usher in Masonic discipline only to be followed in quick succession by universal anarchy, revolution and bloodshed.

Description of a Battle at Sea.

The scene changes. Far away on the distant pathway of the ocean two ships approach each other, with white canvas broadly spread to receive the flying gales. They are proudly built. All of human art has been lavished in their graceful proportions and in their well compacted sides, while they look in dimensions like floating happy islands of the sea. A numerous crew, with costly appliances of comfort, live in their secure shelter. Surely these two travelers shall meet in joy and friendship; the flag at the mast-head shall give the signal of fellowship; the happy sailors shall cluster in the rigging, to look each other in the face, while the exhilarating voices of both crews shall mingle in accents of gladness uncontrollable. It is not so. Not as brothers, not as friends, not as wayfarers of common ocean, do they come together, but as enemies. The gentle vessels now bristle fiercely with death-dealing instruments. On their spacious decks, aloft on all their masts, flashes the deadly musketry. From their sides spout cataracts of flame, amidst the pealing thunders of a fatal artillery. They who had escaped "the dreadful touch of merchant-marring rocks," who had sped on their long and solitary way unharmed by wind or wave, whom the hurricane had spared, in whose favor storms and seas had intermitted their immitigable war—now at last fall by the hand of each other.

The same spectacle of horror greets us from both ships. On their decks, reddened with blood, the murders of St. Bartholomew and of the Sicilian Vespers, with the fires of Smithfield, seem to break forth anew, and to concentrate their rage. Each has now become a swimming Golgotha. At length these vessels, such pageants of the sea, once so stately, so proudly built but now rudely shivered by cannon balls, with shattered masts and ragged sails, exist only as unmanageable wrecks weltering on the uncertain waves whose temporary lull of peace is now their only safety. In amazement at this strange, unnatural contest, away from country and home, where there is no country or home to defend, we ask again, wherefore this dismal duel? Again the melancholy but truthful answer promptly comes, that this is the established method of determining justice between nations.—Charles Sumner.

Temperance.

Why Was It?

While walking down the street one day,
I heard an organ-grinder play
Before the door of a saloon,
That sweet and grand familiar tune
Called "Home, Sweet Home."

Bright, youthful faces quick surround
To hear the organ's pleasant sound;
Their minds, perchance, made light and gay—
Recalling many a happy day
In home, sweet home.

But scarce had he begun the tune
When, at the door of the saloon,
Appeared the keeper in a flare,
And said, "Move on; we do not care
For home, sweet home."

Now, why this harsh, abrupt command
Emphatic made by waving hand?
Were there no pleasant memories
Awakened byt he melodies
Of "Home, Sweet Home?"

I thought of other homes made sad
And wretched, and deprived of glad
And happy hearts, wherein the curse
Of rum had overthrown by force
Each home, sweet home.

Where happiness and peace once dwelt,
And rum's effects were never felt;
Where love was raised to reign supreme,
But now bronght down to the extreme
Of home, sweet home.

No doubt this grand soul-stirring air
Reminded him of many a pair
On whom once Peace made her impress;
But now was found naught but distress
In home, sweet home.

These thoughts dispelled all my surprise
Occasioned by the keeper's cries;
No longer did I wonder then
That he should suffer grievous pain
From "Home, Sweet Home."

His hellish traffic is designed
To hasten death, destroy the mind,
And lead to everlasting doom
All those for whom Christ said "there's room"
In God's "Sweet Home."

Philodamus.

The regular monthly business meeting of the Chicago W. C. T. U. will be held on Friday, at 10 o'clock, A. M., Mar. 31st, at 148 East Madison St.

The daily prayer-meetings as usual at 3 o'clock P. M., in lower Farwell Hall.

—The temperance reform movemer, is exciting the greatest interest and enthusiasm in Maine. Large meetings are everywhere being held, while the liquor law is being vigorously enforced. At Saco, a druggist, for a single case of liquor-selling, was sentenced to sixty days in the county jail and to pay fine and costs.

Haverhill, N. H., is enjoying a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Some far gone in drunkenness have been brought to trust to Christ for salvation.

Change of Pay Day.

One branch of our work in Chicago is that of making Monday pay day instead of Saturday. This was felt to be important, inasmuch as our city allows open saloons on Sabbath; a full purse is a great addition to the danger of the tempted passing up and down our streets. It has been stated that, of the ten millions annually spent for liquor one-half is spent between Saturday evening and Monday morning.

A form of agreement making Monday (or any other day than Saturday) pay day has been circulated first among printers, bookbinders, lithographers, iron, steel, and brass manufacturers, lumbermen, coal dealers, boot and shoe makers, in wagon shops, planing mills, etc., with most encouraging and satisfactory results. Refusals to conform could almost be counted on one's fingers, while the unequalified approval of so many has given great courage and strength to weary feet climbing stairs and walking miles of pavement among the industries of our city.

The only reason it has not been carried through the city to all branches of business is, the ladies have not had time and strength to complete the work. It is believed that the best business houses of the city do now practice this custom, and it is believed that all men who recognize their responsibility and accountability to God for their influence over those in their employ, will, as they shall see the beneficial results, fall in with this most desirable and excellent reform.—The Woman's Temperance Union.

Tippling in England:—J. B. T. Marsh, late managing editor of the Advance, who has been traveling for several months in Europe, writes as follows of this evil among the better classes of England:

Nothing else in English life has surprised me so much as the prevalence of drinking habits among all classes. I expected to find a good deal of drunkenness in Scotland. But I do not see that England does much better. Beer or wine, if not brandy or whiskey, will be found on the dinner-table of even most Christian families. I should say that the ministers' homes in Great Britain, from which all these are excluded, are as rare as the ministers' homes in the United States to which any of them are admitted! Commercial travelers are as "steady" a class of business men as any in the kingdom—very often partners in the firm for which they solicit orders. But one who stops at the same hotel gets as accustomed to hearing them call for a glass of hot whiskey before going to bed, as to seeing an American "drummer" light his cigar after breakfast.

Waiting for a train in Manchester the other day, I sauntered into the "first-class" railway refreshment room, and found two family parties, fathers, mothers, and boys and girls in their teens, each person sipping a glass of liquor. I chanced to be stopping at an Aberdeen hotel the night of a great banquet in its dining hall, a "Ceylon dinner," so called, at which were gathered leading citizens interested in the agricultural and commercial enterprises of that island. Many of them had to be helped into the cabs by the waiters when they went home.

In most cases, however, this tippling, among the better classes does not seem to lead to confirmed intemperance, or have any obviously bad results, as far as they are concerned. But there is no force whatever in an argument drawn from such a fact, in favor of the "moderate use" of beer or wine in America. Our climate is stimulating, our life feverish, our nerves sensitive. Here the air is heavy, the life easy-going, and as for a nervous Englishman, I never saw one. An ox will not quicken his pace for the stroke that would make a race-horse crazy. If the moderate drinkers of England were set down in our American life, to do as they do now, I believe that one-half of the next generation would be confirmed inebriates.

Political.

This department is opened at the request of numerous friends of the reform, and will be conducted in the interest of the American party. All who hold the principles of that party are invited to contribute briefly their views and queries or facts which will give information about candidates or principles.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker, of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick, of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

Indiana Candidates.

Our candidate (Republican) for Governor, Godlove S. Orth, is a Freemason. So is the candidate for State Auditor, Wm. Hess of Hendricks county. I think nearly, if not quite every candidate on the Republican State ticket is a Freemason. I will learn certainly as soon as I can and let you know. Masonry will never fight us politically under its own name again. But I am satisfied it is making the issue under cover of the other two parties. It fights with masked batteries. And but few men will get into power on any ticket unless they are Masons, till elected by the American Party.

J. K.

The Ballot in Guthrie County, Iowa.

CASEY, Iowa.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Seeing you have opened a Political Department in your paper, I thought it might be of interest to your readers to know the political action taken in this county last fall. We placed a county ticket in the field a short time before the election; but having no one that was able to devote his time in canvassing the county the result was forty-five votes cast for the anti-secret ticket. I am satisfied that if we had had a State ticket in the field, and the county been canvassed we would have made a good showing. We are not discouraged, but expect to try again this fall. I think every State and county where we have organizations should put a full ticket in the field and then if we ascertain that some of the nominees of other parties are sound we can have it announced that we will cast our votes for such parties or individuals. I am satisfied that there is no use working in old political parties as they have everything cut and dried before nominations are made (on the square) as I know from experience. They never bring out their man till all the wire work is done. Then let us come up to the polls in one solid column and cast our votes for Walker, Kirkpatrick and State and county officers. Yours for the war,

G. A. LOOMIS.

Reform News and Notices.

EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY of the National Christian Association will be held in Chicago, June 20 to 23.

IOWA State Convention at Western College, Linn county, April 26th. See notice and routes on 9th page.

CONNECTICUT State Convention will be held in Hotchkiss Hall, Waterbury, April 26th and 27th.

—Bro. Stoddard, the General Agent, was not, it seems, so ill as we had supposed, for he spoke on the last evening of the Ohio Convention. He was in Chicago, onMonday and is laboring as assiduously as his health will permit to meet the first of April with the fund for the Carpenter donation ready. The Lord is giving him good hope in this.

—The Niagara County Association is reported more fully this week, but Bro. Luce has the thanks of our readers and ourselves for the first and earlier account.

—The Seneca Falls meeting with its new auxiliary is also fully reported through the kindness of Bro. Dempsey. The Reveille of that city says, "We are informed that the Anti-masonic lectures at Daniels Hall on Monday and Tuesday last, by Mr. Edmond Ronayne drew large audiences, and were quite interesting. Mr. Ronayne is a fluent speaker and can interest an audience for almost any length of time."

THE OHIO STATE CONVENTION.

Report of Proceedings, Resolutions, Addresses, etc.

THE GENERAL AGENT'S LETTER.

At the House of Elder John Finney, Near MANSFIELD, O., Mar. 11th, 1876.

DEAR K.—The convention at Westerville on the 8th and 9th inst. was fully up to the standard and in some respects an advance on any previous meeting of the State Association which I have attended. Our brethren here know how to make even the business sessions of their conventions interesting to the public and are prepared to take up, dissect and analyze any question that may be sprung upon them. One or two instances in proof of this made our meetings at times very interesting. Westerville, by the generosity of her citizens and the hearty co operation of the President and professors of her noble institution, has won a meed of praise and shown herself worthy the patronage of the friends of Christian education throughout the State and country.

The accommodations for students here seemed to be ample, and that stimulus to head and heart culture supplied by an efficient corps of consecrated instructors is not wanting. Prof. Garst, at whose house I was entertained during the Convention, assures me that no secret fraternity has as yet gained a footing in the institution and that this fountain is not to be poisoned by the virus of the covert infidelity of the lodge. This band of earnest, noble, Christian educators have the warmest sympathies of the Convention, and have, I believe, been greatly helped on in their labors by opening their doors and receiving it into their midst.

There were no dead, disorderly, or contentious members in the Convention, but all worked with a will and in harmony, and when the work was done went straight to their posts as minute men on their watch-towers.

Among the more prominent workers and talkers of the Convention were Drs. H. H. Geerge, Thompson, Pollock, Carson, McClurkin, Wishart, Hanna, Revs. Tobey, Richey, Campbell, Robb, and a number of others, some of whose names I do not recall at this writing. The spirit of the whole meeting was excellent and everything moved forward from the beginning to the close in harmony and with increasing interest. To God be glory; and now let the friends renew their zeal and encourage each other in the Lord for the work. J. P. STODDARD.

MINUTES OF THE CONVENTION.

WESTERVILLE, O., Mar. 8, 1876.

The Anniversary Convention called by the Ohio State Anti-secret Association convened at 2 P. M. in the spacious hall of Otterbein University. Dr. H. H. George, President of Geneva College in the chair. Prayer by Dr. J. G. Carson. In the absence of the State Sec'y, Rev. T. H. Hanna was appointed Secretary pro tem. Committees were then appointed as follows: Enrollment, Rev. W. O. Tobey; Resolutions, Drs. Wishart, Carson and Thompson; Finance, Revs. Campbell and Hamblin and J. R. Little, Esq.

Pres. Thompson, D. D., gave an address of welcome, tendering the hospitalities of the citizens and giving assurance of sympathy in the object which called the Convention together. Dr. George responded and then as President of the Convention delivered the opening address, setting the evils and dangers of secretism before his hearers in a clear light, and then called upon all to work, work, for their overthrow.

On motion, Pres. Thompson, Revs. McClurkin and Weston were appointed a committee on programme for the evening.

On motion all resolutions were to come before the Convention through the Committee on resolutions.

On motion a committee of four was appointed to address a circular letter to the ministers and churches throughout the State on the relation and duty of the church and Christians to secret societies; Committee, Dr. J. G. Carson, Pres H. A. Thompson, Rev. J. P. Stoddard and Pres. George.

On motion a committee of seven was appointed with reference to the subject of preparing and presenting an address to the Legislature on the subject of secret societies. Committee, R. H. Pollock, D. D., Revs. Weston, McClurkin and Robb, Henry Ryle, J. G. Mattoon and J. McFarland, M. D.

Adjourned until 7 o'clock, P. M. with prayer by Rev. Mills.

Convention re-assembled at 7 o'clock P. M., Dr. H. H. George in the chair. Prayer by Rev. McClurkin. Rev. J. G. Carson, D. D., presented a very able and carefully prepared address showing the direct antagonism between Christ's institutions of the family, the state and the church, and the false and shallow shams and pretensions of the lodge; after which Dr. Wishart reported (in part) in behalf of the Committee on resolutions, which were discussed by Drs. Wishart, Pollock, Rev. Stoddard and others. Pending the discussion of Report, Convention until 8:30 A. M. of the 9th. Prayer by Bro. Robertson.

SECOND DAY.

In the absence of the president the Convention was called to order by the secretary pro tem, and opened with prayer by Rev. Buchanan. Rev. Mr. Hanna asked leave to retire and was excused, and Rev. R. R. Atchison was chosen to take his place.

Rev. J. G. Carson, D. D., chairman of committee in reference to an address to ministers and churches, presented a verbal report asking the members of the Committee each to send Rev. J. P. Stoddard a brief for engrossment which he was requested to incorporate in an address.

On motion the Convention went into a committee of the whole for the consideration of this report. After remarks made by Drs. Pollock, Carson, McClurkin, and several others, the committee arose and on the re-assembling of the Convention the report was adopted.

Remarks were made by Mr. Stoddard on the subject of finance. On motion the committee on finance were directed to pass around through the audience and raise a collection in contributions and pledges for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the Convention and carrying on the work in our own State. Cambridge was selected as the place of holding the next State Anniversary and the time fixed for the fourth Wednesday in August, 1876. Bro. Atchison was excused and Rev. Mr. Pollock chosen as secretary in his place. Adjourned with benediction by Dr. Wishart.

Convention re-assembled at 1 o'clock. P. M., and was opened with prayer by Rev. Mr. Smith. Some one present in the Convention asked through Bro. Mills a series of questions, which were read by the chairman and answers given by different members of the Convention.

The Committee on Memorial to the Legislature asked leave to present their report at the next Anniversary. Request granted.

Dr. Wishart then completed his report on Resolutions, which after an animated discussion were unanimously adopted as follows:

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, 1st. That all secret associations which require their members to bind themselves by a solemn oath or pledge to keep certain secrets that are unknown at the time the pledge is given, are in conflict with true Christian morality and good government, and we regard the continued existence and multiplication of such associations in our country, with their nightly meetings behind barred doors and watchful sentinels in order to hide their counsels and doings from the light, with their members banded together for mutual succor by oaths or pledges, capable of mutual recognition everywhere by secret signs and passwords, and of simultaneous co-operation at any time for any secret purpose, as a conspiracy not only against the religion of Him who said nothing in secret, but against those equal rights and republican institutions which are founded on this religion.

2nd. That we make special opposition to speculative Masonry, not only because it is a secret society and the fruitful source, the principal generator of the fatal virus of secretism in our country but also because it especially contains a system of religion, that is pagan in its origin, deistic in its character and tendency, and in direct antagonism to the religion of Jesus Christ. It excludes his name from its forms of prayer, its quotations of Scripture, and all its rituals of worship; places his word upon a level with the Koran, the Shasters, or any other pretended revelation. It welcomes his enemies the Jew, the Mohammedan, the pagan, and the profane infidel, on the same terms with the Christian to its altars of worship and all its boasted privileges. It excludes from its membership all old men in their dotage, young men in their nonage, imbeciles, and cripples, who according to the teaching of Christ are most eminently the objects of true charity. It requires its members to make Masons rather than Christians the objects of their favoritism or special benevolence. Thus it substitutes the Masonic fraternity for "the household of faith," to which according to the command of the Apostle, we are especially to do good, and yet it proposes by this infidel system, (in which it is claimed that all men agree) to make men virtuous and pure in the present world and lead them to a blessed immortality in the world to come. Hence as Christian men and ministers we feel bound in faithfulness to our divine Master, whose prerogatives and honor as the only Saviour, are set at naught, and in love to the souls of our fellow-men who are in danger of being seduced into fatal and ruinous error by this cunning craftiness which lies in wait to deceive, to strive by all lawful means for the complete overthrow of this anti-Christian system.

3rd. That as no good cause needs the aid of secrecy in order to its promotion, so the attempt to promote the temperance reform by secretism is a cunning device of Masons and Oddfellows in order to ensnare the friends of this reform into a practical approval of organized secrecy. Hence we regard all such methods of reform as only tending to bring the whole movement into suspicion, to divide and weaken its true friends and give encouragment and strength to its enemies.

4th. That we deprecate the existence and prevalence of organized secrecy in our colleges and institutions of learning as an immorality of a demoralizing and degrading character, corrupting and poisoning the very fountains of our social, civil and religious life, and we maintain that the people should withhold their patronage from all institutions whose officials refuse to suppress this as well as other immoralities.

5th. That we earnestly entreat those ministers of the Gospel who may have any connection with these secret orders to withdraw from them and have no more fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, and that we affectionately urge ministers of every name or denomination to instruct and warn their people in regard to this great evil, an evil that is not only encouraging and hardening thousands outside of the church in their carnal unbelief and unhallowed opposition to the cause of Christ, but is cherishing a spirit of coldness, neglect, hypocrisy and division even in the church itself.

6th. That those churches which knowingly receive and retain the members of the lodge in their fellowship, are partakers of their sin and render themselves to a great extent responsible for the prevalence of the evil under consideration and that no church can render herself clear in this matter or perform her whole duty as a faithful witness for Christ unless she excludes from her communion all those who by milder means cannot be induced to forsake the lodge.

Finance committee reported $27 in the treasury. Report accepted and committee excused. A bill for printing, etc., $2.25 was presented in behalf of the secretary which was ordered paid.

Rev. W. O. Tobey, was instructed to express the sympathy of the Convention to the secretary and State Agent, Bro. Dillon, in his affliction. The meeting took a recess until 6:30 P. M.

Convention re-assembled at 6:30 and after prayer by Dr. Pollock, Rev. J. P. Stoddard addressed the Convention giving a brief synopsis of the degrees of Blue lodge Masonry and a few of the grange mysteries. The following resolutions were then offered and unanimously adopted:

7th. That a political party uncontrolled by secret orders and pledged to the preservation of our Christian morality and our Christian institutions, has become a necessity and the times require the Christian people of this country to unite in the support of such a party.

8th. That the warmest thanks of this Convention are due and are hereby tendered to the citizens of Westerville who have so hospitably entertained us during our present meeting.

After which the Convention adjourned to meet at Cambridge on the 4th Wednesday in Aug. 1876.

R. H. POLLOCK, D. D., Sec'y.

Proceedings of the Niagara Co. N. Y. Association Opposed to Secret Societies, held in the Arcade Hall at the City of Lockport, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1876.

In accordance with previous notice the above Association convened at said place on Wednesday evening. The meeting was called to order by the President, B. F. Laughlin, after which prayer was offered by Rev. C. C. Egleston.g

The President then introduced to the audience Mr. Ronayne of Chicago, a seceding Royal Arch Mason, the speaker for the evening. After explaining to the audience the nature of Masonry, its deleterious effects on community by staying the wheels of justice and causing crime to go unpunished, he then proceeded to show how a Mason is made, by initiating him in public. A lodge of Masons was then formed and gentleman under the assumed name of Rev. Mr. Nichols was the candidate for admission into the mysterious and ancient order of Masonry. The gentleman was led forth with nothing on his person but shirt and drawers, "hoodwinked" and "cable-towed," much to the amusement and disgust of all present. This was the "First or Entered Apprentice degree." The performance was somewhat lengthy and the audience were very patient with the exception of one individual who frequently disturbed the meeting by talking and making fun, until finally an officer stepped up and collared him and walked him to the police station. Next morning he was fined ten dollars for his conduct. Meeting adjourned to meet next day at 1 P. M.

SECOND DAY.

Convened at said place at 1 P. M., Thursday the 10th inst. Meeting called to order by the President. Prayer by Wm. Fell, after which the following committees were elected: on enrollment, S. Dunkleberg, P. D. Miller; on officers: P. D. Miller, J. Alberty, S. Dunkleberg, J. B. Buck, Chas. Farnsworth; on resolutions, A. C. Allen, J. Alberty, N. R. Luce.

While committees were out brief addresses were delivered by Mr. Ronayne and Rev. N. R. Luce.

Committee on officers reported. Report accepted and the following officers were elected: President, B. F. Laughlin; for Vice-president, J. W. Alberty; for town Vice-presidents: City of Lockport, J. W. Carl; Pendleton, S. Dunkleberg; Porter, Wm. H. Doyle; Lewiston, O. P. Scovile; New Fane, P. D. Augevine; Cambria, Aaron Eastman; Royalton, S. Warmouth; Hartland, F. Mason; Sommerset, Jas. Hoffman; Wilson, C. Swicks. For Secretary, U. R. Hecox. Executive Committees, P. D. Miller, J. W. Alberty, A. Warren. While committee on resolutions were out the chair announced a general Anti-masonic love feast at which there was a general interchange of sentiments and views with regard to secret societies. Remarks were made by Thos. Allen, Rev. Wm. Jackson, S. Dunkleberg, T. Hardy, Wm. Fell, H. Parker, Mr. Farnsworth, E. Ronayne, Mr. Petit and Mr. Buck.

Committee on resolutions reported and the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, Freemasonry and other oath-bound secret organizations, both in their teaching and practices are diametrically opposed to the religion of Jesus Christ, subversive of true republican principles and opposed to the best interests of social life both in the family and among communities, therefore

Resolved, That we will earnestly and persistently continue to labor for the utter extinction of this sum of deception and crime, both from American society and the world.

Resolved, That we love from the depth of our souls the misled victims of Masonic deception and sin, yet in view of the account we must give at the judgment seat of Christ, we believe it to be our duty to deal very plainly in the matter, but always in the spirit of the Master.

Resolved, That we believe that Freemasonry has in its rituals and usages rejected the Lord Jesus Christ, yet we hope that those who renounce their connection with the institution have not so far sinned against the Holy Ghost as to preclude forgiveness.

Resolved, That according to the plain and appointed teachings of God's Word we cannot fellowship as a Christian any professed minister of the Gospel who adheres to, or who, knowing the evil, apologizes for the abominations of Freemasonry.

Resolved, That we will use all laudable means to dissuadue the people from the support or Christian fellowship of such professed Gospel ministers.

Resolved, That we believe that the taking of all extra-judicial oaths such as Masons give or exact to be taking the name of the Lord Jehovah in vain and that those who take them he will not hold guiltless.

Resolved, That fidelity to the Lord Jesus Christ enjoins upon all Christian churches and Gospel ministers the duty to take position of open and positive antagonism to these secret and anti-Christian orders.

Resolved, That in the light of the fact that Masonry holds her laws to be paramount to all other laws, and that in the light of the further fact that they are made, not in behalf of the right, but in behalf of Masonry, right or wrong, it is clearly proper in every suit between one who is and one who is not a Mason to call in question the impartiality and credibility of Masonic witnesses and also to insist on the exclusion of Masons from the jury box.

Resolved, That in the light of the fact that Masonry murdered Morgan, and in the light of the further fact that it succeeded in baffling all attempts to punish the crime, we are forbidden by our respect both for divine and human laws to clothe with civil office any of the adherents or upholders of Masonry.

Resolved, That in the Christian Cynosure we recognize as the organ of the National Christian Association, a powerful and effective medium of communication throughout the country between those who are engaged in the Anti masonic work, and we here and now pledge ourselves to support and further its circulation to the very best of our ability.

Resolved, That we consider the establishment of a National Printing House an absolute necessity for the production of Anti masonic literature, and are glad that through the benevolence of Mr. Carpenter of Chicago such a building may now be secured if prompt action be taken by the friends of Anti masonry, and we hereby commend the enterprise to the liberality of the Niagara Co. Association.

Resolved, That we hold a semi-annual convention, time and place to be left with the Executive Committee together with the President and Secretary.

Adjourned to meet in the evening.

EVENING SESSION.

Meeting called to order by President. Prayer by Rev. N. R. Luce, also singing, "Pull for the Shore." The hall was densely crowded and hundreds could not gain admittance. Mr. Ronayne proceeded to further expose this hydra-headed monster, and with perfect confidence and boldness declared that it was trampling under foot the rights, feelings, and even the hopes of our race. He showed plainly that it was hatched in hell and proceeded from the father of lies, the Prince of darkness. This twin sister of the "Abomination of desolation" was further exposed in the initiation of so-called Rev. Mr. Stone to the third degree. After this so-called divine was stripped and exposed to the gaze of the people—"There," exclaimed Mr. Ronayne, "look at your minister that preaches to you on the Sabbath day. See him, after he is degraded and made the laughing stock of Jews, infidels, papists, heathen, and the blackest villains that walk the streets." He said that ministers were not respected in the lodge, they were thought nothing of, and were only the miserable tools of Masons to uphold and sustain this horrible system of corruption. He clearly and openly exposed Morgan's case, and told them that it was in lodge No. 78, Lockport, Niagara Co., that this poor man Morgan was condemned to death. He then appealed, in the strongest terms to all present to forever regard Masonry as the fiercest and one of the most dangerous enemies to civil and religious institutions.

Meeting closed by singing doxology and pronouncing benediction by Rev. Wm. B. Pattridge.

he Seneca Falls Meeting—Seneca County Convention.

Pursuant to the call for such convention, in connection with the lectures of Mr. Edmond Ronayne of Chicago, the convention met on Tuesday, Feb. 29th, in Daniels Hall, Seneca Falls, N. Y., at 2 P. M.

The convention having been called to order for its temporary organization, Rev. Dr. McClaren of Geneva, was, on motion, appointed temporary president, and Mr. H. Baldridge of Varick, temporary secretary. After prayer by the president, the objects of the convention were briefly stated.

On motion, it was then resolved that we now proceed to a permanent organization of "The Seneca County Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies," auxiliary to the New York State, and National Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies.

The following committees were then appointed; on permanent organization, on business, on enrollment, and on finance.

Mr. Ronayne then delivered a very telling address on "Secret Societies," their tendencies and effects; while the committee on permanent organization retired and prepared its report. The report of the committee on permanent officers, etc., was as follows:

President, Rev. C. R. Tripp, Seneca Falls; Vice-Presidents—one for each town in the county. Seneca Falls. Otis Dye; Varick, Israel Adair; Romulus, P. Wyckoff; Fayette, Peter Coons; Tyre, Jacob Best; Junius, Aaron R. Larzelere; Waterloo, F. Rema; Ovid, Lodi and Covert not supplied. Corresponding and recording secretary, H. Baldridge, Varick; treasurer, David King, Seneca Falls; county lecturer, Rev. A. F. Dempsey, Seneca Falls; executive committee, A. Baldridge, Mrs. H. Baldridge, Abram Coons, Geo. Lynd, Wm. Bainbridge, Varick; J. W. Addison, Mrs. E. Crawford, J. W. Beers, Mrs. J. A. Rumsey, A. W. Brim, Seneca Falls.

The committee recommended further that annual meetings of the association be held about the first of June, in each year, subject to the arrangements of the executive committee, and that semi-annual or quarterly meetings be held when deemed advisable from time to time. The committee's report was unanimously adopted by the convention.

The committee on enrollment reported thirty names. It was resolved that all the officers be requested to act on enrollment of names of all persons who will record themselves in favor of the movement, and that such names be forwarded to the secretary.

On report of the business committee the two following papers were presented, read, and by separate action, unanimously adopted by the association.

The Christian Association opposed to secret societies, of Varick and Romulus, to the convention at Seneca Falls, greeting:

At your request we have chosen the following delegates: H. Baldridge, Wm. Bainbridge, Adam Coons, F. L. Metcalf, and George A. Lynd, to meet with you, and to be the bearers of these our good wishes, and to tender you all the assistance in our power to form and sustain a county association.

We send the following report to the convention: Last fall, Rev. J. L. Barlow lectured four times in our vicinity. Our association was formed in November, with nine members. Since that time Mr. Ronayne has lectured for us four times. Fourteen subscribers have been secured for the Christian Cynosure, and we now number fifteen members. Believing that "God will bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil," it has been our object to reveal the secret doings of the "lodge," and to compare them with the religion of Christ. We are greatly indebted to J. L. Barlow and Mr. E. Ronoyne, for their assistance.

We feel encouraged, and hope right and righteousness will yet prevail; and that our young men may be saved from the demoralizing effects of the "lodge," and become useful members of the church and state.

If the use of the church can be secured, we would invite the convention to meet with us at Romulusville, at its next session. We ask your prayers.

H. Baldridge, President.

Resolutions adopted by the Christian Association opposed to secret societies, of Varick and Romulus, Feb. 28th, 1876, and forwarded by our delegates to the county convention to meet at Seneca Falls, Feb. 29th, for its concurrence and co-operation:

1st. Resolved, that we oppose secrecy as a system, and not its individual membership.

2d. Resolved, that we oppose secret societies because they are contrary to the openness and truth taught in the Bible.

3d. Resolved, That we oppose Freemasonry in particular, as it claims the right to administer oaths, and to inflict penalties on its members without trial by jury, as guaranteed by our laws.

4th. Resolved, That every person who has fore-sworn himself, and is still an adhering Mason, is unfitted for any office, or to be a witness or juryman in our courts.

5th. Resolved, That the Masonic assumption of titles of nobility is forbidden by our government, and is contrary to republican principles.

6th. Resolved, That the arming and drilling of secret organizations, and Masonry in particular, largely in excess of the standing army of the United States, is dangerous to our liberties, and should be suppressed by law.

7th. Resolved, That secret societies are the principal cause of the spread of infidelity in our schools, colleges, churches and the world.

8th. Resolved, That a so-called Christian minister, who, during the week submits to heathen rites, in a half-naked condition in a lodge or temple, where the name of Christ is forbidden by its laws to be mentioned, is not a fit person to instruct the people in Christianity.

9th. Resolved, That it is wrong for any member of the church of Christ to personate a heathen goddess, or to have anything to do with heathen rites. Such fellowship cannot accord with godliness.

The last paper was adopted by the convention, item by item, and then unanimously as a whole.

It was resolved that the next meeting of the Association for convention be held at Romulusville, about the first of June next, subject to the arrangements of the executive committee. Published by order of the convention.

H. Baldridge, Secretary.

Correspondence.

Holding Fast to the Faith.

Jamaica, Vt., March, 6, 1876.

Dear Cynosure:—Send me some of the best tracts to distribute among church members, who have friends that are Masons, and perhaps husbands.

The Baptist church in Jamaica in 1829 in the excitement after the murder of Capt. William Morgan for disclosing the secrets of Masonry, not then having any Masons in the church, passed a resolution that they would not fellowship Masonry in the church, to wit:

"Resolved, that henceforth we receive no member to this church who is a Freemason, or has any fellowship for the principles or practice of Freemasonry."

In 1860 three of our members united with the Masons, and after labor and no effect they were excluded. Now the effort of the fraternity to break down the church's action is persistent, and some members that never investigate are ready to say, I know no harm in Masonry; and, Such a man is a good man if he is a Mason. I do not believe the church do right in excluding him from their fellowship.

Now if you can send me some tracts for gratuitous distribution I will make the best use I can of them.

Female Prayer-meetings—A Good Letter from an Earnest Woman.

Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 25,' 76.

Dear Brother:—I trust there is no need of apology for writing you the convictions of my mind with regard to duty in connection with the Anti-masonic cause, though a novice in the work and a timid woman-laborer at that. The importance of instituting prayer-meetings has impressed me of late, the subjects of petition being secret rings and clans. My husband favors it, and we have commenced effort here for a weekly female prayer-meeting, and are contemplating a monthly concert for prayer for both brethren and sisters. Would it not be well to organize such meetings throughout the country? Mr. Post was reading this morning of the great anticipated Centennial Masonic Congress to be held at Philadelphia in the Cynosure. The thought occurred to me—if such meetings were instituted at Philadelphia before this gathering, they might be an efficient help to the workers in the field. The precious Word says, "Faith without works is dead." Is it not equally true, works without the prayer of faith is dead?

The prayer of faith has been continuously offered by the faithful laborers in the field, and others, which undoubtedly is one reason of the great success attending the efforts. A western lady wrote me a few sisters at different points meet at the "throne of grace" to pray for this object; this suggested the thoughts as given above. Your sister in the Lord,

P. A. Post.

OUR MAIL.

C. B. Remington, Fenton, Mich., sends five new names, and writes:

"Since I saw you I have been making as vigorous a push as possible for subscribers for the Cynosure."

We hope all of our lecturers and agents will remember this part of the work.

Jno. M. Hodge, Ripon, Wis., writes;

"We have a Ladies' Temperance Reading Room in this place, that keeps open from 7 A. M. to 10 P. M. every day but Sunday. I have left my copy of the paper there to be read by the numerous patrons and tried to get a subscription to place it on their table, but so far without success. I would suggest that it might be a good way to use some of the tract fund to send it to their rooms. The address is Ladies' Temperance Home, Ripon, Fondulac Co., Wis."

We cannot use the tract fund for this purpose, but would be glad to have some one order the paper sent to this reading room.

A. N. Boardman, Plainfield, Ia., writes:

"When I first saw the Cynosure (some seven years ago) I saw at once it was a paper that I wished to take, and I have taken it ever since. I have likewise made some effort to have others subscribe for it. I have distributed a few tracts and bought a few books that speak very plain and yet in a good spirit against the works of darkness. I lend them to those who will read and return; in this way trying to do something for the truth. I do not know but people think I stand more than straight up and down. This being so I am not aware of it. I do not think any good cause is profited by carrying it too far, yet I am far from thinking Freemasonry, the worst of sins ever yet known in this world, is going to die without any bruises. Its twin brother, American slavery, received a good many before it expired."

Geo. McElheny, Darlington, Pa., writes:

"The financial condition of the country doubtless must be severely felt in the departments of the press in common with other branches of business; but the serious aspect is in the fact that the publications in the interest of reform, having had in better times but slender support, so slender as to be unable to bear much falling off, may experience the greatest struggle. Now is the time for those true friends of the cause so ably advocated by the Cynosure, to whom the Master has given abundantly, to help by donation and all other proper methods to continue the righteous warfare against the withering curse of oath-bound secretism."

Chester Williams, Waterport, N. Y. writes:

"I have been opposed to secret societies in all forms ever since the Morgan murder, and shall be while I live, believing Freemasonry is in its own nature, vicious, immoral and unlawful, that no mental reservation can excuse it, no explanation can change its nature, no plea of nullity can purify the attainder of its bloody purport. You may count me as a life subscriber of the Cynosure. I read and then give my copies away where I think they will do good, and get as many to take the paper as I can."

A. Oldfield, Bay City, Mich., writes:

"I wish to say that on account of poor health of myself and family this has been a dreary winter for me. I have not been able to go out much, or do anything for Christ and the great work of reform which I love. But as the Cynosure seems to be so ably conducted and filled with articles of the most thrilling interest to me, and written by abler pens than my own, I feel somewhat content to wait its weekly visits as a feast of fat things."

When it is Christ's will we please him as well by patient waiting as by active service. Your questions in regard to Jesuitism we will try to get some one to answer soon.

P. N. Clapsaddle, Ilion, N. Y., writes:

"This is the stronghold of darkness. Masonry is powerful here. There are two lodges, a Blue lodge, and one chapter of Royal Arch. I think there are over three hundred Masons in this place. There are also an Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias and Good Templars lodges, so you can form some idea what holds sway here. People are intimidated. They dare not subscribe for your paper."

Mrs. S. McConoughey, Atkinson, Ill., writes:

"I received your speech on Grand Lodge Masonry, with which I was delighted. I think it the best Anti-masonic article I ever read. I hope the Lord in whom I trust will preserve me from sin and help me to do something to build up his kingdom in the world. I intended to have been at the Peoria meeting last fall, but my pocket-book mysteriously disappeared, and a flood of cares was crowded upon me at the time."

Geo. Johnston, Raymond, Ia., writes:

"Enclosed find $12 for Cynosure subscriptions, obtained by considerable effort. I am an old man, seventy-four years old. I have labored in the cause of reform from the beginning of the Anti-masonic and anti-slavery struggle, and am persuaded if we only had Masonry to fight we would succeed sooner, but when we are headed off by the legion of secret societies considered harmless, especially Good Templars and grangers, our task is a herculean one in its nature and except the Lord conduct the plan our best concerted schemes are vain. We need to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves: doing everything in the fear of God and under the guidance of his Spirit. Of all the papers I read the Cynosure is the most needed, and I prize it the most."

G. W. Beason, Alma, Mich., writes:

"The good seed is taking deep root here."

A friend from Poolsville, Ind., sends his renewal, incloses one dollar for the Carpenter fund, and writes:

"It is very small but it is perhaps all I am able to spare now. May God open the way that that grand donation may be secured to the N. C. A. soon. Remember you have my name on your subscription list to remain as long as life or funds last. God bless our cause."

A. Pontius, Sycamore, O., writes:

"I am a third degree Mason and I know the evils of the lodge. I am in the midst of Masonry and can see the evil it is doing in the church. I am not able to do what I would like to. I want to live to see the monster killed. May God bless the good cause."

Let us hear more such testimonies from Masons.

Lesson for April 2.—The Ascending Lord.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts i. 1-12. Commit 6-11; Primary Verse, 11.

1 The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach,

2 Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen:

3 To whom also he showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God:

4 And being assembled together with them, commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me.

5 For John truly baptized with water: but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence.

6 When they therefore were come together, they asked of him saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?

7 And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times and the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power.

8 But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

9 And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight.

10 And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel:

11 Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.

12 Then returned they unto Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a Sabbath day's journey.

Farm and Garden.

Planning the Operations of the Farm.

Every enterprising farmer who is master of his employment, and who aims to make farming pay a satisfactory remuneration, will lay his plans judiciously during the winter season, and will understand precisely what he is able to accomplish. If contingencies are depending, plans should be well laid for each contingency. Taking the number of days from the opening of spring until planting time, and allowing one-third at least for raining days, he should know by the amount required for each day's plowing how he will come out in his undertakings. If he finds he has marked out too much he ought to reduce at once the proposed extent of his operations. If he does not, he will be sure, in the first place, to do his work in a hurried manner, and secondly, to plant too late—the two great leading causes of bad farming. These will be followed by weedy crops, because his operations will be behindhand all summer, and his labor, for which he pays $2 a day, will really cost him $4 or $5, because it will be continually applied to a disadvantage—to the wrong end of the lever. It is exceedingly important, therefore, to examine and digest plans thoroughly during the present winter. In the meantime, everything practicable should be done that may interfere with the regular order of labor after spring opens. Fences should be repaired in open weather to prevent that worst of all interruption, intruding animals. A half year's fuel should be procured and prepared for use. All the manure that is accessible should be drawn out and spread in the best manner where it is intended to be used; it will be of more value to the coming crop for this early application, and the ground will not be cut up and poached by the horses and wagon wheels used for drawing out the manure on the soft soil of spring; and lastly, and by no means least, procure the very best implements, and have them completely ready when the campaign opens. A hoe that will enable the laborer to accomplish 50 per cent more in work will not be long in paying for itself at present high wages. The plow that inverts the soil in the best manner and runs with the least force of draught will add many dollars worth of time to the man and team who use it throughout the season. Every item of labor that can be performed before the commencement of the growing season should be attended to. Suppose the weather is not quite so pleasant as it will be next spring. Every job that can be completed now will enable the teams and laborers to proceed with field operations without delay when seed time has arrived. Let the order for the coming season be: first, well digested plans; second, concentrated labor, or everything done in the best manner; third, the best tools in readiness; fourth, the performance of everything in winter that may interfere with spring and summer work; fifth, personal supervision of every department.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house.

MARCH 23d——APRIL 1st.

Time flies. There is left us one week and a day to make up the first $10,000 for the Publishing House. On Monday morning after receiving the first mail and the General Agent's report the Treasurer's books showed $9,209 raised in cash and notes, leaving $791 more to come in. Again we call attention to Mr. Carpenter's proposition:

WHEREAS, I, the undersigned, Philo Carpenter of Chicago, Illinois, desire to aid the "National Christian Association," a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, to oppose and counteract the influence of secret societies, by furnishing suitable head-quarters and accommodations for the transactions of its business, and I desire also to furnish an inducement to others to aid said Association.

Now this witnesseth, that for the purpose above mentioned, and in consideration of one dollar to me in hand paid by the said corporation, I do hereby covenant and agree with it, that if there shall, within one year from the first day of April [1875] be donated unto it the sum of ten thousand (10,000) dollars in money, or in good negotiable, interest bearing notes, I will, as soon as such donation shall be made, put said Corporation in full possession of the real estate and property hereinafter described, said Corporation to retain possession and receive the rents, issues, and profits thereof up to the first day of April, A. D. 1878. *

Mr. Carpenter further agrees, if the additional sum of $20,000 be raised by Apr. 1st, 1878, for the use of the Association, to give a clear title of the property.

Were there room we should be glad to print the many encouraging words from donors. There is an earnest determination everywhere expressed that Mr. Carpenter's munificent donation must be secured. We believe that April 1st will find the sum designated above made up.

A Good Way to Aid the Carpenter Fund.

William Slosson of Binghampton, N. Y., writes:

"I have been thinking that I should do something toward the Carpenter Fund during this Centennial year, as I shall hope to celebrate my 76th birthday in July next. I think I could sell 100 copies of E. Ronayne's book, half a dozen copies of Odd-fellowship Exposed, and as many more of the Grange Expose, during the year. . . . I will also try and get as many subscribers to the Cynosure as possible. The proceeds over and above the cost of books and express charges I will donate to the Carpenter Fund."

He sends $5.00 for books, and we send them all at the 100 rate, and send the following:

14 Ronayne's Hand Book	25c.	$3.50
10 Odd-fellowship Illustrated	10c.	$1,00
5 Grange Exposition	10c.	50
Total		$5.00

These books will retail for $10.75, and he can then send $10.00 and the next time $20.00, and the fourth time $40.00 or more, and during the year we believe Mr. Slosson will be able to send from twenty-five to fifty dollars to the Carpenter Fund. We commend this plan to any of our friends who have the leisure to sell books and desire to contribute to this fund. They shall have our books at the 100 rate, no matter how small the quantity, if the cash accompanies the order, and it is stated that the proceeds of sale go to the Carpenter Fund. How do you like the plan? EZRA A. COOK & Co.

A number of letters to Mr. E. Ronayne sent to this office during the past fortnight have been lost. Mr. R. asks the writers to renew these letters. He will reply early next week.

ERRATUM.—The Children's Corner begins this week with "The Insect that Lives three Years and a Day." The department heading was omitted by the compositor. In the correspondence Bro. Colton's name is accidentally placed after the following letter.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 23, 1876.

SECTS AND SECTARIANISM.

A letter from our good friend and brother, Daniel Countryman, was put in my hands for answer some weeks since. I owe him an apology for the the delay, which has been unintentional, but compelled by work and weariness.

The Puritans and Independents who first came to this country refused to be called by any other name than simply "churches of Christ." That is to say, they took the very ground held by our brother Countryman; but men called them "Congregationalists," which name is now becoming so odious by the Beecher business that Dr. Storrs of Brooklyn is leaving it.

The Senior editor of the Cynosure, has named three prominent churches of Illinois. All these churches are called "Churches of Christ." Neither of them is called "Congregational;" and at our State meeting in Peoria, I requested the clerk to omit the word "Congregationalist" after my name. I wish, so far as my humble example goes, to restore the practice of omitting all sectarian designations given to men or churches, as was practiced by the American Christians during the first half century. Such is the church to which my family and myself belong. I have no hesitation in giving my reasons for my practice on all proper occasions. I am willing to do everything to kill sectarianism but to form a new sect out of other sects, and call it no sect!—for it would be a lie when I called it so. But the National Christian Association is strictly non-sectarian, and, if actions speak louder than words, then we do oppose sectarianism.

And further, I wish and long for a realization of the sainted brother Crooks' plan, to wit: uniting all churches which loathe and abhor man-made ceremonies and substitutes for the religion of Jesus Christ into one body, called "The United Churches of Christ." I do not believe an adhering, lodge-going Freemason is fit for Christ's pulpit or communion-table. I loathe and long to be rid of them, as I do of Jesuits, Buddhists, and other gentiles, or devil-worshipers. As I did with adhering slaveholders, so will I do with these; exclude them as fast as I can reach them, as men who have "another gospel which is not another." I believe with brother Countryman, that whoever practices for religion what Christ has not appointed nor the Bible required, adds to the word of God as a rule of life. Such a forbidden addition I believe to be a committee of three to choose a committee of five from a committee of twenty to try H. W. Beecher for adultery.

NOTES.

—Our thanks are due Bro. Kiggins of Indiana and G. A. Loomis of Iowa, for considerable additions to the list of seceding Masons. Other names have come in later and will appear next week.

—Past Master Ronayne's letter on the 12th page will be read with interest. He answers in detail a number of questions which have arisen in the prosecution of the reform. After it was partly in type, it was found too long for the space allotted and the last part is reluctantly laid over for a week. Mr. Ronayne has been speaking in West Unity, Ohio, this week and expects to return home on Saturday, when he will give immediate attention to his correspondents. His long and continued labors are his apology for not replying sooner.

—In spite of protestations of equality,—squares, levels etc.—it is plain there is an aristocracy of Freemasonry, and the Kentuckey Freemason is its organ. Its outbursts (see elsewhere) over the revered statesman, Henry Wilson, would be ridiculous if it were not treasonable; and it makes a thrust at King Kalakaua with his thirty-two degrees as Freemasonry perverted, claiming that he cannot work himself into a lodge. It protests against the effort to give rank and wealth those privileges in the order which should belong to merit and intelligence—meaning of course "merit and intelligence" in Masonic management, grips and signs.

—The Chicago whiskey trials are developing the lodge tactics. Rehm and Hesing, who are implicated as politicians and have made a bad record, at first bravely claimed to be innocent. At last both have affected a compromise with U. S. Attorney Bangs and have plead "guilty" to the part of indictments, and if reports are to be credited they will be let off easy. The trials, which began last week, will show how much virtue "the grip" has in "fixing" their cases. Mr. Bangs may find that entering Lacon Lodge was beginning to walk in the way of temptation. Several of the indicted parties have fled to Canada, and of all the government officials and distillers under charge all plead guilty but a few of the former.

—Another Grand Master has seceded. It is reported that Maresca, G. M. of the Consistorial Section of the Masons of Naples, Italy, gave up the institution during his last illness and was received into the Catholic church.

—Prof. Tobey of the Telescope has a full, ringing report of the Convention at Weeterville. The meeting will have a powerful influence in the State. Two College Presidents and one Theological Professor among its speakers and active members show that the reform in Ohio strikes high and low and brings all grades of literary excellence to the same level in prayerful conscientious effort for the kingdom of our Redeemer.

—The Methodist of New York criticises the secret principles of the non-Catholic "Order of the American Union" thus: "They propose to advance a good cause by secret methods. We tell them plainly that only bad causes can gain by that system, and we add that we consider them the worst enemies of the principles they avow and the best allies of the Jesuits. We have suggested reasons in former issues of this paper. We add the following:—

I. The general public can have no just confidence that the principles avowed are the true ones. The principles of a body of men must be gathered not merely from its printed confessions of faith, but also from inspection of its acts and life, and comparison of the two.

II. Among the ways of doing business that are so carefully concealed will be that of circulating ex parte statements to which no replies can be made. In other words, the secret system prevents candid discussion; it isolates men from the general current of opinion and controls their action by one-sided views.

III. Another way of doing business in such orders is that of pledging members to vote according to direction of the committees. This is the worst of all, and it is simply an infamous abuse of the principle of association. Its real object is to elevate A, B, and C to office.

Publicity is absolutely necessary to decent political life; it is only by publicity that the real object of an association can be known and estimated. That alone will elicit the truth by fair and full discussion, that alone gives voters liberty to obey the dictates of enlightened judgment and honest consciences. The Order of the American Union is by its own confession a disguised enemy of American principles.

The Evangelical Repository very reasonably asks why these objections are not applied to the Freemasons or Odd-fellows as well. The question is pertinent. Why are many journals so brave against a new order which it is popular to denounce, while these old hives of secretism are left to send out swarm after swarm with impunity.

Odd-fellowship,

Its doctrine and practice examined in the light of God's word and judged by its own utterances. This excellent work by Rev. J. H. Brockman, to which we have previously called the attention of our readers is now published in cheap form, at 40 cents, post paid, and also in boards at 70 cts. There is also a German edition of this work; indeed, it was originally published in German, and has so passed to the second or third edition in both languages. It is written in the form of a dialogue between an Odd-fellow and a conscientious Christian, who is invited to join the order. It is a very convincing argument. For sale by Ezra A. Cook & Co.

Anniversary of Iowa Anti-secrecy Association.

There will be a convention of the friends of anti-secretism at Western, Linn Co., Iowa, commencing at 7½ P. M. Tuesday, April 25th, 1876, and to continue in session until Thursday, 27th. A cordial invitation is tendered to all the friends of the cause, in Iowa especially, and to all others who may choose to be present. Hon. J. B. Walker of Illinois, and other able speakers will be present. Let the auxiliary associations, churches and neighborhoods favoring the objects of the convention see that delegates be chosen to represent them, and all unite in defraying expenses of delegates.

Systematic and sworn secrecy is a an enemy to the church, state, and the social compact, and must be defeated by the force of truth and the grace of Him who in secret said nothing. Let prayer be offered that the convention be blessed with abundant success.

Delegates from the south and north will stop at Ely Station, which is three miles east of Western, on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids, and Minnesota R. R. Those from the east and west will come to Cedar Rapids, and then to Ely Station, where conveyance will be furnished to Western. M. S. Drury.

Pres. of State Anti-secrecy Association.

A Note from Elder Rathbun.

March 13, 1876.

Mr. Editor:—Please say through the Cynosure for the benefit of my numerous friends, who have written sympathetic letters to me, that I am better, yet not entirely out of danger. I trust by the blessing of God to be able soon to go forth laboring for the Master; as yet however I am not able to fill the calls that I have to lecture.

I wish to add, that the labors of Bro. Stoddard in this place have done much good, far exceeding any previous labor. All are anxious to hear him again, and some time in the future we hope to secure him with Ronayne to lecture for us. Yours, D. P. Rathbun.

The National Sunday School Teacher for March, beside its editorial department, and notes on the lessons replete with the Bible, has articles of value to teachers and S. S. workers in "Winding up the Clock," "The Book of Acts," and "Primary Classes." Chicago, Adams, Blackmer and Lyon Pub. Co.

Counterfeit Notes.—Helmick's complete list of counterfeit notes and detector gives the names of eighty-five banks on which counterfeits have been issued and passed, with full explanation accompanying the same as to how a counterfeit note may be detected.

Among this list will be found names of banks not now in existence, on which bogus notes are daily being passed in every State in the Union. The complete list will be sent free of postage, upon receipt of twenty-five cents. Address, F. W. Helmick, publisher, 278 W. Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O.

News of the Week.

—In the New Hampshire election last week the Republicans claim a majority of nearly 3,000. They have three or four councilors, nine Senators and twenty-two or twenty-three majority in the House.

—Although a number of emigrants en route to the Black Hills are snowed in upon the plains, and grave apprehensions are expressed as to their fate, the tide of emigration sweeps on toward that supposed new El Dorado with undiminished volume. A special train of twelve cars had to be sent out from Omaha lately to accommodate the number on the way. Yet the numbers disappointed and returning are said to be as large.

—A Copenhagen correspondent of a London paper writes:—The last mail from Iceland reports that the five hundred inhabitants of the Westmanna Islands—a group lying to the south of Iceland and belonging to Denmark—are probably dying of starvation. The fisheries there last year were unsuccessful, and the inhabitants, fearing their food would not last them throughout the winter, sent to Iceland asking for supplies. Accordingly a small quantity of supplies were dispatched. About a month ago, however, a bottle was found on the coasts of Iceland, containing a letter saying that the supplies on hand were only adequate for one week and a famine was inevitable. Tha perils of the sea during the Winter months render communication with the Westmanna Islands almost impossible.

—News of a dreadful horror comes by way of Paris, dated March 17th. An arch of the railway bridge over the river Ill, near Latterbach, gave way under the pressure of the flood. A passenger train from Mulhouse for Strasbourg, which was crossing at the time, was precipitated into the river. The carriages fell on top of one another and were dashed to pieces. Owing to the violence of the stream none of the passengers could be saved. All were either crushed or drowned. Thirty corpses have already been recovered.

—The storms and floods in England and on the continent have been unusually severe during the present month. The telegraph connection from London was once nearly cut off; farm property and shipping has been greatly damaged and many lives lost. In Paris last week the Seine was above the high water mark of 1872. One of the bridges (the Pont des Invalides, connecting the Quai de Billy and the d'Orsay) is threatened with destruction, and all traffic over it has been prohibited by the authorities.

Religious Intelligence.

—A church has been opened for the use of Chinese Christians in Charlestown, British Guiana.

—A number of the members of the San Francisco Ministerial Union have objected to advertising church services in the Sunday morning papers. A vote of the Union has been passed against the practice.

—According to Sadler's Roman Catholic Directory for 1876, the Catholic church has, in the United States 1 cardinal arch-bishop, 10 other arch-bishops, 50 bishops, 5,074 priests, 6,528 churches, chapels and stations where mass is regularly said, and a Roman Catholic population of about 6,000,000 persons.

—At Newport, N. J., revival influences exceed anything ever witnessed before there. One hundred and fifteen have been converted, and ninety-five have been added to the church, and the work is still progressing.

—At the thirty-ninth monthly meeting of the Bible Revision Committee, recently held in this city, it transpired that the O'd Testament Company are engaged upon Psalms. The New Testament Company completed the Epistles of John and James.

—The Buffalo N. Y. Free Methodist district is experiencing revivals in all its churches. Several of the pastors who have been active in these meetings were at the Niagara Co., Convention.

—Father Allen of Clear Lake, Iowa, whose name appears on our list of reformed Masons, has resigned his pastorate of the Congregational church on account of illness.

—The Advance publishes nearly a page of returns from hundreds of Congregational churches of New England and the Middle States, which show very considerable accessions during the past season.

—It is announced that Mr. Moody will hold a Christian Convention similar to that which closed his meetings in Philadelphia in the Hippodrome in New York on Wednesday and Thursday, March 29th and 30th. Morning and afternoon sessions of three hours will be held; practical topics relating to Christian and ministerial work will be discussed, Mr. Moody presiding, and Mr. Sankey conducting the singing. Each evening the convention will be suspended and the evangelists will conduct their usual service. Topics of vital interest in Christian work will be discussed, such as; How to conduct Prayer-meetings; Inquiry Meetings; how can they become part of the Service in our Churches; Training of Young Converts and Lay Teachers; How shall the Song be conducted in the Lord's Work? How to get hold of Non-church-goers; Our Young Men: What more can we do for them?

—The Presbyterian General Council, organized in London last summer, is to hold its first general meeting at Edinburgh, July 5th of this year. It promises to be a large affair, as over one hundred delegates from the various American bodies alone are expected to be there. There are nearly fifty distinct Presbyterian bodies, including altogether twenty thousand congregations in the world, and it is hoped that the bringing together of their representatives in a grand reunion will have a happy effect on the whole church. Twelve speakers are to be selected by an American committee to make addresses on given subjects at Edinburgh.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

Form of Bequest.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

Fortitude and Trials.

Oh, never from thy tempted heart
Let thine integrity depart;
When disappointment fills thy cup,
Undaunted nobly drink it up;
Truth will prevail, and justice show
Her tardy honors sure though slow.
Bear on, bear bravely on!

Bear on. Our life is not a dream,
Though often such its mazes seem;
We were not born for lives of ease,
Ourselves alone to aid and please.
To each a daily task is given;
A labor which shall fit for heaven:
When duty calls, let love grow warm—
Amid the sunshine and the storm,
With faith life's trials boldly breast,
And come a conquerer to thy rest.
Bear on, bear bravely on!

"I shall Die Silent."

So said Whitefield to Rev. Dr. Finley at whose house he was dining. In conversation at the table, the doctor said, "Mr. Whitefield, I hope it may be very long before you are called home; but when you are, I shall be glad to hear of the noble testimony you will bear for Christ." "You will be disappointed, doctor," said Whitefield "for I shall die silent. It has pleased God to enable me to bear so many testimonies for him in my life, that he will require none from me when I come to die. No, no, it is your dumb Christians, that have walked in fears and darkness or inconsistency, and thereby been unable to bear testimony for God during their lives, whom he compels to speak out for him on the bed of death."

The presentiment of Whitefield was verified. He died silent. A suffocating asthma prevented all utterance of his views and feelings as he was passing the threshold of eternity. But his work had been faithfully done; and the frequent and living testimonies he had borne for Christ during a lifetime of eminent piety and usefulness, were worth a thousand testimonies from the bed of death. His daily conduct, his habitual zeal, his earnestness and spirituality, his entire life, were a constant and eloquent testimony for God and to the excellence of religion, more conclusive and valuable than the most rapturous joys in a dying hour.

And so it should be with every Christian. The daily conduct, the habitual spirit, the entire life should bear testimony to the transforming power of religion. It is not how we die, but how we live, which is the test of our fitness for either living or dying. The testimony of a faithful Christian life is most convincing to the world, most comforting to friends, and most satisfying to one's self; and where it is wanting, the testimony of a dying hour will have but little weight. All the raptures of Payson's dying moments would have been of little worth but for the eminent fidelity of his life; and it was the devotedness of his life that gave them their power and impressiveness on all about him. And every one who would effectively testify to the value of religion in the hour of death, should every day of his life testify to it by daily devotedness to God. He that in all the intercourse of life is seen to be an epistle of Christ, known and read of all men, does honor to his profession and to his Saviour; and even if, like Whitefield, he is "silent in death," his life will speak, it may be to all coming generations, long after he has gone to his rest. "The righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance," by man as well as by God.

Follower of the Saviour, what is your testimony—the testimony of your life from day to day? Is it for Christ, or against him? Does it commend or disparage religion? Remember that, consciously or unconsciously, willing or unwilling, you are a witness; and the daily testimony of your conduct, your spirit, your life, is recorded in deep and indelible lines on the minds and hearts of your family, your children, your servants, your associates, your friends. Those records you are to meet again in the characters and to see again in the destinies of eternity. Be, then, a light to the world. Let your example shine. In all things live for Christ, and you shall lead others, it may be many, to him.—Am. Messenger.

"Charge It."

A simple little sentence is this, to be sure, and yet it may be considered as one of the most insidious enemies with which people have to deal. It is very pleasant to have all the commodities offered for sale in the market, and it is something hard to deny one's self of the same when they can be obtained by saying "charge it." But this habit of getting articles, however small the charge may be, without paying for them, keeps one's funds in a low state most of the time.

"I have no money to-day, but should like the article much," says a young man who happens to go into a store, and sees something which strikes his fancy.

"Never mind," says the gentlemanly clerk, "you are good for it."

"Well, I will take it and you may charge it."

And so it is that little accounts are opened at one place and another till the young man is surprised at his liabilities; which, though small in detail, are sufficiently large in the aggregate to reduce his cash materially when settling day comes.

In many instances, if the cash were required, the purchase would not be made even had the person the money by him; but to some, getting an article charged does not seem like parting with an equivalent.

Still, when pay day comes, as always it does, this illusion vanishes, and a feeling is experienced of parting with money and receiving nothing in return.

If there is an actual necessity of making a purchase, and the means are not at hand, there is a reasonable excuse for obtaining the same on credit; but when the article can be dispensed with until payment can be made, it is much to the advantage of the purchaser to do so.

"We must have a nice set of furniture," says the young couple about to be united in marriage, "but we have not the means, however we will get it and have it charged." And so they start life with a debt hanging over them for which there is no occasion.

Were there any certainty of health and a supply of labor, it would place rather a different construction upon the matter. But considering the fluctuations of business and the uncertainties of life, "Charge it" is a mischievous phrase.—Ex.

The Way of Life.

To Christians I crave to say: I have conflicts and severe trials in this world; as in John xvi. 33; Phil. iii. 3; 1 Pet. v. 8,9; but, thank the Lord, I am a believer and a lover of the following doctrinal items of Scripture, which ought to be profitable for all Christians. In them is shown where my blessed hope began and where it will end:

1. In Repentance—Mark i. 14,15; 2 Tim. ii. 24-26.
2. Faith in Christ—John vi. 29; vi. 45.
3. Forgiveness of sins—Acts v. 29-32; xiii. 38,39.
4. Redemption—Gal. iii. 13,14; iv. 4,5.
5. Adoption—Rom. viii. 13-17; Gal. iii. 26-27.
6. Born Again—Gal. iv. 28,29; 1 Pet. i. 22,23.
7. Sanctification—2 Thes. ii. 13; Heb. ii. 11.
8. Election—1 Thes. i. 4; Col. iii. 12-14.
9. Justification—Rom. viii. 33; v. 1,2.
10. Salvation—Eph. ii. 8-10; Rom. viii. 38,39.
11. No Condemnation—Rom. viii. 1,2; Heb. xii. 1,5.

Jesus said search the Scriptures. O, what a precious privilege!—Token of Truth.

Brother, do you show piety at home? Does your wife respect it? Do your children feel its sweet persuasive power? Do your servants know you are a man of God? Would those by whom you are employed be able to say, "We know that he has the mind of Christ." You will go forth into the world all the stronger because of effection and good faith which you have at home. Next to the love of God, it will be to you an inspiration in life. Its secret is found in the enjoyment of the perfect love of God. This cannot exist alone. "Thy neighbor as thyself" demands thy love equally with "thy God with all and thy heart," and thy nearest neighbors are they of your own household.

Our Colonial and Revolutionary Flags.

In the beginning of the Revolution a variety of flags were displayed in the revolted colonies. The "Union Flags," mentioned so frequently in the newspapers of 1774, were the ordinary English red ensigns, bearing the Union Jack. These generally bore some patriotic motto, such as "Liberty," "Liberty and Property," "Liberty and Union," etc. It is uncertain what flag, if any, was used by the Americans at Bunker Hill. That displayed by Putnam on Prospect Hill, on July 18th, following, was red, with Qui transtulit sustinet on one side, and on the other, "An Appeal to Heaven." The first armed vessels commissioned by Washington sailed under the pine-tree flag, a white flag bearing a green pine-tree. The first republican flag unfurled in the Southern States, blue with a white crescent in the upper corner next to the staff, was designed by Colonel William Moultrie of Charleston, at the request of the Council of Safety, and was hoisted on the fortifications of that city in September, 1775. The flag displayed on the east bastion of Fort Sullivan, afterward called Moultrie, on June 28th, 1776, was the same with the word "Liberty" on it. On the west bastion waved the flag called the "Great Union," first raised by Washington at Cambridge, January 2d, 1776. This consisted of the thirteen alternate red and white stripes of the present flag of the United States, with the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew emblazoned on the blue canton in place of the stars. This flag was carried also by the fleet under command of Commodore Esek Hopkins, when it sailed from the Delaware capes, February 17th, 1776. Hopkins had displayed previously a yellow ensign, bearing the device of a rattlesnake in the attitude of striking, with the motto, "Don't Tread on Me." The official origin of the "Grand Union" flag is involved in obscurity. At the time of its adoption at Cambridge, the colonies still acknowledged the legal rights of the mother-country, and therefore retained the blended crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, changing only the field of the old ensign for the thirteen stripes, emblematic of their union. After the Declaration of Independence, the emblems of British union became inappropriate, but they were retained in the flag until the following year. Congress resolved, on June 14th, 1777, "that the flag of the thirteen United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation."—Appletons' American Encyclopedia.

One of Richard Baxter's quaint sayings was, "I am large about redeeming time." And it was no doubt because he was careful, not only of his days, but of his hours and minutes, that he was able to do so much work and leave such an enduring name. Wasted time is so much detracted from our usefulness, so much from the world's good, and so much from the glory of God.

Reverently, God being "our witness;" tenderly in the bowels of Jesus Christ; with a yearning that cannot be satisfied, save by the highest welfare of its object; with a self-sacrifice which accounts nothing too much to give, or do, or suffer for the accomplishment of its benign purpose; with a Christ-like lowliness which overlooks all differences, and goes down to the meanest object of its solicitude, let us pray for ourselves and our brethren, that our love and theirs may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment, that we may approve things which are excellent; that "we may be sincere and without offense till the day of Christ; being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ unto the glory and praise of God.

The noblest spirits are those which turn to heaven, not in the hour of sorrow, but in that of joy; like the lark, they wait for the clouds to disperse, that they may soar up into their native element.—Richter.

The Insect that Lives Three Years and One Day.

It is such a wee bit of a chap that its long, wise family name, Euphemerda, hardly becomes it, and so it "grows up to name itself." The last day of its life gives it its common name.

"Day-fly," is a name that fits it exactly. It has wings just one happy day and the little fly spends that day as if life was indeed a fairy dream. How different it is from its three long years of groveling worm-life. The two periods of its existence are so unlike that no one would believe that the worms and the flies were forty-ninth cousins to each other. At first they have little round grub-like bodies and live in the soft mud of streams and ponds, and they are such hungry, greedy little chaps, that they do nothing but eat and breathe. On each side of their body are six little fin-like projections, which wise men used to think were the oars with which they paddled their little grub-skin canoes, but Reaumer, a great French naturalist, studied them very carefully and found that the mistaken paddles were for the same purpose as the gills of a fish, and he found by examining them by a microscope, that connected with each of these gills was a windpipe, which branched off into a multitude of tiny pipes all through the funny grub body. A very extensive arrangement just for a tiny worm. But the Creator never slights his work, no matter how small and lowly the creature. We told you the little fellow's chief object was eating. It seems very contented until it has lived almost three years in "mud and mire," then it begins to get uneasy, for there are fairy wings growing beneath the worm garments. By and by the old coat gets so worn that it seems in danger of coming to rags. Like a rotten garment it became loose, but the poor impatient body in it don't seem to care any more about clothes or food. It just wants to get away from its former life. The pent-up wings struggle to get free. It rises to the top of the water and suddenly the old coat bursts open on the back, and quicker than a little girl can throw off her water-proof, the worm tosses off its old garment, and giving the worn-out thing, apparently, a contemptuous little kick, it spreads its lovely gossamer wings and soars into the air. The little fairy seems perfectly intoxicated with delight. It flutters here and there and does not take one atom of food. Without stopping to bother its little head about what it shall eat, or what it shall drink, or, without taking thought for the morrow, it just enjoys, with its whole being, the glorious, perfect freedom it has gained. It lives a whole life-time in one short day, and before the morrow comes, the little wings have finished their mission and are folded forever.

And so this is its history—three years cased in a curious worm-house, greedily devouring its slimy food, and one brief day on the wing, forgetting food and all its groveling life, and drinking in all the sweet sunlight of heaven.

Who can tell which cup held the most happiness—the golden vase filled to the brim with a few blissful hours, or the earthen dish filled with food for three greedy years?—Northern Advocate.

The Dusty Bible.

"Oh, here it is on the shelf, just behind grandmother's dirty old Bible!" said a blue-eyed boy who had climbed a chair in order to look for his ball.

"I should like to know what there is in that great ugly book?" said his sister Anna. "It can't be very nice and interesting, for nobody ever thinks of reading it."

Anna's parents lived in a remote village in the south of France. Their house looked very pretty with its pointed roof, overshadowed by a large elm-tree. Beneath the elm Anna often sat all day spinning, unless she had to help her mother in her work, for she was an industrious little girl and helped her mother as much as she could.

In the autumn Anna was seized with severe illness, and for several weeks had to keep her bed. When she began to recover she was still very weak, and was not able even to use her spinning-wheel. She sat alone in the house for hours together when her 'parents had gone out, and had nothing to do but to watch the glow of the fire, or the leaves of the elm-tree as they fell one after another to the ground. She had but few books, and these she had already read so often that she knew them almost by heart. Her brother had gone to be an apprentice in the next town, and so she was very sad and lonely.

One day as she was sitting wearily, not knowing how to spend the time, her eye fell upon the shelf, and the great, brown book covered with dust and cobwebs. She jumped up hastily, saying to herself "Well, there is grandmother's Bible; I've a great mind to have a look at it and see what is in it." She accordingly took down the book, and having dusted it, sat down in a corner to read it.

It was a very old Bible, with many black woodcuts. There was Moses in his ark of bulrushes, and Daniel in the lions' den. These two pictures pleased Anna especially, and, indeed, she looked through all the pictures before she read a single line. She opened the Gospel according to St. Luke, and admired over and over again the picture of the disciples with the miraculous draught of fishes, and then she read the chapter containing the account of that event. She read also the history of the paralytic, who was let down through the roof into the presence of the Lord to be healed. Soon she became so absorbed in her reading that she almost allowed the last spark upon the hearth to go out. The time no longer passed slowly and drearily, and she read on and on until the time came for her father and mother to return; then, fastening the clasps, she put the old brown book back upon its shelf.

From this time Anna found plenty to occupy her. Every moment which she spent alone was precious to her for she could now read the good news of Jesus Christ. And when she again became strong enough to sit at her spinning-wheel, she was busily engaged in thinking of his miracles of love, and of his gracious invitation to the weary and heavy laden. God gave his Spirit with the Word, and she learned the way of salvation. The long unused Bible became to her, as it has been to so many, a light to her feet and a lamp to her path.

With the bright days of spring, however, a great sorrow came.

Anna's father, who was a laborer had an accident which ended shortly in his death leaving the family in great poverty. The poor mother sought consolation by calling upon the saints and praying to the Virgin Mary, and often wept bitterly because she could not give any money so that masses might be said for the soul of her husband.

One evening when her mother was more troubled than usual Anna offered to read to her, and took the Bible from the shelf.

"Why, Anna, that is the Bible," exclaimed the widow, sharply; "You are surely not going to read out of the Bible?"

"Why not, mother? It is God's Word, and there is a verse in it which says we ought to read it."

The mother urged that only the priests could tell the meaning of what was in the Bible, but at length yielded to Anna's assurance that there was much in it which even a child could understand. Very soon the old Book exerted the same charm over the mother as it had done already over the child, and as from day to day the reading was continued, the poor widow experienced the great and mysterious power of comforting which is contained in the Word of God. In the dusty, neglected volume which had lain so long upon the shelf, the mother and daughter found guidance to a new and blessed life in Christ Jesus.

Reader, is the Bible in your house a dusty, forgotten book, laid on one side as though it had nothing interesting in it? Take it down; there is a message in it for you!—From the German.

Home and Health Hints.

Healthful Words to Women.

I stood, last week, by a grief-stricken young mother, who, with pale cheek and tearless eye, bent in speechless agony over her dying child. It was her first-born. It had lain in her encircling arms six short months. Now it was torn from her love; and, helpless and despairing, she watched the feeble life ebb slowly away.

I could not say to the poor mourner, "You, yourself, unhappy mother, are the destroyer of your own child! Your thoughtlessness, your ignorance, your waste of the golden years of life, before this tender child was committed to your care, have caused this agony—this death!"

And yet these stern words to her, and to multitudes like her, would have been strictly true. Of what use to her, in that sad hour, were her many accomplishments, her grace, elegance, and literary requirements? The fundamental study—the knowledge of the laws of health—had been entirely omitted in her education; and now her child was dead, and no after-knowledge could recall her dead to life. As a young girl no habits of attention and respect to the requirements of the physical organization had been implanted by her mother, and she had entered upon the responsibilities of family life with no idea of what was needed for the care of her children.

It is of much weightier moment to the young matron to know how to manage her household with intelligence than to speak French or play the piano. The one branch of knowledge does not exclude the other, but a thorough acquaintance with all that concerns the physical well-being of a household—the prevention of sickness, the promotion of vigor and cheerfulness—is of fundamental importance to the young ruler of the precious home kingdom.

If she knows how to ventilate her house thoroughly, in Winter as well as Summer, to prevent injurious odors, to distribute an ample allowance of air to the lungs that must inhale it, to look upon stagnant air as a deadly enemy by night as well as day—then her children will not die of fevers, nor be tainted with scrofula.

If she can select a healthful and nutritious diet for her household, insure its proper preparation, vary it in quantity and quality according to the needs of each member—then she will keep her household in good temper, from the oldest to the youngest, and her doctor's bills will be only nominal.

If she understands the proper use of water, the moral as well as physical advantages of exercise, the importance of dress, with due regard to warmth, lightness, and points of support, as well as of fashion—then her children will live and not die. She will reign like a queen in the midst of her subjects. She will reach a good old age, surrounded by her children's children, and her memory will be cherished long after she is gone.

It may be safely asserted that, if the present generation of American women understood the laws of health as well as they understand the toilet, and expended the same interest in putting them into practice that they devote to dress, they might save one-half of the children that will die in the next generation, diminish by half its sickness, and increase by a third the average duration of its life.

In what other way could they make an equally valuable contribution to the national welfare?—Selected.

From Past-Master Ronayne.

SOME QUESTIONS AND OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

MALLET CREEK, Medina Co., O., March 16, 1876.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Here I am hemmed in as it were by uncontrolable circumstances and compelled to lie idle for one whole week while notice is being extensively circulated throughout this county that our meetings shall be held at Medina on Monday and Tuesday next, the 20th and 21st inst. At first I looked upon this idleness as almost a great misfortune and I am afraid felt very much disappointed and gave expression to my feelings in the matter in a way not altogether savoring of submission and resignation, but on looking the whole matter carefully over I am led to be more than thankful that this rest is thus forced upon me and especially am I thankful that I was led to the house of Dr. Bingham, in whose study I am now writing this letter and from whose wisdom and marvelous experience I am daily receiving such lessons as cannot fail to be made manifest in after time so that on the whole I am constrained to exclaim, "Lord it is good for me to be here."

And now as I cannot speak to the people of Ohio before next Monday night will you kindly permit me to speak to all the readers of the Cynosure, everywhere and of whatever denomination, and let us have a good old-fashioned Anti-masonic talk all to ourselves.

In the first place I will notice that in almost every locality which I visit I meet with very good Christian men and women who can scarcely believe that their ministers are subjected to the low degrading process of preparation when joining the Masonic institution as described in the "Hand-Book" and exemplified in my public expositions of the secret work of "the craft."

Now to all the readers of the Cynosure I would say (and lay particular emphasis on the assertion) that every candidate for Masonic honors from the king upon his throne to the beggar in his hovel must "cheerfully conform to all the ancient usages and established customs of the fraternity." When called into the "preparation room" on the night of his initiation and before a single step is taken toward making him a Mason the candidate whoever he may be—king, priest or peasant—must "seriously declare upon his honor" that he will "cheerfully conform to all the ancient usages and established customs of the fraternity." Again, in the ritual of the Entered Apprentice degree the question is asked, "Where were you first prepared to be made a Mason? Ans. In my heart. Where next? In a room adjacent to a regularly constituted lodge of Masons. How were you prepared? By being divested of all metals (and hence every candidate, ministers and all must take off every particle of their clothing, and sometimes even their shirt) neither naked nor clad, barefoot nor shod, hoodwinked and with a cable-tow around my neck in which condition I was conducted to the door of the lodge by a friend whom I afterwards found to be a brother." And in the second section of the same degree the following explanation is offered to the candidate by the worshipful master and is as immutable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. Worshipful Master to candidate: "You were divested of all metals for two reasons: first, that you should carry nothing offensive or defensive into the lodge," etc., etc. "You were neither naked nor clad because Masonry regards no man for his worldly wealth or honors, it was therefore to signify that it is the internal and not the external qualifications of a man which should recommend him to be made a Mason." Again, in visiting a strange lodge unless properly vouched for, every member without exception must take the "test oath" and swear that he was regularly initiated as an Entered Apprentice, etc. Now how could he thus swear to being "regularly initiated" if any part of the preparatory ceremony had been omitted or neglected? Hence I repeat again, his clothing must come off and he must submit in every other particular to all the ceremonies of his initiation, passing and raising.

But lest any lingering doubt should still remain on this subject, I shall now quote the law in the case, and let me remind my Anti-masonic reader that every Master Mason is sworn to obey these laws, so that, even if they would the Worshipful Master of a lodge and his subordinate officers have no other option than implicit obedience to the so-called ancient usages of the craft.

On page 53 of the General Ahiman Rezon by Dan'l Sickels (not Dan. the Union General) I find these instructions:

"THE ENTRANCE.—The preparations to which the candidate must submit before entering the lodge serve allegorically to teach him, as well as to remind the brethren who are present, that it is the man alone, divested of all the outward recommendations, of rank, state or of riches, which Masonry accepts and that it is his spiritual or moral worth alone which can open to him the door of the temple." And lest there should be any question as to whom this language may apply, I quote from Past Grand Master Cregier's address, or rather his decisions in the Grand Lodge Report of the proceedings of 1872. He says: "Nor does it matter whether the applicant is a clergyman or a layman, for every man be he high or low who enters our portals honors himself, not Masonry." The italics in all these quotations are mine and it will be observed from all that has preceeded that the law in the case of the Masonic preparation is explicit and decided and that there can be no evasion whatever from its inexorable requirements, and hence I again repeat and for the last time the minister must take off his pantaloons. Now let that stand, Mr. Editor; don't change it for surely the truth in this great matter cannot be expressed too plainly.

Anther question which seems too give considerable annoyance to very many good Christian friends is, as to whether the name of Jesus Christ may not be used occasionally in lodge prayers, and especially in purely Christian communities where no Jews can be present. Now in answer to this inquiry I would answer most emphatically NO! The name of Jesus Christ can on no account be permitted to be used in any prayer in a lodge of Freemasons. Let us remember that Jews are not the only people who reject Jesus Christ, or who manifest a decided opposition to the use of his name in any of their pretended devotional exercises or religious ceremonies and that inasmuch as Freemasonry according to the "Ancient Charges" published by Anderson in 1723, is a religion in which all men agree, hence the Masonic law explicitly states that "prayer in Masonic lodges should be of a general character containing nothing offensive to any class of conscientious brethren." "Webb's Monitor," page 285. Again from the same page I quote: "So broad is the religion of Masonry (there Masonry is a religion) and so carefully are all sectarian tenets excluded from the system that the Christian, the Jew and the Mohammedan in all their numberless sects and divisions may and do harmoniously combine in its moral and intellectual work with the Buddhist, the Parsee, the Confucian and the worshiper of Deity under every form." What a beautiful prayer-meeting this is for a minister of the Gospel or professing Christian to be caught in? The (so-called) Christian, the Jew, the Mohammedan, the Arab, the Confucian, the Parsee, the Buddhist, the American savage, the gambler, the libertine, the profane swearer, the Sabbath-breaker, the deist, the Universalist, and even the infidel can all kneel together around the Masonic altar and while all else may and do introduce their pretended gods into the lodge room, yet the professing Christian must leave his God and Saviour outside—even beyond the tyler—and must on no account offer prayer in his name, or acknowledge him as the only Mediator between God and man while joining in the blasphemous ceremonies and practicing the silly mummeries of Freemasonry. But again, the Grand Lodge of Iowa, endorsed by the Grand Lodge of Illinois expressly states that "The Orders of Knighthood, as the Knight Templar Order, is not a Masonic organization—far from it. It is a Christian order;" thus drawing a broad line between Masonry and Christianity and declaring in unmistakable terms that inasmuch as Freemasonry is not Christian so the blessed name of Jesus Christ, the founder of Christianity, must on no account be used officially in the lodge worship. But not only is the name of Jesus Christ not used, but whenever the Scriptures are quoted in any of the Masonic monitors or instruction books of the lodge, should the name of the divine Redeeamer occur it is scrupulously expunged from the quotation. Compare 2 Peter ii. 1–17 and "Webb's Monitor," pages 73,74; also "Mackey's Ritualist," page 271; also 2 Thess. iii. 6–16 and Webb, page 120 and Mackey, pages 348 and 349.

But what says the law? In fact Blue Lodge Masonry (that is Ancient Craft Masonry) has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible, if it was it would not be Masonry, it would be something else. Chase's Digest Masonic Law, p. 208. See also from pp. 206-210 inclusive.

I give these quotations "that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word should be established," and so let no one persuade you that the Redeemer's name may or can be used in Masonic prayers. Freemasonry is unscriptural, anti-scriptural and false. It is anti-Christian in the most blasphemous sense of the word, and hence a man can no more be a Freemason and a Christian than he can be a Mohammedan and a Christian, a Buddhist and a Christian, a Parsee and a Christian, a Confucian and a Christian, or a North American savage and a Christian. There is no more affinity or coincidence between Freemasonry and Christianity than there is between the grossest and the most abominable idolatry on the face of the globe, and the glorious, pure, heavenly and heaven-inspiring doctrines of the Christian faith as found in the Old and New Testament.

MASONRY CLAIMS TO BE A RELIGION.

Morris' Dictionary, Art "God." "The essentially religions" character of the Masonic institution is shown under the head Deity. Between the extremes of atheism on the one hand,and idolatry on the other, Freemasonry cultivates the worship of the one true and living God, omnipotent, omniserent and omnipresent, who answers prayer, grants his own spirit of wi dom and strength to those who ask him, rewards virtue, punishes vice and reserves heaven after death, for those who have faithfully observed his will and pleasure in the present life. "An emblem of Deity is suspended in the east of every lodge."

Mackey's Lexicon, art. "God" Freemasons have always been worshipers of the one true God. "This" says Hutchinson, "was the first principle and corner stone on which our originals thought it expedient to place the foundation of Masonry." While the world around them was polluted with sun-worship and brute-Worship, and all the absurdities of polytheism, Masonry even in its spurious forms, as the ancient mysteries have appropriately been styled, was alone occupied in raising alters to the one IAM and declaring and teaching the unity of the Godhead. The God of Masonry is not the God of the Bible, but any supreme, governing power acknowledged by any of the religions of the world, as Masons are found in every land, and of every sort of faith. The letter G. suspended in the lodge means "God" or "Geometry," according to the inclination of each Mason Hiram, King of Tyre, claimed as a Grand Master was not a worshiper of the true God.

Morris' Dictionary, "Art" "Deity," p. 128. Under the various heads, Chaplain, Prayer, Religion, Scriptures, etc., is shown the profound veneration required by the Masonic system to be paid the Supreme Architect. At the first entrance into the lodge this is thrillingly suggested; the first great light of Masonry is the Bible. The very means of recognition involve the idea of a word inspired by Deity; in the east of the lodge is his emblem; in the charge of an Entered Apprentice, the newly admitted brother is exhorted "never to mention God's name but with that reverential awe which is due from a creature to his creator; in the second degree this injunction is inpressed by ceremonies; blasphemy against God is a punishable offence in Masonic discipline; in the advanced grades of Masonry the very obligations forbid blasphemy; in brief, the idea of an omniscient and omnipotent God, who will punish vice and reward virtue pervades the entire theory of Masonry, and again p. 242, the various degrees and orders of Scotch Masonry are termed ineffable with reference to the many Hebrew names of Deity introduced into them. The pronunciation of some of these names cannot be made by mortal lips.

Chaplain Morris, p. 82,—The first in a series of nine lodge supernumeraries. He is appointed by the Worshipful Master to be his assistant in religious exercises. It is his duty to offer prayers during the opening, working and closing of lodges; to give the Scriptural readings and explanations; to deliver religious lectures and exhortations to the brethren in public and private and generally to represent the religious element of the society. He must be one who is well founded in biblical faith and knowledge and practice in public address to the Deity. His situation in the lodge is near the W. M., Mackey Lexicon p. 80, "Chaplain." "The office of Chaplain of a lodge is one not recognized in the Ritual of this country, though often conferred by courtesy."

Prayer, Mackey's Lexicon, p. 369, "All the ceremonies of our order are prefaced and terminated with prayer because Masonry is a religious institution, and because we thereby show our dependence on, and our faith and trust in God.

*Prayer, Morris' Dictionary,*p. 374,"Every important undertaking in Masonry is both begun and completed with prayer. The prayers given in the Manuals of the Blue Lodge are such as all Masons whatever their religious faith may unite in. In the orders of Knighthood the prayers become as a matter of course strictly and intensely Christian. In the third degree a sublime prayer, adapted from the 14th chapter of Job, is made in American lodges an essential part of the ritual of Raising."—Masonic prayers are ritualistic, and not reverential; formal and not believing. They are not offered to the God in the Bible, who is the Christian's God, nor are they offered through Christ, the only Saviour. Lodge and Chapter Masonry allows no recognition of Christ in their religious worship. The Lord of glory is excluded from all their prayers and all their Scripture readings. As Masons are of all religions in the world, professedly and yet have a common worship, it must be a mongrel service, such as the false religions of earth may tolerate, but Christian ity the full and final developement of revealed truth cannot join with or fellowship such a system.

"Religion,"—Morris' Dictionary p. 391, To learn how nearly the Masonic society approximates to a religious institution, the reader is referred to the articles,"Holy Scripture," "Blasphemy" 'Deity" and kindred themes.

Holy Scriptures, Morris' Dictionary p. 234, The importance of the sacred Scriptures in Masonry cannot be overrated. The Bible is the first object that strikes the candidate's attention upon coming to Masonic light; all the instructions of a moral and religious character communicated to him is derived from its pages; and when his body is borne to the grave it precedes him, opened,upon that solemn march. The Scriptural passages particularly used in Masonic ceremonies are these;

1st Degree, Psalm 133,

2nd Degree, Amos 7; 7, 8.

3d Degree, Eccl 12; 27. Jsb 14, 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12 etc.

4th Degree, 1 Pet. 2; 1-5, 16, 17, Rev. 2; 17; 2 Chron 2; 16, Psalm 118; 22, Matt 21; 42, Mark 12: 10, Luke 20: 17, Acts 4; 2, Rev 3; 2. Ezek 44; 15, Mat 20; 1-16.

5th Degree, None.

6th Degree, Psalms 24 and 122; 2 Chron 7; 1-4.

7th Degree, Exodus 3; 1-6, 2 Chron 36; 11-20, Exodus 3; 13,14, Psalm 141 to 143.

8th Degree, Royal Master, 1 Kings 6 and 7, Rev. 22.

9th Degree, Psalm 80 and 7th, 1 Kings 4 to 7 and others.

10th Degree, Ezra 3 to 6 chapters.

11th Degree, Matt 26 and 27, Acts 1, Eph 6.

12th Degree, Acts 28, John 19 and 20 chapters.

High Priest Masonry, Gen. 14; 12-24, Heb. 7; 1-5, Numbers 6; 22-26.

In Scotch Masonry, large portions of Scripture are also used.

Bible, Mackey's Lexicon p. 60 Emphatically is the Bible called a greater light of Masonry, for from the center of the lodge it pours forth upon the East, the West and the South, its refulgent rays of divine truth, the Bible is used among Masons as the symbol of the will of God, however it may be expressed.

Furniture,Morris' Dictionary p. 193.This term technically refers to the Holy Bible, square and compass, which are explained to the Entered Apprentice, as the furniture of the lodge, and also Mackey's Lexicon, p. 161. Every well regulated lodge must contain a Bible, square and compass which are teenically said to constitute its furniture and which are respectively dedicated to God the Master of the Lodge, and the Craft. In the lodge the Bible, is a symbol. To the Christian,it is Gods Word of truth. All Christians receive and love the Bible. Many Masons do not even believe it as God's word. The Christian esteems the Bible above gold. The Mason associates it with the square and compass. Masonry always has the material implements, the square and compass on its altars, in every country and in every lodge. But the Bible is displaeed and supplanted by the sacred books, so-called, of false systems of religion.

I will quote here from Mackey's Jurisprudence p. 33; The Twenty-first Landmark. "It is a landmark, that a book of the Law" shall constitute an indispensable part of the furniture of every lodge, I say advisedly, a book of the law, because it is not absolutely required that every where the Old and New Testaments shall be used. The "book of the law," is that volume which by the religion of the country is believed to contain the revealed will of the Grand Architect of the universe. Hence in all lodges in Christian countries, the book of the law is composed of the Old and New Testaments; in a country where Judaism was the prevailing faith, the Old Testamemt alone would be sufficient; and in Mohammedan countries and among Mohammedan Masons, the Koran might be substituted. Masonry does not attempt to interfere with the peculiar religious faith of its disciples, except so far as relates to the belief in the existence of God, and what necessarily results from that belief, *The book of the law is to the specualtive. Mason his spiritual trestle-board; without this he cannot labor; whatever he believes to be the revealed will of the Grand Architect constitutes for him this spiritual trestle-board and must ever be before him in his hours of speculative labor to be the rule and guide of his conduct, the landmark therefore requires that a book of the law, a religious code of some kind purporting to be an examplar of the revealed will of God, shall form an essential part of the furniture of every lodge." Mackey's Jurisprudence p. 93 etc., says,"A belief in God is one of the unwritten landmarks of the order, requiring no regulation or statutory law for its confirmation. Such a belief results from the very nature of the Masonic Institution,and is set forth in the ritual of the order so one of the very first pre-requisites to the ceremony of initiation. This Divine Being, the creator of heaven and earth, is particularly viewed in Masonry in his character as the great Master Builder of the worlds, and is hence Masonically addressed as the Grand Architect of the universe G. A. O. T. U. But consequent on a belief in him, and indeed inseparably connected with it, is a belief in a resurrection to a future life. As to any other religious doctrine, Masonry leaves its candidates to the enjoyment of their own opinions, whatever they may be. * * * Within a few years an attempt has been made by some Grand lodges to add to these simple, moral and religious qualifications, another which requires a belief in the divine authenticity of the Scriptures. It is much to be regretted that Masons will sometime forget the fundamental law of their institution and endeavor to add to or to detract from the perfect integrity of the building, as it was left to them by their predecessors. Whenever this is done, the beauty of our temple must suffer. The landmarks of Masonry are so perfect that they neither need, nor will permit of the slightest amendment.

*On the subject of the religious, or rather the doctrinal requirements of Masonry, the old charges utter the following explicit language. Though in ancient times, Masons were charged in every country to be of the religion of that country or nation, whatever it was, yet it is now thought expedient only to oblige them to that religion in which, all men agree, leaving their particular opinions to themselves, Charge,1st,

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M.E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts;

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

Gain in one week, 27

No clubs of five or more have been received this week.

We have been requested by many readers to put "FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE" into the Cynosure again, and have arranged to do so on the sixth of April.

DO YOU WANT ANY OF OUR BOOKS? Do you want Ronayne's Hand-book of Freemasonry, or John Quincy Adams' Letters, or The Broken Seal, or Gen'l Phelps on Secret Societies? Have you no money to pay for them just now? If you will secure one new subscriber for the Cynosure and forward the name with $2.20, you can order either of these books sent post-paid as commission.

Twenty-five per cent commission in books we are glad to give to all who request it.

We have reason to expect a club from Quincy, Ohio, soon. Are there other clubs coming?

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED DURING WEEK ENDING Mar. 18th, 1876, from N W Allen, D Alter, W T Baker, W P Breaden, G Burnett, J W Baldridge, C Cowles, E S Cook, Mrs T Collins, C Conkling, A S Darling, D Foreman, M E Fisk, D Galloway, H Hulburt, W C Herrington, T Henderson, H H Hinman, L E Jeseph, T C Kirkwood, A Kingsley, J Martin, P Myer, G L Paine, H Pease, G G Ritchie, J P Stoddard, A A Schryver, E A Seger E Sprague, J B Stinespring, J Stitt, J Stoughton, D Shively, C Stegner, J Talbot, W Taylor, E Umbaugh, L Wing, J Wilkison, A S Wilson, M D E Will, O Wilbur.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Topics of the Time.

The recent severe storms west of the Missouri have excited grave apprehensions for the gold-hunting companies on their way to the Black Hills, whose sufferings must have been great, perhaps with loss of life. Gen. Merrill has just returned from the mining region and reports not very favorably of the situation in the Black Hills. He says: "The area in which gold is found at present is so limited that it wouldn't support one half of the people who are there already. The gold yields at the best will not pay more than wages; and wherever there seems to be a promising location it is already covered with experienced and practical gold miners, with whom the crowds of people going there now could not possibly compete even if they had a chance." And still in the face of these facts some journals, like the Inter-Ocean of this city, continue to encourage the emigration to this region; well knowing that disappointment, suffering and death are in store for the many, on whose exigencies a few will profit. There is, too, the treaty not yet annulled, the promise of the nation openly broken. Though the Indians have made their rights to be lightly respected, yet the honor of the Government should suffer no harm.

If human actions determine human motives, one of the most ignoble political parasites is the acting governor of Illinois. Though it be written that we speak not evil of the ruler of the people, it is just to warn the people of one who seeks by base means to become their ruler. Mr. Beveridge seems to have gained a reputation among the soldiers whom he led in the late war, upon which he traded himself first into the sheriff's office of Cook county and then into the Lieut-governor's place. His speeches have been so many and of so little note that a specious bit of flattery addressed to a lot of Odd-fellows is about all that comes to mind. His abuse of the pardoning power has shamed his friends and disgusted his opponents. But in seeking to be re-seated in the gubernatorial chair he has appealed to two influences that should make him avoided by every honest citizen. He first hob-nobbed with the Chicago brewers, tasting their liquors, visiting their great breweries, those caldrons of the pit; and now an open charge is made that the re-organized Grand Army of the Republic has been inveigled into an active support of his waning fortunes. In old Rome when wealth and power had debauched patrician and plebeian alike such measures were to be expected, but from one occupying the high place of Governor of Illinois at this day political death should follow such sinning.

Americans Repeating the Folly of Amaziah.

BY GEO. SOVEREIGN.

In 2 Chronicles xxiv. 14, these words occur: "Now it came to pass that after Amaziah was come from the slaughter of Edomites, that he brought the gods of the children of Seir and set them up to be his gods, and bowed down himself before them and burned incense unto them."

It will be remembered by the Bible student that Amaziah had gone out against the Edomites in the name of the Lord, directed by a man of God and by divine help the Edomites were smitten. Their helpless gods of wood and stone and brass and gold and silver could not save their worshipers nor themselves. How wicked and senseless then for the king who had triumphed by God's help to bring such shameful things home with him and bow down to them and praise and glorify them for his victories and trust them for future safety! What wonder after such acts of wickedness and inexpressable folly that he was soon given up to be slain by his own subjects!

It is one of man's marvelous mistakes that he does not learn by others' fatal blunders. Many in our own country have literally copied this miserable foolishness. It was by the aid of Freemasonry that southern slavery was attempted to be sustained; that, too, against the wishes of nearly all the pious people of this land. When our Northern hosts engaged this monstrous evil, it was in the name of the Lord, the God of justice. So we believed slavery aided by Freemasonry was helpless before the wind of Divine energy. The monstrous thing came down, yet (O tell it not!) our conquering heroes have brought back home with them these Southern, shameful idols of secrecy and have fallen down and worshiped them.

Before the war Southern gentlemen were almost all Masons. Proof.—A Mr. E. went to the South to set up his son in mercantile business. He was inquired of, "Is he a Mason?" "No." "Then he need come here, for we are all Masons. You son would get no custom from Monday morning till Saturday night." Again, our young men who went out against this foe in the name of the Lord were comparatively free from this stain of idolatry. Now Freemasonry is their boast and their song in the night.

Let us look at another class, more melancholy still on account of their influence on society, the religious class. And that we may properly appreciate their triumph, in the past, when they took upon themselves the obligations of Christianity, they were asked, "Dost thou renounce the devil and all his works; the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same." Answer, "I renounce them all." Those who believed themselves called to preach confessed that the Holy Scriptures contained all that was necessary to be believed or practiced and promised that they would so diligently and prayerfully study them as to lay aside the study of the world and the flesh, etc., so preach them as to drive away all false doctrine.

Conversant as I have been with the past generation, there is no room for me to doubt the honesty of purpose of the greater part who have taken these sacred vows upon them in years gone by. So that they had gotten the victory over the devil and the beast and his image, Freemasonry. These who are now old men and many young men with them, who have begun conquests in the name of the Lord are seen (if you could see in the darkness of the lodge,) sprawling on hands and knees, worshiping this idol, secretism. Cursed of God! To be sure they have their reasons for this; such as idolators have always had.

There is a large number who stand connected in church fellowship with these so prone on the earth like a serpent, who are not Masons. They say they hate Masonry and intend to bear their testimony against it. But we must come back again to Amaziah. What could he have done without the help of the people. They may have have grumbled when commanded to lug these helpless gods from Seir to Jerusalem, but little did the king care so that they bent their hesitating backs to the shameful work. So these Freemason preachers and others have triumphed and their "Jah-Baal-On" is kept on his feet while the complaining people honor with their presence the calls to hear their sermons, pay their money to support their extravagance and idolatry, and vote on their side at the polls. If the people will not stand up straight, like Shedrach, Meshach, and Abednego, little do these artful men care about their grumbling. They have their services, and their craft prospers.

An Appeal to Christian Reformers.

BY ALPHA BETA.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

The Scripture enjoins it on the Christian as a bounden duty to not "be partaker of other men's sins; keep thyself pure." 1 Tim. v. 22. But this cannot be done by associating with those guilty of sin, in an organized body, but according to this other Scripture: "From such turn away." 2 Tim. iii. 5. This cannot mean turning away from the world, for in the world, in the Scripture sense, they have no form of godliness, but by all construction and exigesis, the command is to turn away from ecclesiastic organizations which hold the truth in unrighteousness, by ungodly practices and sinful habits. In taking this ground we countenance and practice no "schism" in the body of Christ, we only plead for a discrimination between the body of Christ and the body of the man of sin—the world, discerning between the upright and the immoral, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not. This is the only course left to the conscientious Christian, for by personal connection, influence, and by your money, you are not only bidding the wrong-doer to go on and prosper, but you are positively helping to sustain those organizations, that are lulling thousands to a worse than lethargic drowse on the slippery steps whose slope is towards the gates of perdition, and deceiving them by holding out to them a delusion, pleasing to the carnal mind, that no danger is to be apprehended in such innocent pleasures as are to be found in secretism!! When you do this, having full knowledge of the facts, can you escape the personal guilt of adopting this sin as your own, by taking it under your personal protection? Before you cast this from you as unworthy of your consideration, will you not consent to try this question by the light of reason, and the clear teachings of the Word of God? While remaining in connection, or fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, are you, indeed a Christian, consecrated and set wholly apart from sin? Are you like your type and head, "separate from sinners?" Have you withdrawn yourself from such as walk disorderly? Have you made your ecclesiastic connection paramount to all other connections and associations? Do you still hold fellowship and communion with those with whom you despise affiliation and co-operation politically? Do you not make your politics more sacred than your religion by retaining a membership in organizations which admit those characters whom you will not vote for or with? Or, do you love association with all its known impurities in theory and practice so strongly that you cannot give them up, withdraw and separate from them, so that you may in reality be a witness for Christ and the purity of his doctrine and practice? Remember Christ said, "Whoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." This can only be done by separating ourselves from every unholy and unhallowed association, affiliation and condition, no matter what the separation may cost our feelings and sympathies. "Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the Gospels; but he shall receive now a hundred fold in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions, and in the world (time) to come eternal life." Remember, too, that there is no necessity which can avail you for remaining where you are, and thus sanctioning, countenancing and promoting iniquity. Your political action shows that you are opposed to secretism, but your fellowship and communion in ecclesiastic organizations, admitting, retaining and apologizing for them shows that you are unequally yoked together, which is forbidden in the Scriptures; the whole drift of the teachings of the Scriptures is that opposites in theory and practice should not be tolerated in ecclesiastic organizations which have the sanction of Jesus Christ, or which have a warrant for their existence from him. There is a blessing promised to, and realized in properly organized ecclesiastic bodies, but when there is a promiscuous gathering into one organization, unbelievers, righteousness (morality), and unrighteousness (immorality), light (knowledge) and darkness (ignorance), Christ and Belial, believers and infidels, there never was, is not now and never can be any blessing realized, because there is none promised, and he that teaches there is a blessing realized is a deceiver and those who believe that they do realize a blessing in such an organization are deceived. If a blessing really attaches to such an association, God would not require a "separation" therefrom, and if such organizations are for his honor and the promotion of his glory, God would not command us to "come out," nor would he offer an equivalent for the blessing looked for in the true organization, as he does to those who in obedience to his command to come out from among them, and separate from such forbidden and unholy alliances. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you and will be a Father unto you and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. vi. 14–18. What a blessing promised! not in the organization but out of it. Will you take God at his word? or will you for the sake of association cast it behind your back, which is to go without the blessed relationship of Father and Son, between yourself and the Lord Almighty? Your action, if you choose to remain in your present unhallowed connection, is joining together in the holiest and most sacred bonds that which God has forbidden to be joined together. It is spiritual fornication and idolatry. Do not the times demand that your whole influence religiously and politically should be given to the cause of right and truth, to Christ? Do you not for interest, or convenience, or reputation's sake withhold part of the price, while you voluntarily cripple yourself by associations with opposites in theory and practice?

It is a Bible truth that he who loveth association, interest or possession more than Christ, or his truth, is unworthy of Christ. Matt. x. 37–38. But again, from 2 Cor. vi. 14–18 we find that such organizations have forfeited their charter to be organizations of Jesus Christ, and when they have thus forfeited it the true Christian should no longer remain in its connection, nor recognize its claims; or God would not command them to "come out from among them and be ye separate." Come out and separate from what? Not from the true organization, but from one which had forfeited its claim by departing from the conditions of the charter, and in admitting into its membership those whom the charter debarred, and thereby constructively denying the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ, who gave the charter, and whosoever will deny Christ before men, him will Christ also deny before his Father who is in heaven. Matt. x. 33. See also Rev. ii 5, in the address to the angel of the church at Ephesus: "Remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place except thou repent;" the organization shall be broken up; this never would be threatened against an organization living in accordance with its charter. Nor will Jesus Christ spew out of his mouth any organization that truly conforms to the conditions of the charter given by him as he positively says he will do with the organization at Laodicea. Rev. iii. 16; and again in Rev. xviii. 4, 5. The same principle is unequivocally put forth—Christ ones—God's people must separate from organizations which have forfeited their charter by becoming the "habitation of devils and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage for every unclean and hateful bird." Rev. xviii. 2. "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partaker of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Babylon, whatever it may represent, must have been organized in purity, or she could not have become what she is here described to be, and must have forfeited her charter by a deviation from the conditions of the charter, when God commands his people to come out, before she receives her plagues for her sins. The only safe rule to follow in regard to separation from sin is to withdraw from the organization as soon as you find sin admitted, retained and justified or apologized for by the organization, for you know not how soon the plagues may be administered, and the candlestick be removed, or spewed out of his mouth, and by being found in the connection you will become partaker of her sins. But does God cast off his people by removing the candlestick, spewing it out of his mouth, or withdrawing from the organization and letting it fill its cup of iniquity by presumptuously disregarding the conditions of the charter? By no means. But as it was in the case of the Jewish organization, we find God did not cast off his people whom he foreknew (Rom. xi. 2), although the organization was cast off; so we find it to be the case in the Corinthian church; instead of casting off his sons and daughters, he commands them to separate and come out, attaching to their obedience a promise, and so too in the case of the Laodicean organization, to his people he says, "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me." Rev. iii. 20. There is evidently an obstacle in the way of the communication of the blessing promised, the "door must be opened" which is obedience to his voice, and from the fact that the organization is to be spewed out on account of its irregularities and disobedience to the requirements of the charter, we think we are justifiable in coming to this conclusion, that the opening of the door is the cutting loose from, and coming out of forbidden associations and unhallowed alliances, and what seems to us to strengthen our position is the promise attached to the opening the door, being so nearly related to that attached to the "come out from among them and be ye separate," addressed to the Corinthians. The least sin admitted and retained in an organization, eventually works a forfeiture to the claim of being a Christian organization, "for a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." "Therefore, purge out the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump." 1 Cor. v. 6, 7; Gal. v. 9.

In closing, we will present but a single point which we believe to be in the strictest harmony with the scope and tenor of the foregoing views. We are commanded by the Lord Jesus Christ to withdraw from every brother that walketh disorderly and not after the tradition received of Paul, and nothing is more plain than if an organization persistently, and after remonstrance, refuses to put away a disorderly member that organization herself walketh disorderly, and should herself be withdrawn from. And we have the same authority for shunning and discountenancing such organizations, that we have for withdrawing therefrom.

Is it in accordance with the charter given by Jesus Christ to proclaim to sinners, that there is another way whereby they can be saved, than through the Lord Jesus Christ. Secretism does this; and in doing so proves itself to be anti-Christian in its aims and tendencies. From such withdraw thyself.

God Approves of Opposition to Oath-bound Secrecy.

BY A. D. FREEMAN.

The notice in the Standard, of the Princeton College revival, which I believe immediately succeeded the action taken by the faculty against college secret societies, reminds me of a coincident, or succession of events in the Baptist church in Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., of which my father was pastor for about thirty years.

Directly after the abduction and murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan my father who had a few years before been drawn into the fraternity, and left them on taking the third degree, because of the un-Christian nature of the order, now came out and openly renounced and publicly endorsed Morgan's expose, as did many other Christians and Christian ministers in that region.

The Adams church was with him in sentiment, and immediately took strong ground against Masonry. They received into fellowship fourteen excluded members from a neighboring church (the Rodman Baptist church) whose only offence was that they were too conscientious to remain in fellowship with men of that order after the revelations made. The church excluding the aforesaid members was ruled by the fraternity, and joined in the prophetic cry against the Adams church, and its pastor, that they would come to naught. The following shows how little successful they were in bringing the maledictions of Heaven upon the Adams church and pastor, by their prophesy.

Directly after this position taken by the church, and almost simultaneously with this malign prophesy, God from on high, put his seal of approbation upon their action by pouring out his spirit upon them, and by bringing in scores upon scores into the church by conversion. Then for years, revival succeeded revival until this little country church numbered over five hundred members.

Well, about the time of this gracious visitation, the Rodman church began to wane, and as one rose, the other went down. And now for many years the last named church has had no existence. Its place of worship became the place of shelter for brutes of the field and probably a roost for bats and a brooding place for swallows. So God approves of anti-secrecy and disapproves of oath-bound secrecy. Let all interested take warning.

Brigham Young's "Celestial Masonry."

Dear Cynosure:—Of all the wonders of this most wonderful age not the least among them all is the great variety of progeny which Freemasonry has brought forth to corrupt the lives of mankind. From revelations made by Mrs. Ann Eliza Young, Brigham Young's nineteenth wife, we can see that Mormonism is a very near kin of the old hand-maid.

For the benefit of your many readers who have not seen the book which Mrs. Young has recently written, I send you a few extracts, giving an account of her initiation into the secrets of Mormonism which she received when sixteen years of age.

She says, page 35:—"I had always been taught to anticipate the time when I should receive my endowment as the most important epoch of my religious life when I should be taken fully into the bosom of the church." After the ordinances of baptism and the laying on of hands or confirmation, at which time the gift of the Holy Ghost is received and innumerable other blessings, she says, page 355: "The person having reached this high plane in the kingdom of God on earth, is considered properly prepared to receive the higher and holier ordinances, which are to be kept entirely secret, and are accompanied by the strongest and most binding covenant, which cannot be broken without incurring the severest penalties. The endowment rites are nothing more nor less than a drama, founded partially upon the Bible, but more upon Milton's 'Paradise Lost.' It represents the Creation, the Fall, and the final Restoration of man to his first glory. When I entered the Endowment House I was made first of all, to take off my shoes, for the place was too holy to be desecrated with outside dust."

After the act of the drama——"We were then given certain signs, passwords, and grips, arranged in a circle and told to kneel; the women were also required to cover their faces with their veils, then we were bidden to raise our right hands heavenward and take the oath of implicit obedience and inviolable secrecy. The women promised entire subjection to their husbands' will; the men that they would take no woman as a wife without the express permission of the priesthood.

We all promised that we would never question the commands of our authorities in the church, but would grant them instant obedience. We swore also to entertain an everlasting enmity to the United States government, and to disregard its laws so far as possible. We swore that we would use every exertion to avenge the death of our Prophet Joseph Smith, and his brother Hyrum upon the gentile race, by whose means they were brought to their unhappy fate, and to teach our children to foster this spirit of revenge also; and last of all, we swore never to reveal the mysteries of the Endowment House.

The breaking of this latter oath was to be followed by the most horrible penalties; torture of the most excruciating kind was to be inflicted upon any one who should disregard this oath. His bowels should be torn from him while he was yet alive; his throat should be cut from ear to ear; his heart and his tongue cut out, and in the world to come he should inherit eternal damnation. There should be, nor could be no chance of salvation for him.

These promised penalties are by no means mere forms of words given merely to add impressiveness to the ceremony. The "Blood Atonement" shows that they are carried out, and hundreds of cases could be cited in addition to those already given to prove that the Endowment House penalties are by no means dead letters in the Mormon church law."

Farther on she says: "Another grip was taught us and we then received the 'third degree,' and were ready to 'pass through the veil.' It is claimed that the mysterious rites were taken from Masonry, and that the endowments are a direct outgrowth of that secret society. Brigham Young delights, I know, to speak of it as 'Celestial Masonry,' but I am sure all good Masons would repudiate it and its teachings.

In regard to the oaths of secrecy which I took at that time, I do not consider that I am doing anything wrong in breaking them; I am sure I shall in no way be held accountable for so doing. I took them because I felt that I must. I did not know what I promised until after the oath was given me while I listened with uplifted hand. I was bound to secrecy, but I feel that right and justice demand that I should break these bonds. I consider it a duty to expose, as far as I possibly can, the wickedness, cruelty, blasphemy and disloyalty of the leaders of the deluded Mormon people."

Who says that Mrs. Young has not done right in exposing the enormities of the Mormon church? Who but Freemasons or their jacks will say that she is a purjured wretch, and should receive the full penalty of the obligation taken by her. P. B.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker, of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick, of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the American people the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

The Sixth Article of the Platform.

Dear Bro. K:—I notice with much pleasure that the character of war is being discussed in the Cynosure. This is right, for when we reflect that at least seventy-five per cent of all the taxes paid by Christian nations are for war purposes; that vast standing armies are kept in enforced idleness in times of peace, while the toiling millions are taxed for their support; and that crime, suffering and death follow always in the wake of war, it surely becomes us as disciples of the Prince of Peace to enquire whether the spirit and practice of war can be reconciled with the spirit of the Gospel. That all war is necessarily wrong I infer from the following considerations:

1st. War demands a blind compliance with the commands of another and denies to the soldier any right of private judgment, or of conscience. He is sworn to obey his superior officer and the penalty of disobedience may be death. The first Napoleon once ordered a surgeon to kill with poison 400 of his own wounded soldiers. He had no option, but must obey. Another time he ordered 1200 Turkish prisoners to be shot in cold blood, and the soldiers were compelled to execute the order. It may be said that it is always presumed that military orders will be in accordance with the laws of war; but are the laws of war always according to the laws of God? And who is to decide whether a military order is according to the laws of war? Surely not the common soldier. He has only to obey. The more perfectly he is divested of all self-directing power and the more completely he becomes a machine in the hands of his officer, the better soldier he is. Now this is wrong, for I am bound to know that what I am about to do is right in the sight of God. The command of no officer, civil or military, can justify me in wrong-doing. God has said, "Neither yield ye your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin; but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God." The doctrine of the "Higher Law" forbids taking the oath of a soldier.

2d. The Word of God enjoins truthfulness, candor and sincerity. War, on the contrary, enjoins dissimulation, hypocrisy, and lying. Strategy is said to be the soul of war. The greatest generals have been the greatest strategists. And what is strategy but simply adroit lying? The general that can make his enemy believe that he intends to pass to the right when he actually intends to turn to the left; that he intends to beseige one city while he is planning to surprise another, is an accomplished strategist and a successful general; and yet what is this but consummate hypocrisy and lying? Every one is expected to participate in this cunning craftiness whereby men lie in wait to deceive, and this is held to be just, because they are our enemies. Now the Word of God says, "Wherefore putting away lying, speak ye every man truth with his neighbor." Eph. iv. 25. Again, "Lie not one to another, seeing ye have put off the old man with his deeds;" (Col. iii. 9;) and it nowhere adds, "Except he should be an enemy, in which case ye may hate him, lie to him and kill him."

3d. War teaches that the end justifies the means, and that we may do evil that good may come. God says of such that "Their damnation is just." War begets hate. It has taken 100 years to get over hating the British, who are our kindred in race and religion. The Gospel enjoins love to our enemies. Christ prayed for his murderers. When he was reviled he reviled not again. John said to the soldiers, "Do violence to no man." War makes violence the business of life. Paul says, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." War says, "Deprive him of food and drink if possible and kill him if you can." War says, "Overcome evil with evil; blood for blood; stroke for stroke." God's Word says, "Be not overcome of evil, but rather overcome evil with good." H. H. Hinman.

I am a strong Anti-mason. My desire is to see secret societies go down. I hope they will not add to the platform so many things as to prevent its being acceptable. I agree with our candidate for Vice-president, Mr. Kirkpatrick, in his letter of acceptance.

Walker of Illinois, and other able speakers will be present. Let the auxiliary associations, churches and neighborhoods favoring the objects of the convention see that delegates be chosen to represent them, and all unite in defraying expenses of delegates.

Systematic and sworn secrecy is a an enemy to the church, state, and the social compact, and must be defeated by the force of truth and the grace of Him who in secret said nothing. Let prayer be offered that the convention be blessed with abundant success.

Delegates from the south and north will stop at Ely Station, which is three miles east of Western, on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids, and Minnesota R. R. Those from the east and west will come to Cedar Rapids, and then to Ely Station, where conveyance will be furnished to Western. M. S. Drury.

Pres. of State Anti-secrecy Association.

North-eastern Pennnsylvania Association.

The quarterly meeting of this body held at Grangerville on the 2d inst. notwithstanding disappointments occasioned by misapprehensions was a success. The delegation from Bradford county was good as was also the attendance of people from the surrounding community.

The afternoon session was opened with devotional exercises, and a conference in which brethren Pickett of Jessup and Canfield of Middleton, expressed very clear and decided convictions against secret societies. Most of the afternoon, however, was taken up, as to time, by the persons who were expected to speak, J. W. Raynor and A. L. Post, the latter speaking more at length. They had lying before them some eight volumes of standard Masonic and Odd-fellowship works, from which they drew their proofs, and upon which they based their conclusions. From these they showed that Masonry and Odd-fellowship embrace religions which in all their rituals of worship are adverse to Christianity.

Among many proofs the following were made prominent: These orders embrace Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, Buddhists, and the devotees of all the religions of the world. All these are required or expected to worship together at a common altar.

The Christian's Bible is put upon a par or common level with the Alcoran and all other books looked upon as sacred by the religionists of the world. These are all symbols, and only symbols, like the square and compass, the other two "great lights" in Masonry. They are rather inferior to these in that the sacred books must be changed to suit the country where the lodge exists, from Bible to Alcoran, vice versa, etc., etc., while the other symbols, the square and compass, etc., continue "lights" in all countries—upon all altars except the Christian's.

These orders embrace, in their religions, the high priesthood in Masonry, a high priesthood after the order of Melchisedec, on earth, while the Christian's High Priest is an unchangeable priesthood, having offered himself once for all, has sat down forever at the right hand of the Father in heaven, having abolished all others. They exclude or leave the name of Christ out of their forms of prayer, or, as in Masonry, strike out his name from all Scripture quotations.

The time of the evening session, which continued nearly three hours, was mostly occupied by a very able speech by Mr. Raynor. He gave a brief but comprehensive expose of some seven rites in Masonry, including the York, Memphis and Scottish; and conducted the "Rev. Mr. Jones" from his half nude, "hoodwinked," and "cable-towed" condition in the ante-room, into the "Entered Apprentice" degree, passed him through the "Fellow Craft" degree, and raised him to the sublime degree of "Master Mason," giving as he went along, the signs, passwords, grips, etc., etc. Odd-fellowship, grange, and Good Templarism, and the boasted "antiquity" of Masonry, were also considered. All except the representatives of the orders appeared highly entertained, and not at all in a hurry to have the lecture close.

Report of Work from the Pennsylvania Agent.

Uniondale, Pa., March 15, 1876.

Since my last short statement of work, I have given another lecture at the Washington School-house, which is located near the hospitable home of Samuel Clark. On two following evenings, Thursday and Friday, Feb. 17th and 18th, the people of the Olmstead neighborhood gathered in the Bethel Baptist church edifice, and gave candid and appreciative attention to remarks respecting the evil principles and tendencies of secret orders, This body of believers have a very neat and tasteful house of worship, free from the too common encumberance of debt; they have earnest, self-denying Christian workers among them, and they are exceedingly united in keeping aloof from connection and sympathy with "dark-lantern" fraternities.

On Sabbath following tarried with and preached for Bro. Callender at Green Grove. On Tuesday evening following, being at Waverly to see our good brethren Parker, Reynolds and Rev. G. R. Harvey, was called on to speak in a public meeting assembled to commemorate Washington's birthday, and this was a pleasant task, after hearing the "Farewell address" read, a paper abounding in instruction and patriotic, Christian thought. On Wednesday evening, the 23d ult., after joining in the social prayer-meeting with our Free Methodist friends in Waverly, I lectured agreeably to previous announcement on the "Grange," its origin, aims, leaders, and false claims, and antagonism to business, social and Christian interests. I enclose also Bro. Post's account of our recent quarterly meeting. Yours,

J. W. Raynor.

Footfalls Among the Wolverines.

Dear K:—At my last writing, the "Footfalls" had ceased for a while, as my voice feeling itself abused by hard service during a cold, had refused to come to my call; and so an enforced silence came upon me for a few days which I whiled away with Harvey Lane, Esq., and his family in Girard, Branch Co. These friends, some years since, were members of a church of which I was once pastor, in Eastern New York. Here I found a warm greeting, and much needed quiet and rest.

For three days after reaching this snug harbor, I did not leave the door-yard; keeping myself as quiet as possible; but I had not been there 24 hours ere the myrmidons of secrecy found it out, and seemed fearful and uneasy, and many inquiries assailed my friends as to what were my intentions. On the Sabbath, finding myself improving, I consented to preach for my Baptist friends, some of whom were evidently pleased to learn that an Anti-mason could hold two separate ideas in his head at the same time.

After tarrying here a little over a week, I left on Tuesday, March 7th, for Jackson, where I hoped to find, or at least, to hear from my friend Remington, who, it seems had left Fenton a few hours earlier to hunt me up. The story of his travels would furnish an interesting chapter for a romance; but I leave it for him to write. Suffice it to say we met again on the Sabbath following in Portland, Ionia Co., ready for new achievements.

I left your readers in my last at Homer.

Here we had two successful meetings, though the condition of the roads was such as to prevent the people from coming in from the country. My first lecture passed off quietly; but during the second, a Knight Templar suggested that I say something about the Templar degrees, as "Christ" could certainly be found there. To gratify him I repeated that portion of the fifth libation where the candidate refers indeed, to the "Saviour," and invokes a double damnation on himself, if he ever violates his Masonic obligations. This seemed satisfactory, so I went on. Before opening up the secret work I gave way a moment for Mr. French to call for a collection to pay for use of the hall. On this our chivalric Knight Templar sprang to his feet and requested his Masonic friends to contribute freely, not only for this object but to pay our expenses at the hotel. Mr. French immediately proposed that this unique champion of ours pass the hat on his side of the house, which he immediately did, to the no small amusement of the crowd. The Masons, however, could not have been largely on the "give," for not enough was realized to meet the claims for the hall.

I saw this specimen of Republican knighthood next day in the store of Mr. French, and had a rather pleasant interview with him. He gave some amusing incidents of the meetings, one of which related to a granger who sat by his side, and seemed highly delighted at the hits he was getting. At length, he says: "I told him, 'You may perhaps get a rap yourself before the speaker gets through;' and sure enough," said he, "when you did give your thrust at the grange, he was mad in a moment, and I turned the tables on him." He afterwards said, "I forgive you for all you have said about Masonry, for your lashing the grange so handsomely."

My next lectures were given in the town of Sherman,

St. Joseph Co., not far from Sturgis. Here I had crowded houses, and at the close of my last lecture I felt some one pulling my coat. On looking around I saw a man who sat on my left while speaking, and whom I had picked out for a Mason, who, leaning towards me said: "You have told the truth!" "Ah," said I, "you have been there, have you?" "Yes," said he. I asked how many degrees he had taken. To which he replied, "Three." He also subscribed for the Cynosure for a year. We went from this place to

on the L. S. & M. S. Road, and here gave two lectures in the Spiritualist's meeting-house. This town is a perfect hot-bed of secrecy. Here are Blue lodge, chapter, council and commandery of Masons, with Eastern Star for the duped wives of the craft; the lodge, Encampment, and Rebecca lodge for Odd-fellows and their lady relatives; the grange, etc. These were well represented at our meetings and were well behaved. I was informed, however, after the meetings were over, that during the day preceding my last lecture the Masons had been threatening to take me up on my statements respecting the origin of Masonry, by bringing in and reading from a paper, showing that their order did date back of 1717; but discretion proving the "better part of valor," the attack was not made; and I knew not of my narrow escape until some hours after the danger was passed. I hope the next time I go there, they will bring out the old paper. I promise them a rich time. The Masons next find us at

PORTLAND,

Ionia Co. Here arrangements were made for me to preach in the Baptist pulpit on Sabbath, the 13th inst., of which extended notice had been given; but in this church were two or three Masons, and the church was about erecting a meeting-house, and Masons had subscribed something! Late Saturday evening our friends were informed that I could not preach there, as I was unknown to them, and might be a "carpet bagger,"—they had been fooled once—did'nt want to be again, etc., and so Dr. C. Smith, a Mason, would read a sermon, which he did, and refused to read a notice for my lectures. This gentleman did not come to my lectures; but sent me an invitation to call on him, to which I failed to respond. Here I gave three lectures which were attended by nightly growing crowds, until the house would seat no more. Here I learned that one of the founders of the lodge in this place was simply a "Book Mason," familiarly known as "Grumpty Moore," who was at one time W. Master of the lodge. At length it leaked out that Moore had never taken the oaths. Here was a nice "kettle of fish" to be sure. Immediately a special meeting was called, and "Grumpty" was requested to take the obligations. This he refused to do. They finally threatened to Morganize him. This made the old man mad, and he defied, and then quit them and got up an open lodge, which he run side by side, for a long time with the secret one, much to the disgust of the oath-bound gentry. After the old man left the lodge, they were obliged to send off to get men to come and run the work of initiation, as the old book Mason was the only one in the lodge sufficiently posted to do it well. O, boasting Masonry! O, boasted secrecy!

GRAND LEDGE.

On Thursday and Friday evenings, March 16th and 17th, we were at this place. Here a fierce snow storm on both evenings prevented large congregations; but I spoke on both evenings to quite a number. The last evening I closed with my usual challenge to the craft. After some delay the M. E. pastor rose and said he could not sit still after such a challenge, as silence would be construed as giving consent, etc. I asked if he proposed to deny any point I had made. He said he did—called for Macoy's Manual, from which he proposed to traverse at least a dozen of my points in five minutes. But alas! he could not find what he wanted; but challenged me to a discussion, the next evening. As I was expected in the S. W. part of the State at that time, I could not meet him then; but promised to at some future time agreed on. He then made some general remarks among which was one to this effect: "Why, you made me appear ridiculous among the people where I've got to live!" I replied that I thought myself my remarks were open to that objection—especially as I had in exposing the third degree, supposed a minister on his bare knees, breasts bare, etc., taking the obligation not to "violate the chastity of a brother Master Mason's wife, etc." He thought some one must have been posting me with regard to him; to which I replied that his name had not been mentioned to me by any one. He took exceptions to my calling my candidate the Rev. Mr. Facing—Both—Ways, as though he acknowledged himself the original of the picture which I drew. If that discussion comes off you shall, if life is spared, hear more anon from J. L. BARLOW.

School-house Discussion with an Odd-fellow.

PLEASANT RUN, Ind., March 7, 1876.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

We had a slight ruffling of the waters in one of our school-houses last week. One of the craft of the I. O. O. F. was challenged by our friend T. B. Galloway to discuss the question, "Are secret societies wrong?" The challenge was accepted, and like the Goliath of old, the O. F. came forth trusting in his own strength and in that wondrous morality, etc., of the lodge. He showed, however, (poor man) that he was bound. His assertions were these: "Secret orders do take one part of the Bible, the authentic part. If a man is a true Odd-fellow he does not need the New Testament. Take men into the order which could not be got into the church and hold them there on their honor. That there is more love, friendship, truth, etc., in the lodge than in all the churches in the world. "Let the churches drift away!"

The old argument that the works quoted by Galloway were the works of a traitor were brought out; his concluding remark being, "If I had to give up either the lodge or religion, I say let the latter go." These are a few specimens of the infidel utterances made by this disciple of the lodge. His sayings were fairly met and fully answered. A. R. M.

J. T. Kiggins in Marion Co., Ind.

WEST NEWTON, Ind., }
3rd month, 10th, 1876. }

Editor Cynosure:

On the 5th and 6th of this month we were so fortunate as to have three lectures given by the State Agent, John T. Kiggins; in the first of which it was so clearly shown that Freemasonry is contrary to Christianity, that all who heard him could not fail to be convinced of the great truth; unless they were of the number that are blind because they will not see their error, since they so dearly love to foster the delusive institution which they surely must know will be their ultimate ruin.

In the second he explained to us how a man is initiated into the first degree of Odd-fellowship; and in the third told us of the degrading process he has to undergo to become a Master Mason, enough to disgust the very lowest of the human race, much less to be tolerated and practiced by those who profess to to be followers of the Lamb of God. He also stirred the minds of the citizens of Valley Mills three miles north of here by giving them two lectures.

These discourses have done great good in awaking the people and causing them to think on these subjects as they have never thought before. May the blessings of heaven attend the labors of this worthy brother and all others who are engaged likewise, is my prayer. Sincerely, ANTI-MASON.

A New Laborer in a New Field.

THOMPSON, March 16, 1876.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

I send you the following: The young men of Eastford, Conn., have had a lyceum the past winter. About three weeks ago they had the following questions: "Resolved that secret societies are beneficial to Christianity." One of those who were to take a part in the debate on the negative, wrote for me to come to help him, but not being able to go, I did the next best thing. I wrote him that I would come and give them two talks; one on the Religion of Masonry, and one on the oaths and obligations. In the lyceum one of the judges was a Mrson, and one was the son of a Mason, of course it was decided that secret societies were beneficial to Christianity. This caused some who could not accept the decision to write me to come. So on asking the pastor of the church if he was willing they should have a lecture in the church he assented. Then he asked what the subject was, and on being told, he at once opposed it. He is a strong Mason, but finding some of the people so determined he did give the appointment, and on Monday and Tuesday evenings, the 13th and 14th of March, I tried to show to good audiences the religion of Masonry, and it was like throwing hot shot among the craft, and it was still worse for them on Tuesday night. Some of the stewards of the church told me they should pay no more for the support of a Masonic minister, and I was told that the best men in the place are now ready to oppose the Masons. I think we ought to have lectures in all our towns. The only trouble is, the people do not know what Freemasonry is; and when they do know this they will crush it out of existence. May the Lord hasten the day when it will be done.

Yours truly, J. S. PERRY.

A Fact.

"No Mason can lawfully interrupt another Mason in the enjoyment of his life limbs, body, health, or reputation.' —Scott's Keystone of the Masonic Arch, page 139. But he can lawfully interrupt a cowan or profane, in the enjoyment of his life, limbs, body, health and reputation, can he not Past Grand Master Scott of Mississppi? The records of the courts of this country and every other where Masonry has gained sufficient footing to make herself felt will verify the fact.

Shall this engine of the devil, this monster called Freemasonry be allowed to stand and inflict untold injuries upon the uninitiated portion of mankind, simply because her enormities have not been carefully and properly brought before the public and their power aroused for her annihilation? If the truth was known outside of the murders, slanders, and other vile misdeeds of a serious character, she constantly perpetrates, she probably filches from the un-masonic public of the United States, annually, under the grip and sign, through the courts of the country money enough to pay the current expenses of ten thousand such newspapers as the Cynosure every year of their existence, and yet the great body of the people seem to move on totally unconcerned at the scoundrelism. Yet there comes for all misdeeds a day of reckoning, and Masonry will have hers as certainly as the Eleusinian Mystics got theirs. J. H. H. WOODWARD.

The Lodge and Holiness at War.

Brother Simon Riley, a grocer of New Albany, Ind., tells of an incident illustrative of the inconsistency of Christians standing in connection with Masonry, as follows: In August, 1874, Mr. Karl Simons, a member of the M. E. church, came to this city to engage in business. He professed and no doubt enjoyed the grace of sanctification. He was an earnest worker fo the promotion of a higher state of Christian life, and held meetings for this purpose in the M. E. churches, and in his own house. His wife was heartily with him in his labor of love. He was induced to join the Masons by a brother in the church professing the same experience. His wife's health failing, he moved east to Newark, New Jersey. From there he wrote Bro. Riley that it had been made manifest to his mind and his wife's that the lodge was no place for a Christian, especially one professing holiness of heart. That Masonry is "evil, only evil, and that continually;" that it is "earthly, sensual, devilish." That his reason for joining at first was, that he could not suppose it to be anything but good as the brother who induced him to join professed sanctification.

Bro. Riley gave this letter to the brother who had thus been recruiting for Masonry, to peruse, and he burned it.

Every effort to throw light on the subject is quickly smothered by lodgemen, in the church and out. But such men as Bros. Riley and Simons, abiding in the truth, will by God's blessing be efficient in spite of them.

New Albany is under the influence and control largely of whiskey and Masonry, notwithstanding it is called "city of churches." But the churches are almost powerless to do good and dare not to testify against any of their most deadly enemies.

JOHN T. KIGGINS.

How the Lodge would Manage the U. B. Churches in Virginia.

STRIBLING SPRINGS, Augusta Co., Va.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

I have been reading your paper for eighteen months. It came to me through a minister in Maryland. After reading it he sent it to a friend of his in Virginia, and that friend, after reading, handed it over to me, and when I got through with it I handed it over to others, and in consequence I sent for the Cynosure and am now getting it direct from the office, and others from this vicinity will send for it soon. My advice is to all who take the Cynosure after reading it to hand or send it to others; there is no telling what amount of good may be accomplished by this plan, for there are hundreds and thousands of good, honest people who are perfectly ignorant on the subject of oath-bound secrecy, who, when enlightened, would be good workers in the reform.

We have but few Freemasons here in this vicinity, but wherever you find either them or their jacks, they are trying to rule either in state or in church. I will give you a case that has come directly under my own observation.

We had two preachers on this, the Rockingham circuit, (United Brethren), last year the senior preacher, or preacher in charge, was a loyal man to his church, and carried out his church discipline without fear, favor or affection; but the junior preacher has been reading a little rebel sheet printed somewhere in Pennsylvania that calls itself the United Brethren Tribune and has become so diseased with secret-phobia that I fear his case is mortal. He failed in getting into the Virginia Conference last year on account of his sentiments on secrecy. This year he did not make an effort to join, knowing it would be hopeless, and left for some other parts; but not before he used what little influence he had directly against his colleague and the discipline of the church he professes to belong to. He wrote a petition for several appointments to be signed by the members and to be presented to the stationing committee of the Virginia Conference, to send them a preacher that will not carry out the secrecy clause in the discipline, but only on one appointment was the petition carried around, and that by a brother of the apron brotherhood who by some unfair means has crept into the church. Out of a membership of eighty or more members he succeeded in getting twenty-five names; five of them were forged and others over persuaded, to use their own words. Now this brother of the apron brotherhood had the audacity to carry this petition to the Virginia Conference and handed it over to the Bishop with the expectation no doubt of ruling the whole circuit of a membership of some four or five hundred members. I am not surprised at H. W. Clark saying that it is a well-known fact that three members of the church and the minister, belonging to the Freemasons, can and will, when they see fit, rule the church. Please send me some blanks and I will send you some subscribers for the Cynosure.

Lodge Authority Questioned.—What Earnest Women can do.

LA PORTE, Ind.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Allow me through your columns to ask a few questions.

1st. By what authority does the Masonic lodge administer its oaths and ceremonies to the candidate received?

2nd. Is there any validity or binding force in those oaths, considering the circumstances under which they are taken?

The candidate, as he enters the lodge-room is asked if he comes of his own free will, etc. Then, deprived of his sight by "hood-wink," stripped of most of his clothing, with a rope about his neck, robbed of his manhood, self-respect, and freedom, his lips sealed and conscience fettered, in a kneeling posture, he is prepared to receive the oath. The administrator, holding the point of his sword at the left breast of the kneeling man, reads the oath and orders him to repeat it. If he objects he is told that he must take it or he cannot leave the room alive. Now I ask, is the oath, thus administered and received, any more binding than that extorted by the midnight robber, who should, with pistol at my head, make me swear never to betray him or take any step towards his arrest?

By what right has the lodge applied the death penalty to perjury; if perjury it can be called? God gave no such commandment. If this is worthy of notice will some of your correspondents please reply.

I do hope our ladies will take hold of this matter in earnest. Any intelligent lady with a modest address, with Ronayne's chart in her hand can silence any Mason, and do much towards saving our young men and ministers, that have been drawn into this trap of the evil one.

Yours as ever for the truth and no fellawohip with "lodge religion."

C. G. COFFIN.

Sinful Oaths.

PRAIRIE DU SAC, Sauk Co., Wis.
March 15, 1876.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Enclosed please find one dollar towards the fund for the Publishing House. Having spent the greater portion of my life in England, I knew but little about Masons or Masonry until I came to this country. What I have learned of the system here has led me to believe it to be a high crime and misdemeanor against the God of heaven, an injury to the nation and a curse to the church. Nearly twenty years ago an aged Presbyterian minister who died at Rushville, in Schuyler Co., Ill., told me he had been a Mason, and was nominated to an office (perhaps I do not use the right word here) which, if he had accepted he would have been bound to protect his brother officer under all circumstances, murder and treason not accepted.

This morning in my reading the 14th chapter of Matthew, giving an account of the murder of John the Baptist, I was struck with the following "instruction" on the 9th verse, "No oath can lay a man under obligations to do wrong. It is a sin to take such an oath and it is an additional sin to fulfil it." This is in the "New Testament with brief notes and instructions," published by the "American Tract Society," and is of course the opinion of those wise and good men who compose that Society. Yours truly,

C. H. SMITH.

OUR MAIL.

R. J. Thompson, Halsey, Oreg., writes:

"In these parts we are in favor of temperance, and many opposed to secrecy, but generally opposed as yet to separate political parties."

T. K. Bufkin, Lynnville, Ia., writes:

"I loaned some of my books and papers to a neighbor of mine who like myself believes the Bible is all the guide that man needs, leaving out all creeds and rituals, of lodge design. I wanted him to sign for the paper. Like many others he is a little fearful of what man may say. I am going to send for the paper for this man at my own expense, and wish I could send it to a thousand more. Hope I can send at least one dollar for the Carpenter Donation this month. I have finished my lecture of 70 pages legal cap, and delivered it once. Have another appointment nine miles north day, after to-morrow night. The points I have taken up are: 1. Origin of Freemasonry. 2. Their claims as a religious institution. 3. As a charitable institution. 4. Their misconduct and murders. 5. Quotations from their own papers and lectures. 6. Claims against the lodge by the most eminent men of our country. 7. Conclusions of the writer."

F. M. Culp, Homer, O., writes:

"I have talked with my young brother converts in the church and also with those who are out of the ark of safety, urging them to crowd out the idea of this fearful and degrading trash of Freemasonry which is keeping thousands and thousands without the love of God in their hearts."

W. H. Ames, Menomonie, Wis., writes:

"The influence of secrecy is truly appalling, and is carrying multitudes to ruin. Let go the shot and shell of truth against it, speaking the truth in love and without fear."

John Ball, Ulster, Ia., writes:

"I am more than ever convinced of the necessity of this reform being sustained by the followers of Jesus at the expense of rigid self-denial with energetic faith."

Wm. C. Herrington, Greenwood, Ill., writes:

"There is great need of light on the subject of secretism in Greenwich. The Botskill Baptist church that has stood for a century and fought boldly against secretism, is now seeing the times that try men's souls."

John Fait, Brimfield, O., writes:

"I have been trying some to get subscribers but have not made a business of it. It is hard work. I find that the people are indifferent on the subject; they don't feel interested in the secrecy question. I will get some subscribers yet if I can."

Faith and work always succeed.

Joel Williams, Majority Point, Ill., writes:

"I should blush to call myself a Christian and not support the cause so nobly and ably and advocated by the Christian Cynosure."

A. Simpson, Spring Green, Wis., writes:

"I would like to have a good lecture at this place to open the eyes of the blind that they may see. I am now in my seventy-sixth year and cannot do much, but I am with you in the cause."

Cannot one of the Wisconsin lecturers make it convenient to speak at this place.

Joseph White, Norwich, O., writes:

"Hope your excellent paper and the anti-secret cause may have great success."

Henry Pease, Scipio, Ind., writes:

"I am very frail and it hurts me badly to write. I am over 72 years old and have been engaged in the temperance cause when it was unpopu ar, and the anti-slavery cause, and am now an Anti-mason."

J. W. Baldridge, Cherry Fork, O., writes:

"I am nearly three score and ten. I was one among the first in our section that espoused the anti-slavery cause. I voted for James G. Burney, the first anti-slavery candidate. I also expect to be among the first to vote for the first anti-secrecy candidate for President of the United States. When the weather gets pleasant I intend to work for your paper and for the cause you espouse. It is not because we have no men in this section opposed to secrecy that I have not got new subscribers but because the people need waking up on that subject. If we could have more lectures I believe we could get more subscribers for the Cynosure. Mr. Dillon came down and lectured two nights in North Liberty to a large audience which had a good effect. But the fire soon goes out if it is not frequently stirred, but I am happy to see the people are fast waking up to the importance of the movement against secretism and all its dangerous influences."

P. P. Swan, Hadley, Mich., writes:

"There is a reformed Mason in this place who went down to the seventh degree, then reformation took place and he left. If I should go down to the third degree and be hoodwinked and haltered and led around the room and knocked down with a mallet, and placed in a corner with a mess of rubbish, such as old chairs and benches, dry-goods boxes and empty barrels, piled on top of me, I think I should make up my mind that reform would be advisable, but to continue down to the seventh degree and be hoodwinked and strung on a rope and jerked through the living arch, and then dragged headlong over the rugged road composed of old logs, stone heaps, and billets of wood, without a comforting word except "humble yourself, brother," I should then think of reform and should want some good reformed Mason to go and warn my brethren lest they come to this place of torment."

Emory Sprague, Hillhouse, O., writes:

"Many people are opposed to secret societies but are not willing to take any stand against them. I am not only opposed to all secret clans but to many popular errors supported by most of the churches, such as formalism, costliness in church buildings, dress, etc., which is all conformity to the world; but whatever becomes of the churches, it is my duty to fight against sin. Every true Christian should consider himself a reformer; I say more, every true Christian is a reformer, the salt of the earth, the light of the world, but if the salt have lost its savor and the light become darkness, what then I need not say."

Mrs. F. Collins, Lockport, Ill., writes:

"I have felt greatly interested in the reform in which you are engaged since the death of Morgan, and wish it great success, but have not been able to get any subscribers for the Cynosure. I lend it or give it to all who I can induce to read it. There are many who say they are opposed to secret societies. I think agitation and light are what is needed, and I hope the Lord will give success to your labors in the cause."

E. A. Seger, Delavan, Wis., writes:

"The leaven scattered by a few copies of your Christian paper manifestly has the life germ in it, and is at work. Inclosed you will find two new subscribers, one thoroughly anti-secret, the other the reverse; both excellent men, one putting his trust in God, the other in the arm of flesh yet desirous to know the truth. Pray earnestly that God's blessing and light from heaven may come with those papers. I hope we shall see nothing in the Cynosure but solid, truthful argument. See that God directs in all its parts."

Mrs. D. E. Will, Chillicothe, Ill., writes:

"This is a beautiful little town, inhabitants numbering about 1200. A fair percentage of the male portion belong either to the Freemasons or Odd-fellows lodge. We have three churches. The Methodist minister is an Anti-mason, but the Baptist and Episcopal clergymen are both Masons. We are in hopes sometime to have a call from one of your lecturers. Should one come he will find cordial friends and a hearty welcome at the Will House. May the good work progress."

Halsey Hulburt, Seville, O., writes:

"I think you can do more good by devoting a couple of pages of your paper in presenting Ronayne in his regalia, initiating poor, blind candidates, as in January 20th, than in any other way. Keep it standing for weeks."

"Freemasonry at a Glance" will appear in our paper in the issue of April 6th.

David Alter, Fairfield, O., writes:

"What is most sad here is that Christ's professed standard-bearers continue to wink at and fellowship the dark monster of this so-called enlightened age; but I feel encouraged to see that light is looming up through our beloved land, and pray that quite soon it will break forth in this part of Christ's moral heritage. A piece written by W. Collins of this county, setting forth the corruption practiced through secret leagues in church and state, appeared in our Republican county paper, recommending as a remedy the adopting of the American platform, as the only safe remedy."

Thos. A. Fait, Columbus, Kan., writes:

"I have taken two degrees in Masonry eight or nine years ago. Have publicly renounced them of late."

We are glad to get such letters as this. Would like a great many more every week. Send them on friends.

Conrad Stegner, East Castle Rock, Minn., writes.

"Ho! Minnesotians, shall we have a lecturer? I pledge myself herewith to give for the first year fifty dollars to start one. Who will help to put down this stronghold of the devil, the first Master Mason? I am alone among the secretists. There is no check here to secret societies."

John Compher, Smyrna, O., writes:

"Anti-masons seem to be asleep in this neighborhood. They need something or somebody to arouse them to the danger which they, our country and the churches are in."

C. Conkling, West Salem, O., writes:

"Why not keep a standing list in the Cynosure of the oath-bound societies in the field? Bring the whole batch into notice."

We have published as complete a list as we could obtain several times. It seems almost impossible to get an entire list.

Rev. Joel Martin, Pittsford, Mich., writes:

"The Cynosure is an excellent paper, and should have 10,000 subscribers at once. It is doing a noble work. I hope all lovers of anti-secrecy principles will sustain it."

Henry Jones, Poplar Grove, Ind., writes:

"War, intemperance, profanity, and tobacco, are evils that I am strongly opposed to as well as secret societies."

Past Master Ronayne's Letter Concluded.

And now I am fast approaching my third main point in this Anti-masonic talk. If Freemasonry be all that I have above represented it to be—if it be a religion established by Satan to counteract, and in a measure destroy the great influence of the religion of Jesus Christ in the world; if it be a professedly saving institution, pretending to save the souls of its affiliated members, no matter how unholy or vicious their past lives may have been, and that too, without any regard whatever to repentance or regeneration; in a word in Freemasonry be nothing more nor less than paganism under a somewhat civilized form, then indeed does it become our bounden duty to use every possible means within our reach to banish this hydra-headed monster forever from our homes, our church and our nation.

And now the question arises how shall this work be best accomplished? We have a corps of able lecturers in the field. We have a General Agent than whom a better man nor a man better qualified for his peculiar work cannot be found in America. We have a weekly paper, ably conducted and having a large circulation. We have men and women in Chicago at the head of affairs who are among the noblest in the land, and we have hosts of warm-hearted friends everywhere throughout the country who are doing all in their power to bring the secret workings of the Masonic lodge before the American public, but after all this, is it not barely possible that we now and again forget that all our strength and all our courage, and all our efficiency comes from above, and like our salvation is the free gift of God through Jesus Christ. Now there can be no doubt of the fact that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is the same yesterday to-day and forever, unchanging and unchangable. He is the only living and true God, the God who heareth and answereth prayer, and he assures us in his Holy Word that his ears are always open, day and night, to the prayers of his people, and that whatsoever we shall ask in the name of his dear Son, Jesus Christ, he will grant it to us, only we must ask in faith nothing doubting. And now then I propose (and, O what a legion of thoughts crowd and chase one another through my mind as I make my proposition) I propose that the Executive Board of the N. C. Association hold an extra session immediately in the city of Chicago, and that they issue a notice or proclamation to all the lovers of the Lord Jesus Christ throughout the land, calling upon them to set apart one whole week in the near future as a week of special prayer to Almighty God, that he would of his infinite mercy and for the sake of his only begotten Son our Lord Jesus Christ the great Head of the church, cleanse the church and the nation from the fearful sin of Freemasonry, and raise up such means as may be best calculated to stem the fearful tide of iniquity which seems overpowering like a mighty flood the Bride, the Lamb's wife, or rather like that great red dragon mentioned in Revelation, standing ready to drown the child as soon as he is born. From what experience I have hitherto obtained in my work against this fearful evil of Freemasonry, I am more than ever convinced that in this terrible warfare, nothing else will do but like Moses on the battle field against the Amalekites, we must continually lift our hands and our hearts to God that he would bless our work, and give us wisdom and courage and prudence to meet and successfully to overcome and destroy the monster iniquity of Freemasonry.

Let us then have this special week of prayer and let us re-double our efforts to increase the circulation of the Christian Cynosure, and to secure the munificent donation of Philo Carpenter. But by all means let us not forget the week of prayer. O men may talk about political action; Ronayne may open lodges and initiate, pass, and raise candidates, and friend Stoddard may travel almost day and night, and other able lecturers may exert themselves to the very last, but after all, it is God alone who can give the increase. Let us then appeal unitedly to Him, and O! let us make our appeal from the ground of the heart, through our Lord Jesus Christ, and heaven itself is pledged that our prayers shall be answered. I am as ever, fraternally yours. EDMOND RONAYNE.

Farm and Garden.

The Agriculturist says: Every farmer should have a room, tight and warm, to keep his small tools. Then he wants a good solid work-bench, with an iron vise on one side, and a wooden one on the other. For iron working, he wants a solid piece of iron for an anvil, a seven-pound steel-faced hammer, a riveting hammer, one large and one small cold chisel, two or three punches from 1-4 to 1-2 inch, a rimmer and countersink, to be used with bit-stock, a screw plate that will cut a screw from 1-4 to 3 8 inch, then with round iron of the various sizes, and ready-made nuts, he can make any bolt he wishes. For carpenter work, he wants a square, a shaving horse, drawing-knife, a set of planes, augur from one-half to two inch; a fine hand saw, with coarse cross-cut and rip saw, large cross-cut saw for logs, and a grind stone."

HORSES SUFFER BY BAD ROADS.—We are all grumbling about our roads and our surveyors. The roads are miserable, and our system of making and repairing them is miserable, too; but we do not realize how much we are losing by continuing to use them in their present condition. The annual expense for the wear and tear of horses, carriages and harness is enormous, but the loss from carrying only half the load we might on smooth, hard and level roads is very much greater. Supposing a horse can pull on a level road 1,000 pounds, on a road rising one foot to the hundred, he could pull but 900 pounds. If it rises two feet in a hundred, 810 pounds; two and a half feet, 720 pounds; four feet, 520 pounds; five feet, 400 pounds; and if the rise were ten feet in a hundred, he could pull about 250 pounds, or only one quarter the load he could draw on a level road. Then, again, the condition of a road whether hard and smooth, or soft and uneven, has much to do with the amount a team can draw over it.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 30, 1876.

MR. MOODY ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

The following intelligence will delight those who are friends of the Cynosure movement, and astonish many who are not. Mr. Moody has in several instances spoken in condemnation of the secret orders before his voyage across the Atlantic, and his recent utterance given below would seem to indicate that his aversion to them increases rather than grows less. If he had leisure to inform himself concerning the nature of these orders so as to see distinctly that in their standard writers they present themselves as a substitute for salvation by the Atonement of Christ, no one who knows him can doubt that he would denounce and warn his multitudes of hearers against them as he does against whiskey.

We clip the following from Rev. Mr. Barr's United Presbyterian Worker, Philadelphia, for April. Let us thank God for such men as Mr. Moody:

Mr. Moody is generally fearless in the utterance of his convictions. An illustration of this may be given. In one of his "Bible readings" in this city his subject was "Walking with God." He read and explained several passages relating to this subject. Turning to 2 Cor. vi. 14, he read, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." "Now," said he, "some of you may be hit by what I have to say on this text. But I pray God to help me to tell you the truth." "Amen," "amen," came from several quarters in the audience. "Some of you that are saying 'amen' may get hit," said Moody. Then reading the passage again, "Be ye not unequally yoked with unbelievers," his first remark was, as nearly as we can remember. "Some of you would give up your connection with secret societies if you would obey that text. Believers and unbelievers are together in these, and Christians are thus unequally yoked." We did not hear any "amens" just then, but we could not doubt that somebody was was "hit." The Rev. Dr. Allen, pastor of the Pine Street Presbyterian church, had led the audience in prayer just before Mr. Moody began his remarks. He is a well-known Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons in Pennsylvania. We are quite sure he did not say "amen" to Mr. Moody's faithful thrust. We were sorry that the speaker did not dwell a little longer on the subject. As it was, his testimony was valuable, and we know that if he had said much on the question, and if the secular papers had taken up his remarks, he might about as well have abandoned his work, and have gone back to his little congregation in Chicago. We are glad, however, that he has given a distinct intimation of what his mind is as to the connection of believers with secret societies.

Seclusion from the world prepares us for communion with God; and communion with God prepares us for intercourse with the world.

THE BEECHER COUNCIL AND DR. STORRS.

Dr. R. S. Storrs, who was excluded from the Council of Mr. Beecher's friends; and then invited by a committee to come in, irregularly, to an exparte council, which was made exparte to avoid his and Buddington's presence, has reviewed the said council in one of the ablest and most eloquent speeches of modern times. At a church meeting called to consider the subject, Dr. Storr's church sustained the ground of their pastor against the council, by a vote of 90 to 23. Mr. Beecher's paper makes the most of this minority vote, as it gives him the hope of a decision of Dr. Storrs' church in his favor. Thus the plot thickens, and the end of the drama seems far in the dim future.

Some of the points made by Dr. Storrs are:—

1st. That Dr. Leonard Bacon was chairman of the Council of 1874, and also of the late Council of 1876, and sustains and vindicates both; though the last, in important points, reverses and condemns the action of the first.

2nd. That the last, or Beecher Council, by endorsing the Plymouth Committee of six, appointed by Mr. Beecher from his personal friends to try himself, has endorsed an absurdity which, if made a precedent, must destroy all discipline, Congregational or other.

3d. That said last Council, by justifying the friends of Mr. Beecher in vetoing himself (Storrs) and Buddington, when chosen by Mrs. Moulton, has sanctioned the giving each party in a church difficulty, a veto on those chosen by the other; and has made a mutual council hereafter impossible; thus sapping the fountains of the Congregational system.

4th. And furthermore:—That the Beecher Council, by traveling out of its letter-missive to act on the Andover letter, refusing its request for a mutual Council to try the question: Is Mr. Beecher guilty?—and by inventing a hitherto unheard of contrivance to appoint a committee of three to choose a committee of five from a committee of twenty, which mockery of a court could have no recognized authority or sanction, from any known rule or law, human or divine,—Dr. Storrs contends that this labyrinthine anomaly sets aside, supercedes, and makes a farce of the Congregational polity. It would seem that these things foreshadow a separation of American Congregationalists into two companies who cannot walk together in church fellowship.

So when slavery felt its doom approaching, Satan hasted and split in two great church organizations upon minor issues, leaving slavery in both ends of the split. What is the alleged adultery of Mr. Beecher compared with a secret order, spread around the globe which assumes that adultery, if not committed with the relatives of Freemasons, is no Masonic crime.

In the whole anti-secret discussion, no man so far as we have seen, has attempted to disprove that the lodge-worships are idolatry? And whoever heard or dreamed of moral purity in idolatrous nations?

SANCTIFICATION.—We have seldom seen so able an article on Christian perfection as that contained in our present number taken from the Religious Telescope which copies from the Christian Advocate. That whole subject must be thoroughly canvassed and pressed on the mind of the Christian world. Our readers will thank us for copying the article.

NOTES.

—From a notice in another column it will be seen that the California friends are in earnest. Their urgency has prevailed on the editor of the Cynosure who, the Lord willing, will spend his summer vacation on the Pacific coast. Friends in Oregon and Washington Territory may also profit by the visit.

—The list of seceders has made another growth, and still other names are promised. Let them all come in, the list will remain standing while enough new names are sent in to make it an object.

—Bro Stegner of East Castle Rock, Minn., cries out for some help to arise for that State—"Ho Minnesotians! Shall we have a lecturer soon? I pledge myself herewith to give for the first year $50, to secure one." Who now will stand by this brother until to the two an army of co-workers is raised up? All things are possible to them that believe and keep faith alive with earnest work.

—If any laborer is worthy of his hire, other things being equal, it is the lecturer against the lodge. He enters this work knowing that the profits to purse and reputation are precarious, for the system he labors against has the power of damaging both, perhaps bankrupting. So much the more is the need to rally around every worthy lecturer and sustaining his work by sympathy and ready cash encouragement. We learn of a very few communities visited by one of the most earnest workers in the reform, who has commanded vast audiences in several cities East and West, which turned away the speaker almost with a rebuff. There are plenty of places where such speakers are wanted and where their efforts will be appreciated; so a double wrong is done—to the speaker and to other communities, when he is called aside to places where it is not proposed to render him his due.

—Bro. Abner Orr, who has been before mentioned as lecturing in Putnam county, northern Missouri, published a short time since the following proposition to the lodge in the Unionville Republican: "I wish to make a kind, Christian proposal to the Freemasons of Unionville to meet them at a time and place, for the purpose of demonstrating from the word of God, Masonic and other authorities, the anti-Christian character of their obligations, and the duty of every Christian man to renounce the same. I will read an expository sermon on Freemasonry in the M. E. church, March 1st, at 7 o'clock P. M." We hope to hear of a good work following these efforts.

The Carpenter Donation.

On Saturday night there remained yet $555 to complete the first $10,000 of the Publishing House fund. This all will be glad to learn was reduced on Monday to $412.50. In the few days remaining before April 1st, the General Agent expects to fully complete the first $10,000, and until the next issue of the Cynosure, every friend of the cause should remember his work before the Lord, that he may have success. The full report of the Publishing House fund as examined by the Auditing Committee will appear next week with the Treasurer's monthly report. A list of the friends who have contributed by promissory note will also soon be given.

Connecticut and Iowa.

The State meetings of Connecticut and Iowa occur on the same days, and I am compelled to choose between the two, and like the Apostle to the Gentiles on one occasion, I find myself "in a strait betwixt two." Both are important meetings in their present and future influence, and will, I have no doubt, be blessed of God and largely attended by friends. Bro. Conant and his co-laborers have roused the opposition in Connecticut, and this monster evil has felt the barbed arrows of truth in his flesh, and now in this State gathering it is proposed by the help of our God to put a hook in his nose and lead him out of the pew and the pulpit, and by exhibiting his loathsome carcass to make him odious in the eyes of every loyal, liberty-loving, God-fearing man and woman in the State.

Let the men and women of Connecticut, who are loyal to free government and to the God of nations rally on the 26th of April, and plan the campaign of the season; renew their covenant, utter their solemn protest, and join hands in defence of all that is sacred and dear to the hearts of Americans and to the disciples of Christ.

The standard has been set up in the name of the Lord in Iowa, and several important meetings held, but as yet there has been no general rally from the entire State. It is hoped that such a gathering will be secured at Western, on the 26th of April, and that every county in the State, will be represented. There is anti-secrecy sentiment in Iowa sufficient to carry the State if organized and acting in concert, as has been demonstrated in localities where the issue has been squarely put. Now let it be squarely put throughout the State; and the time to inaugurate such a concerted general movement will be at your State Convention. Hon. J. B. Walker, our standard bearer, is one of the speakers for the occasion, and I am sure that every friend of our reform throughout the State will want to hear him, and that those who hear will thank God and be encouraged when they hear.

A Good Way to Aid the Carpenter Fund.

William Slosson of Binghampton, N. Y., writes:

"I have been thinking that I should do something toward the Carpenter Fund during this Centennial year, as I shall hope to celebrate my 76th birthday in July next. I think I could sell 100 copies of E. Ronayne's book, half a dozen copies of Odd-fellowship Exposed, and as many more of the Grange Expose, during the year. . . . I will also try and get as many subscribers to the Cynosure as possible. The proceeds over and above the cost of books and express charges I will donate to the Carpenter Fund."

He sends $5.00 for books, and we send them all at the 100 rate, and send the following:

14 Ronayne's Hand Book	25c.	$3.50
10 Odd-fellowship Illustrated	10c.	$1,00
5 Grange Exposition	10c.	50
Total		$5.00

These books will retail for $10.75, and he can then send $10.00 and the next time $20.00, and the fourth time $40.00 or more, and during the year we believe Mr. Slosson will be able to send from twenty-five to fifty dollars to the Carpenter Fund. We commend this plan to any of our friends who have the leisure to sell books and desire to contribute to this fund. They shall have our books at the 100 rate, no matter how small the quantity, if the cash accompanies the order, and it is stated that the proceeds of sale go to the Carpenter Fund. How do you like the plan? Ezra A. Cook & Co.

Rev. Pearsall Smith, the American layman, whose labors for personal holiness in Europe have been so effective, returned to this country not long since under a cloud. A scandal connecting his name with immoral teachings to females has been raging in England for months. His friends there in part allege temporal insanity, and others acquit him of bad motives while he and they express deep sorrow for his evil course. In the report of the Oxford meeting, England, the workings of Mr. Smith's mind are marked. He draws many illustrations from the marriage relation, and recurs once and again to the affection of the young wife or mother. This may encourage the idea that his mind is unbalanced. This human weakness and sin cannot, however, make of none effect the great truth which Mr. Smith preached, but should warn all that it be not held in unrighteousness.

Notice to Illinois.

I wish to visit every town and village in Northern and Central Illinois during the months of April and May and publicly work the Masonic degrees for two or three evenings in each place as may be agreed upon. Being an old member of the Grand Lodge of Illinois I am desirous of striking as heavy a blow possible here in my own State. Will the Anti-masonic friends in each locality see to it at once that arrangements are made to carry this programme into effect and communicate directly with this office. Papers friendly to the cause will confer a favor by giving this notice extended publicity.

E. Ronayne, Past Master Keystone Lodge, No. 639, hicago.

Religious Intelligence.

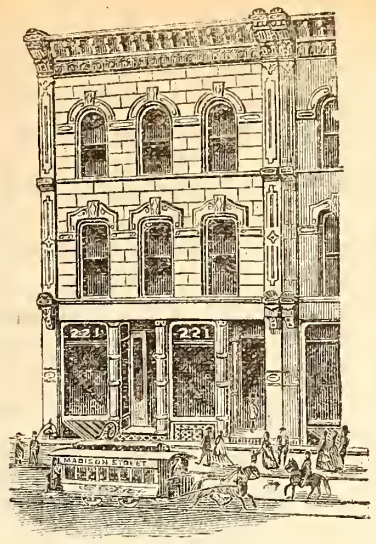
—Last August a new opera house was "dedicated" in Mt. Sterling, Ill., by a dramatic company from St. Louis, under the management of Mr. Wm Shields, consisting in part of severa members of his own family. On the last Sabbath evening in February that same opera house hall was filled to its utmost capacity by the citizens of Mt. Sterling for a religious service, presided over, and eloquently addressed by the same Mr. Wm. Shields, he, having a few weeks before publicly renounced his profession, which, for a score of years, he had zealously and succesfully followed, and enrolled himself for all his future life under the banner of the Cross. "What hath not the Lord wrought!"

—At a young men's meeting, held at the Prince of Wales Theater, London, lately, 150 testimonies were given, nearly all of which dated the time of their conversion to the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

—A recent addition to Plymouth Church, Dr. Lyman Whiting's, Philadelphia, was mostly young people, and is the most valuable accession in the history of the church.

—In Rev. Dr. Cuyler's Church, Brooklyn, a steady religious interest has prevailed all winter. One hundred and fifteen have been added to its membership, and the prayer-meetings are crowded.

—The Western Christian Advocate says it is estimated that between fifteen hundred and two thousand have been converted during the past winter through the efforts of the students of Drew Theological Seminary.



—At Chichester, N. H., seventy conversions are reported, and at Rye, sixty. There is a general revival at West Concord, the first in years. The Baptists at Swarzea and East Weare are enjoying a season of growth. A revival prevails at Mount Vernon.

—The Y. M. C. A. and the Philadelphia branch of Evangelical Alliance have held meetings as to religious services during the Centennial Exposition months. The latter will assume the work. A meeting on the 14th was to arrange plans.

—The cheering intelligence comes from Burmah that 51 Burmese have been baptized in the Valley of the Irrawaddy, some of whom have been brought to Christ by reading Christian books, having never listened to the teaching of a missionary.

—The Rev. S. W. Marsh writes from Tahlek, Syria, that one of the teachers in his mission read aloud on a Sunday evening one of Mr. Moody's sermons, and translated it as he read into Arabic, and that its plain language seemed still plainer in that tongue, which so abounds in stately expressions.

—Rev. E. P. Hammond who has been six weeks at Washington, preaching three times a day in three different churches, and his audiences during the last week were larger than ever. He has now gone to Rochester, N. Y., to continue his labors there.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

Form of Bequest.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

News of the Week.

—The House bill to restore capital punishment in Iowa is defeated in the Senate. Five States have now totally abolished the death penalty, viz.: Maine, Rhode Island, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Iowa. Maine has been added to the list this year.

—A snow storm fell last week in the South the equal of which was never before seen in that section of the country. At Memphis over ten inches fell, blocking up the streets, stopping the street cars, and delaying the trains on all the roads in that region. Little Rock was favored with nine inches of snow. Other cities report similar visitations with similar results.

—About the same time, 20th inst., great storms occurred in Great Britain. Dispatches state that nearly all the railroads north of the river Tay are more or less blocked by snow. The Caledonian is covered with snow twenty feet deep near Aberdeen. Twelve trains are standing snowed in at one point. More than a dozen trains are blocked on the Great Northern Line. The telegraph lines are buried at several points north of Aberdeen. The mail from Dundee to Perth yesterday took fourteen hours instead of the usual thirty minutes. The cold to-day is intense.

—The witness Marsh having been induced to return to Washington from Canada gave his testimony again before the Judiciary Committee which expects no more evidence to aid in Gen. Belknap's impeachment. The only instance proved of money paid and received corruptly is that of the Fort Sill post tradership, and it is probable that no other counts will be included in the impeachment articles. These will probably be presented this week.

—Gov. Pacheco, of California affixed his signature of approval to the act which provides that men found guilty of wife-beating shall be publicly whipped.

—The whiskey trials are proceeding in regular order in the U. S. courts in this city. Two distilleries, Pahlman and Rush, the latter being junior deacon of Hesperia Lodge, being before the jury.

—The Paris correspondent of the Times says the papal brief addressed to the Archbishop of Toledo, denounces liberty of worship in Spain as loading the State with a great crime, and paying the way to the persecution of Catholocism.

The Mystery of Pain.

Why bleats the lamb? Why pleads the dove?
Why writhes the babe in arms of love?
Why drop our stars from off their thrones?
Why bleed and burn earth's holiest ones?

"God is not God," a sage replies—
"Not strong, nor true, nor good, nor wise:"
"Eternal war," old Persia saith—
"Darkness with light, and life with death."

A voice from Uz, a voice from Ur,
"Trust, though he slay," "Jahveh Jireth;"
But hark! e en prophets hush their hearts to hear Jehovah in the clouds draw near.

"Eli! Eli!" stars startled hear;
An earthquake-travail rocks and sphere;
The sun himself hath quenched his light;
The Life himself goes out in night.

Shall darkness veil the eternal sun,
And all my path with light be sown?
Shall anguish rive the Captain's heart,
And I, the soldier, bear no part?

May not I faint, in weakness sore,
Where my Redeemer sank before?
May not the wave of doubt rock me,
When Christ himself cried out, "Eli!"

Pain burns in pity from on high,
To fix the sinner's wandering eye;
Love bends in pain from heaven's height,
To one sad soul turned from the light.

The Rest of Faith.

"The rest of faith!" A blessed phrase, and fully justifiable by Holy Scripture. Would that its significance were more generally known by experience! It is probably better known at present than it has been for several generations. It has become not only a current phrase in the religious speech of our own country, but of Europe. We hear of it thence as if it were "a new language turned upon the people." Never has inquiry after a "higher spiritual life" than that which has been the average of European religious experience for some generations been more earnest than now. Numerous and remarkable conventions have been held in many English and continental cities for such inquiries. Aside from polemical or dogmatio discussions, or even the technical phraseology of the subject (as sanctification, perfection, etc.), there is a profound and persuasive conviction that the average inward life of the church has been greatly beneath the Scriptural standard; that much which has been considered to be the ideal of Christianity should be the real; that the church lives far below the exemplified standard of the apostolic Christians; and that, especially, the experimental consolations of the Gospel have not been adequately realized by modern Christians.

The phrase, we say, is perfectly justifiable by Scripture. How often it or its synonym "peace" recurs in the sacred pages, as one of the very idioms of the Christian vernacular! "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light.' "For we which believe do enter into rest." "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." "The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." "The kingdom of God is peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." "Let the peace of God rule [reign] in your hearts." "The God of hope fill you with joy and peace in believing." "Return to thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee." "Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him." "Acquaint thyself now with him, and be at peace." "The meek shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." "Great peace have they who love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled; neither let it be afraid." "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." "To be spiritually-minded is life and peace." "He is our peace." "The peace of God which passeth understanding." Precious utterances! Every one of them is fit to be engraved on a signet-ring—to be inscribed on the heart!

There are, indeed, striking and instructive paradoxes in the Holy Scriptures—contrasts, but not contradictions. We are admonished to "work out our salvation with fear and trembling;" and it may be asked how such admonition can be reconciled with these emphatic assertions of the habitual rest or peace of the Christian spirit? Scripture must be interpreted or qualified by Scripture. There were peculiar temptations about the early converts from heathenism; the idolatrous temples, the gods, the pageants and sensual seductions of their old religion, confronted them wherever they looked, and the most appalling menaces of persecution backed these fascinations. Hence the apostle would warn them even to "tremble" at their besetments; but who ever spoke more emphatically than that same apostle about the consolations of the Christian life? Our Lord uttered a paradox, but a most blessed one, when he said that "in the world ye shall have tribulation," but "in me peace." Both are compatible, both coexistent. Paul could say that, having "peace with God," in justification, "we rejoice also in tribulation." Astonishing paradox! for tribulation is a figurative allusion to the threshing of grain under the flails—yet in such severity of trials the child of God may have "peace," and even "rejoice."

Such, certainly, is the literal, the explicit account of Christian life given by the Scriptures. It is no ideal standard; it is given as practically real; and it was the life of the apostolic church. It should be that of the modern church, and of every individual member of it. It is our privilege—nay, our duty—to enjoy continually the "rest of faith." The purified soul need not lose its divine comfort in any stress or storm of trial. On the contrary, its peace may deepen as the rage of the storm increases. Its faith in God can be such that, as we have cited, "the work of righteousness" with it "shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." If it commits its heaviest trial to the Lord, doing its best in the case, it can leave all the issues with him, and care not for the morrow. God will never fail those that thus trust in him. "Cast thy burden upon the Lord," who "careth for thee;" and "both lay thee down in peace, and sleep, for he only maketh thee to dwell in safety." Be assured that millions of saints have, down through all the Christian ages, thus tested the divine care, and have never found it to fail. Do all thy duties; be no Antinomian; but live as thou professest to live—by faith. Watch and pray, but worry not; if the storm is looming over thy pathway, walk quietly with thy Lord right through it. If death is approaching thee, by incurable illness, cast that burden also upon the Lord with absolute faith, and lose not one hour's sleep through anxiety about it; he will look to it. If thy reputation is periled,—a calamity worse than death,—still rest in thy Lord; he will sanctify thee more as the trial becomes severer, and he will take care of its issue in both worlds. Even if thy spiritual consolations at times abate in vividness, be not discouraged, and lose not the rest of faith. Then, if ever, the Scriptural exhortation is appropriate, "rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him." After thy trial thy joy shall be more abundant; after the clouds the sun appears but the brighter. The saintly monk, Thomas a Kempis, speaking of this last kind of trial, represents Christ as saying to the believer, "I know the most concealed dispositions of the heart, and I know that it is good for thee sometimes to have spiritual obscurations, lest thou be elevated in thine own conceit by the success of thy desires, and become presumptuous; I have the power to take that which I give, and to restore what I take away. If I send thee affliction, be not grieved, and lose not courage; because I have power to help thee suddenly, and to change again thy sadness to joy. If thou art wise, and considerest these things in the light of truth, thou wilt see that instead of grieving thou shouldst rejoice and give thanks."—Christian Advocate.

What is the Cause?

That is, of hard times. There are a great many learned explanations. One man says, over-trading; another, extravagance; another, the war; another, excessive manufactures; another, paper currency; still another, not paper currency enough. Meanwhile there is a cause that lies back of all these which we need to consider.

A little child goes to the faucet and draws the Croton water. He thinks that his little fingers can always bring a supply that is inexhaustible, and that he is quite able to control it. But one day he goes as usual, and the water will not run. He turns the faucet this way and that—no water. He goes to his father for an explanation. His father tries and succeeds no better. Then he goes out and makes inquiries, and returns with the answer, "The main is out of order, and the water is cut off." "The main! what is the main?" asks the boy. Then the father explains. There is a Croton lake, and a long aqueduct bringing the water down into the city, and reservoirs in the city, and great pipes or mains leading under the streets, and little pipes leading from the mains. And the city government controls lake, and aqueduct, and reservoir, and main; the boy only controls the faucet. And for the first time he learns that there is a power above and beyond him that controls the supply which he thought he could always bring at demand.

Now we have grown up into the impression that our prosperity is illimitable, that it depends upon ourselves, that we have only to touch the faucet by our industry, and prosperity will flow in upon us. And God has suddenly cut off the supply. He has stopped the mains. And he is saying to us, in every insolvency, in every strike, in every falling price—this is not great Babylon that you have built. There is a power above you, a power that both grants and stops supplies. There is a reason which you have not recognized in the prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread." Whether you know it or not, you are the sheep of his pasture and the people of his hand.

There are other lessons, doubtless, to be learned from hard times; but not the least of them is the lesson of humility and of trust.—Am. Messenger.

The Year we Celebrate.

It seems to have escaped the notice of most persons, says the N. Y. Post, that the year 1775 witnessed the advancement of several other important interests beside that of American liberty. It was in this year that Cook returned from his voyage around the world. His was the first attempt ever made to accomplish such an undertaking by sailing from west to east, in defiance of the trade winds. In the same year Gatterer's scheme of a descriptive geography appeared, and gave a strong impulse to research in kindred departments of study. An effort was made in this work to mark out the natural bounderies of the various countries; to group the peculiar features of each country under their proper head; to trace the course of the rivers, and promulgate a more distinct notion of the system of water-sheds; and to unite in one comprehensive plan the teachings of Strabo concerning the countries of the earth, the ethnological investigations of Tacitus and Pliny's discoveries in natural history. At the same time, Thunberg, undaunted by the many dangers which then attended such an undertaking, collected the first herbarium of Japanese flora, and materials for compiling a vocabulary of the same; Blumenbach issued his work on ethnology, in which he divided the human race into the five great types, whose features are familiar to every school-child of to-day; the Gulf-stream was first systematically examined with the aid of the thermometer, and a foundation thus laid for the scientific study of ocean currents; and finally, Laplace, by discovering the attraction exerted on a comet by the planet Jupiter, won for his name an enduring place in the annals of astronomical research.

The oak-tree's boughs once touched the grass,
But every year they grew
A little farther from the ground,

And nearer to the sky.

What Ailed a Pillow.

While Annie was saying her prayers, Nell trifled with a shadow-picture on the wall. Not satisfied with playing alone, she would talk to Annie, that mite of a figure in gold and white-golden curls and snowy gown, by the bedside.

"Now, Annie, watch! Annie, just see! O, Annie, do look!" she said, over and over again. Annie, who was not to be persuaded, finished her prayer, and crept into bed, whither her thoughtless sister followed, as the light must be out in just so many minutes. Presently Nell took to floundering, punching and, "O dearing." Then she laid quiet awhile, only to begin again with renewed energy.

"What's the matter," asked Annie at length.

"My pillow!" tossing, thumping, kneading. "It's as flat as a board, and hard as a stone. I can't think what ails it."

"I know," answered Annie, in her sweet, serious way.

"What?"

"There's no prayer in it."

For a second or two Nell was as still as a mouse, then she scrambled out on the floor, with a shiver it's true, but she was determined never afterward to try to sleep on a prayerless pillow.

"That must have been what ailed it," she whispered soon after getting into bed again. "It's all right now."

I think that is what ails a great many pillows on which restless heads, both little and big, nightly toss and turn, there are no prayers in them. Nell's remedy was the best; the only one. Prayer made the pillow soft, and she sunk to rest as under a sheltering wing.

How to make a Prism.

"Mamma, what can I do?" I know a little boy who very often asks his mamma this question, and I will tell you one of the things she has given him to do. Once she said to him, "Make a prism." To which he replied, "I don't know how." His mamma did not think that a very good answer, so she waited to see if he would not say something which showed more interest. By and by he said, "Mamma, what is a prism?" She told him it was a three-sided piece of glass which would separate a ray of light into all the colors of the rainbow.

"Mamma, can I make glass?" "No; but you may take this pane, and ask the hardware merchant to cut three strips nearly an inch wide and five inches long; and here are some pennies with which you may buy putty." Charlie's eyes sparkled. He soon returned ready for work, his mamma directing him, something as I will you. Wash the glasses and wipe them dry; soften the putty and make out two balls, which you place near the ends of one piece of the glass, then take the other two pieces and place upon this like the roof of a house, pressing the putty into three-cornered shapes. When the edges meet at every corner drop on sealing wax to make it water-tight, and cover the putty in one end with the same; now make a small hole through the putty in the other end, and fill with water. Then close it up, and seal with the wax. Charlie had some trouble in making his tight, but was not discouraged, and when done his mamma said, "Now look through it." He fairly shouted at first sight, and I was about to tell you what he said, but instead will ask some of the After-Supper Talkers who try this experiment to tell us what they see.—Aunt Jennett in the Advance.

The Great Bells of the World.

The great bell of Moscow, called the Tsar Kolokol, or King of Bells, is the largest in the world. It is 19 feet 3 inches high, and measures around its margin 60 feet 9 inches. It is estimated to weigh 443,772 pounds, and the metal in it is valued at more than $300 000. The bells of China rank next in size to those of Russia, but are much inferior to them in form and tone. In Peking it is stated by Father LeCompt, there are seven bells, each weighing 120,000 pounds. One in the suburbs of the city is, according to the testimony of many travelers, the largest suspended bell in the world. It is hung near the ground, in a large pavilion, and to ring it a huge beam is swung against its side. A bell taken from the Dagon pagoda at Rangoon was valued at $80,000. Among the bells recently cast for the new House of Parliament, the largest weighs 14 tons. The next largest bell in England was cast in 1845 for York Minster, and weighs 27,000 pounds, and is 7 feet 7 inches in diameter. The Great Tom of Oxford weighs 17,000 pound, and the Great Tom of Lincoln 12,000 pounds. The bell of St. Paul's in London is 9 feet in diameter, and weighs 11,500 pounds. One placed in the Cathedral of Paris, in 1680, weighs 37,000 pounds. One in Vienna, cast in 1711, weighs 40,000 pounds; and in Olmutz is another weighing about the same. The famous bell called Susanne of Erfurt is considered to be of the finest bell-metal, containing the largest proportion of silver; its weight is about 30,000 pounds; it was cast in 1467. At Montreal, Canada, is a larger bell than any in England, weighing 29,400 pounds; it was imported in 1843 for the Notre Dame Cathedral. In the opposite tower of the cathedral is a chime of ten bells, the heaviest of which weighs 6,043 pounds, and their aggregate weight is 21,800 pounds.—Appleton's Cyclopedia.

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for Apr. 9.—The Day of Pentecost.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts ii. 1-11. Commit 1-6; Primary Verse, 4.

1 And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place.

2 And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing, mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting.

3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them.

4 And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

5 And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven.

6 Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language.

7 And they were all amazed and marveled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans?

8 And how hear we every man in our own tongue wherein we were born?

9 Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontius, and Asia,

10 Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, 11 Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

TOPIC.—The Baptism of the Holy Spirit.

MANIFESTATIONS OF THE SPIRIT.—Came with a sound "as of a rushing, mighty wind," which filled the whole house and was heard out in the city. 6. (The beginning of the 6th verse should read: "Now when this sound issued forth.") It does not say there was a wind, but the sound was like that of a mighty rushing wind—"from heaven"—a direction from which no wind ever comes. A miraculous star led the magi to the birth-place of Christ, and now a miraculous sound heralds the advent of the Holy Spirit and guides the multitude to the temple. When the Holy Ghost came down upon Christ at his baptism it descended "like a dove" upon him. Gentleness, love, peace were symbolized there. Now the sound as of a mighty rushing wind, signifies power—power to overcome—resistless, mighty power. Note down the emblems of the Holy Spirit. 1—Water: John iii. 5; vii. 38, 39. Cleansing. (Eph. v. 26); refreshing, (Is. xli. 17, 18); abundant, (John vii. 38); fertilizing, (Is. xliv. 3, 3); free. Rev. xxii. 17. 2.—Fire: Matt. iii. 11; purifying, (Mal. iii. 2, 3); illuminating, (Ex. xiii. 21); searching, Zeph. i. 12. 3.—Wind: Can. iv. 16; independent, (John iii. 8); powerful, (1 Kings xix. 11); felt, (John iii. 8); reviving (Ez. xxxvii. 9, 10. 4.—Oil: Ps. xlv. 7. healing. (Rev. iii. 18); comforting, (Is. lxi. 3); illuminating, (1 John ii. 20, 27); consecrating. Is. lxi. 1. 5.—Dove. Matt. iii. 16—gentle. Gal. v. 22. 6.—A Voice: Is. vi. 8—speaking, (Matt. x. 20); guiding, (Is. xxx. 21); warning, Heb. iii. 7-11. 7.—A Seal: Rev. vii. 2—impressing, (2 Cor. iii. 18); securing, (Eph. i. 13, 14); authenticating. 2 Cor. i. 22.

—"Continued in prayer." Would not take No for an answer; did not believe it would be given. Nine days of prayer—then such a blessing as the disciples had never dreamed of. Was it not worth the effort? Was it not an encouragement to persevere in prayer? Luke xi. 5-13; xviii. 1-8; xxi. 36; Rom. xii. 12; Eph. vi. 18; Col. iv. 2; 1 Thes. v. 17.

—"With one accord." No wranglings on doctrine, no disputings about ceremonies, no jealousies about work—nothing but united prayer! Whenever the church manifests such unity, a blessing always follows. Such is the unity for which Christ prayed. John xiii. 35; xvii. 23; Acts ii. 46, 47; iv. 32; Rom. xvi. 17; 1 Cor. i. 10; iii. 3; Phil. ii. 3; 1 Pet. iii. 8.—Nat'l. S. S. Teacher.

Temperance.

The Chicago Daily Temperance prayer-meeting at 3 o'clock P. M., in lower Farwell Hall. If you cannot attend it, can you pray for it? The business meeting of the Chicago W. C. T. U. will occur Mar. 31st.

We were permitted a short time since to listen to an address from the gifted and eloquent President of the Chicago Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Miss F. E. Willard, on "The Right of the Stronger," which she interpreted as the right or privilege of temperate people, especially the young, to be total abstainers from alcoholic liquors for the sake of those who were enslaved by appetite.

She quoted Bishop May for the purpose of impaling all her hearers on one or the other horns of the following dilemma:

If it would not be a sacrifice for you to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage you should do so for the sake of others. If it would be a sacrifice, you should abstain for your own sake.

Miss Willard seems to be a sincere Christian. She is winning, earnest, and enthusiastic in her temperance work; is not connected with any secret temperance order, and will be used, we trust, in accomplishing much for Christ and his kingdom by saving many from a drunkard's doom.

Shall we convert to reform, or reform to convert? is the problem now puzzling many reformers. The A. B. C. F. M. solved the problem, Convert to reform. We say this is the correct solution and will apply to temperance and all other true reforms.

MASONRY CLAIMS TO BE A RELIGION.

Thus in the very instance here referred to, the fundamental law of Masonry requires only a belief in the Supreme Architect of the universe and in a future life, while it says, with peculiar toleration, that in all other matters of religious belief Masons are only expected to be of that religion in which all men agree, leaving their particular opinions to themselves. Under the shelter of this wise provision the Christian and the Jew, the Mohammedan and the Brahmin, are permitted to unite around one common altar, and Masonry becomes in practice as well as in theory, universal. The truth is, that Masonry is undoubtedly a religious institution—its religion being of that universal kind in which all men agree, and which, handed down through a long succession of ages from that ancient priesthood who first taught it, embraces the great tenets of the existence of God, the immortality of the soul,—tenets which by its peculiar symbolic language, it has preserved from its foundation, and still continues in the same beautiful way to teach. Beyond this for its religious faith, we must not and cannot go."

I quote further from Mackey's Jurisprudence p. 502-3, what he says as to the Moral Law: "Every Mason," says the old charges of 1722, "is obliged by his tenure to obey the moral law." Now, this moral law is not to be considered as confined to the decalogue of Moses, within which narrow limits the ecclesiastical writers technically restrain it, but rather as alluding to what is called the lex naturae, or the law of nature. This law of nature has been defined by an able, but not recent writer on this subject, to be "the will of God, relating to human actions, grounded on the moral differences of things; and because discoverable by natural light, obligatory upon all mankind." This is the "moral law," to which the old charge already cited refers and which it declares to be the law of Masonry. And this was wisely done, for it is evident that no law less universal could have been appropriately selected for the government of an institution whose prominent characteristic is its universality. The precepts of Jesus could not have been made obligatory on a Jew; a Christian would have denied the sanctions of the Koran; a Mohammedan must have rejected the law of Moses; and a disciple of Zoroaster would have turned from all to the teachings of his Zend Avesta. The universal law of nature . . . . is therefore the only law suited in every respect to be adopted as the Masonic code. Masonry does not honor the Bible as the "book of books," and therefore Masonry does not acknowledge the Bible as teaching the one way of life, nor the Bible system of religion as being the true revealed and saving system of mercy.

[Masons are not required to believe the Bible, many of them utterly reject it and therefore, neither the prayers of the Masonic order, nor the Bible on its altars, are intended to honor the God of the Bible. Masonry claims to be a religion, but it is not Bible religion; its worship is not of God through faith in Christ enlightened by the Holy Spirit, and hence Christians cannot cousistently, nor innocently join in its false rationalistic anti-Christian homage.]

Mackey in his Lexicon p. 334, under the head of "Order," says, "An order is defined by Johnson to be among other things, a regular government, a society of dignified persons, distinguished by marks of honor, and a religious fraternity. In all these senses Masonry may be styled an order, . . . and if it does not constitute a religion in itself, it is at least religion's hand-maid."

Again, Mackey's Lexicon, p. 402, Art. "Religion," "Freemasonry does not profess to interfere with the religious opinions of its members. It asks only for a declaration of that simple and universal faith in which men of all nations and all sects agree, the belief in a God, and in his superintending providence. Beyond this, it does not venture, but leaves the minds of its disciples, on other and sectarian points, perfectly untrammeled. This is the only religious qualification required of a candidate, but this is most strictly demanded. The religion then, of Masonry is pure theism on which its different members engraft their own peculiar opinions; but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge, or to connect their truth or falsity with the truth of Masonry. Let a man's religion or mode of worship be what it may, he is not excluded from the order, provided he believes in the glorious Architect of heaven and earth, and practices the sacred duties of morality. Masons unite with the virtuous of every persuasion, in the firm and pleasing bond of fraternal love; they are taught to view the errors of mankind with compassion, and to strive by the purity of their own conduct to demonstrate the superior excellence of the faith they may possess. Thus Masonry is the center of union between good men and true, and the happy means of conciliating friendship amongst those who must otherwise have remained at a perpetual distance."

Steinbrenner, in his "Origin of Masonry" p. 13 and 14, says, "Masonry can and will educate the pious man to that higher religion—that religion in which all men can agree,—which indeed embraces the lower religion of creeds and sects, etc." So also A. G. Mackey, adds in the American Quarterly Review of Freemasonry, 1857. "As there is a natural right, which is the soucre of all positive laws, so there is a universal religion covering all the peculiar religions of the world. We profess this universal religion, and consequently we welcome those who profess a particular religion, which is but a part of it; the government itself professes it, when it proclaims freedom of worship."

Masonry claims to be a religion, a universal religion, not founded on the Bible however, that is a sectarian system,—that has too narrow a basis,—and this universal system covers all others however conflicting or antagonistic. It unites men of all faiths, who but for it had remained at a perpetual distance and every creed meets on the level at the Masonic shrine.

George Oliver, D. D., on pages 6 and 7, of his "Star in the East," says, "All our charges, all our regulations, assume as a foundation which cannot be moved, a belief in the being of a God, and a future state of rewards and punishments, and inculcate the necessity of moral purity, as a qualification for future happiness, and this according to our definitions, forms the sum and substance of religion in its most universal acceptation." On page 8, of same book, "our solemn dedications and consecrations speak the same language, and they are irrefragable evidences of the intimate connection which subsists between Masonry and religion."

I quote also from the "Rationale and Ethics of Freemasonry" by Aug. C. L., Arnold, L. L. D., on page 189: "Masonry marches in the same path with Christianity to-day, it seeks to exorcise the foul spirit of selfishness, to make men love each other as brethren and bear one another's burdens. Masonry seeks to restore unity and brotherly love. Masonry is Friendship, Love and Integrity." On page 196, "We wish to say of our honored institution, the loving spirit of Christ presides over all its arrangements, and inspires all its operations. Other associations are good, but their operations are limited. But Freemasonry has a wider influence and power, and far greater facilities for accomplishing its benevolent purposes. We do not hesitate, therefore, to say that we regard Freemasonry as the truest expression of the mind and thought of Christ, this age is destined to witness." On page 197-8: "Christianity is its central idea, and at the same time the foundation and corollary of our Temple. Nay, Masonry is Christianity,—Christianity applied to life, made actual in the arrangements of society; Christianity realized in man's relations one with another. Upon all the arrangements of our order, and upon all its operations we see the shadow of Him who loved humanity, and sought to assuage its griefs. Eighteen hundred years ago, he went about doing good. The music of his footsteps charmed away human sorrows, joy brightened before him, and hearts were made bright and glad by reviving hope. Freemasonry to-day continues his ministry of love, or rather through Freemasonry, he himself still carries forward his benevolent work." "We say that the order of Freemasonry stands one of the very first among the Christian institutions of the day." "The soul which animates our order, in spiring all its members, and controlling all its acts, is the spirit of love," page 203: "And certain we are that one cannot be a good Mason without being a better man, a better citizen, and a better Christian. [Is not this why preachers are taken in free of fees and dues?] Christianity is the central idea of the institution. The sentiment of religion pervades all its arrangements. There is no religious organization, no Christian church more vigilant in watching over the conduct, or more strict in its discipline of its members."

In Mackey's Lexicon, page 418, we find this language; "Holy Royal Arch Degree. "It is the seventh degree in the York rite, as practiced in this country, and by some styled the summit of ancient Masonry. Dermot says of it, "this I firmly believe to be the root, heart and marrow of Masonry." And Hutchinson, speaking of it, uses the following remarkable language: "As Moseswas commanded to pull his shoes from off his feet, on Mt. Horeb, because the ground whereon he trod was sanctified by the presence of the Divinity, so the Mason who would prepare himself for this exalted stage of Masonry, should advance in the naked paths of truth, be divested of every degree of arrogance, and approach with steps of innocence, humility and virtue to challenge the ensigns of an order whose institutions arise on the most solemn and sacred principles of religion."

Webb, in his Monitor, page 119, says, "his degree is indescribably more angust, sublime, and important than all which precede it, and it is the summit and perfection of ancient Masonry. It impresses on our minds a belief of the being and existence of a Supreme Deity, without beginning of days or end of years, and reminds us of the reverence due to his holy name. This degree brings to light many essentials of the craft, which were for the space of 470 years buried in darkness, and without a knowledge of which the Masonic character cannot be complete."

The Triple Tau, the first emblem of this degree is styled, "the emblem of all emblems, and the Grand Emblem of Royal Arch Masonry." Mackey in his Lexicon, page 500, says, "We may suppose the Triple Tau to be used in the Royal Arch degree as a mark designating and separating those who know and worship the true name of God, from those who are ignorant of that angust mystery." [Note this Royal Arch degree is confessedly a modern one, (See the Masonic Lexicons.) It was no part of Ancient Craft Masonry, which had but three degrees:—yet it is declared to be the summit and perfection of Ancient Masonry. —"It brings to light many long-buried essentials of the craft . . . a knowledge of which alone can complete the Masonic character." What did all the poor Masons, before this light came? How pitiable the condition of those who are only raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason, and come short of this "indescribably more angust and important than all which precede it!" This degree differs, as given in this country, from the same degree in England having only the grand mystic word in common. See Morris' Dictionary page 400, for word Jah-buh-lun. See Mackey's Lexicon, page 228.]

Geo. Oliver, D. D., in his "Star in the East," page 8, says that the Royal Arch degree is purely religious and (to quote from brother Barlow's lecture,) closes a paragrapb by inquiring: "If this be not religion, if this be not Christianity, what is it? This assumption of Oliver's, that Christianity and Masonry are identical, is simply a monstrous falsehood. Indeed he effectually shows this himself, by his various admissions, It is a most perplexing thing to carry out, consistently, a scheme of falsehood, and so our author finds it, though he seems to be innocent of any knowledge of his own inconsistencies. In the quotations, above, if he does not claim that Masonry is religion, and the Christian religion as well, then does language fail to reach its own ends. Yet on another page,—the 4th, he says that Masonry 'is not in itself religious, but the handmaid and assistant to religion.' Then as to its being Christianity, he frankly admits that "in the lectures of Freemasonry there is no direct reference to Christianity.' If not in the "lectures," we know such references can be found no where else in Masonry, and if so, every intelligent mind will distrust that kind of religion, which is taught without any "direct reference to Christianity," or as Mr. Oliver has it in another place in his writings' "It," Masonry, "may be taught with all its obligations, duties and hopes, and in all its beautiful applications to life, without being trammeled by any sectarian dogmas whatever." But listen to page 6: "A Jew, a Mahometan, or a pagan, (if all these are equal worshipers in this religion,) may attend our lodges, without fear of hearing his peculiar doctrines or mode of faith, called in question, because a permanent and unalterable landmark of Masonry is the total absence and exclusion of religious or political controversy." On the same page our author gives three definitions of Masonry. This third one makes it a "Science which includes all others, which teaches all human and Divine knowledge." And yet by his own admissions above Christianity is excluded from the system, as neither Jew, Mohammedan or pagan would tolerate it there for a moment. But hear him again, in a quotation which he copies with approval from Bro. Stephen Jones; "In contemplation of the wisdom, goodness and power of the Great Architect of the universe, the Turk, (under one name) the Jew and Christian, (under another) can join in adoration: all agreeing in the grand essential and universal principle of religion, the recognition and worship of a Deity, in whose hands are the issues of life and death, though differing in some more minute tenets peculiar to each, and is it necessary that this admirable system of union for the best of purposes should be destroyed, by the introduction in a Christian lodge, of the doctrine of redemption, which must offend the Turk; or of the holy name of the Messiah, which offends the prejudices of the Jew; or in a Turkish lodge, of the name of Mohamet, which must offend both Jew and Christian, and thereby defeat the universality of an excellent institution? No! we are brethren." To quote further from Bro. Barlow's lecture, "The above extract requires more than a passing thought. It appears that these diverse persons and nationalities, have a common religion and a common worship, in which, setting aside all that is peculiar to their various national religions, they are expected to join. This religion, as Steinbrenner says, is a higher religion than all others. Other authors call it the "universal religion," including Christianity, Judaism, Mohammedanism, and all others. All these diverse religionists meet together and kneel at the same altar, as brethren! They have a ritual containing forms of prayer, by which a common access, is supposed to be had, to a common God! Must it not be a very uncommon God, who would recognize such a motley mass as a brotherhood of his begetting? The Christian's God could certainly acknowledge no such body of worshipers." Masonry as a society and in all its organized and authorized work excludes the doctrines of Christianity. From all its hymns, prayers, lectures, it omits all reference to Christ, and Gospel teaching and this is done, because Masonry is made up of Jews, pagans, Christians, infidels, etc. And with such Christless prayers, a Masonic orator says, "In the simple ferver of our mutual faith, our noble brotherhood lays its aspirations before the throne."

So with Odd-fellows, Rev. J. Dillon, in a lecture on Odd-fellowship, 1874, says, "The order is founded on a triad of principles, Friendship, Love and truth,—and not as before stated, on agreement in religious doctrines. On this broad platform men of the most opposite belief can meet with, and fellowship each other, whereas, if unity of faith were required as the condition, union would be impossible, for one would have as much right as another to make his views the standard religious basis of the association. To effect such a union therefore, the order found it necessary to exclude all points of faith and doctrine on which men honestly differ. The orthodox view of the person and work of Christ, it is a well known fact, is not now and never has been received by all professing Christians. . . . And still there are those who no doubt honestly reject the orthodox faith. Many of these belong to the order, and in deference to their faith, it was deemed expedient to leave the name of Christ out of its prayers."

[Thus the leading secret orders are practically infidel. "And what fellowship hath he that believeth with an infidel.]

In the Masonic Advocate for August, 1873, is the following question and answer: "Is it right to pray in a lodge using Christ's name?" Answer the theology of Masonry was established long before the advent of Christ upon the earth and is based solely upon the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. This is its creed. It ignores all sectarianism of whatever kind, and unites men of every country, sect and opinion upon this broad platform. The ritualistic ceremonies of Masonry are arranged to conform to this principle or idea, and in the practice of our rites, nothing should be introduced that does not accord with it. In the lodge are found men of every shade of religious belief, members of every church in the land and every chaplain or brother who makes a prayer in the lodge is but the mouth-piece of the brethren assembled, and should give utterance only to such language that all present may heartily respond, "so mote it be." The same Masonic Advocate says, "Ancient Craft Masonry as taught in our lodges bears precisely the same relatian to Christianity that it does to Buddhism, to Mohammedanism, Judaism, or to any of the other great religions of the world."

Extracts from the Cleveland Herald of a Masonic address by Rev. Dr. Jacob Meyer: "There is something divinely sublime in this ancient order." "Brethren, Freemasonry is a religion; nay it is religion itself, the very religion of mankind. Freemasonry demonstrates the unity of God in the union of the human family; one God, one universe, one family of God." Birth, education and associations may influence and regulate my private views of God. But those views are my own, which nobody has a right to interfere with; my conscience is my judge. In being, however, exclusively and indisputably mine, they peculiarize my individual position with reference to my individual God, which I am not responsible for to anybody but to my own conscience. Thus I am inviolate in my religious individuality. This truism being applicable to all and each of my fellowmen, I arrive at the conclusion that a doctrine which, while it preaches one Supreme Architect of the universe, grants every man the freedom of his individuality, thus securing the unity and union of all, is most certainly the divine principle of universal salvation." "I venture to assert that flocking round the banner of Freemasonry, everybody would be enabled to walk in the path of light and approach his Maker with all the power of his soul."

The gods they worship:—(The following is from the report on Foreign Correspondence to the Grand Lodge of New York in the year 1874; it shows what gods are worshiped in the lodge.) 'It is universally claimed, in behalf of Freemasonry, that the institution is catholic and cosmopolitan in its character, and that it studiously excludes from its lodges all systems of faith, or sect, and all mere dogmas of religion, and only requires from its initiates a belief in Deity and conformity in life and practice to the moral law. And yet we find intolerant Masons who insist that the prayer should be so worded at our lodge devotions, that their particular creed, or form of belief, as to the nature, power, substance, individualty, unity or trinity of God shall be acknowledged and worshiped, and addressed in prayer, and none other. To all such we would say, there are Masons all over the civilized world, and lodges are organized among all nations, tongues and kindred of people. What then shall the brethren do, when required to meet with those of several different creeds at one and the same time and place, or in one lodge? Shall the Parsee brother demand that the ritual of Zoroaster shall be followed and God worshiped only in or through fire? The Persian insists that all join with him in the salutation, Lah-Mah e il Allah! The brethren of Islam, that all cry, 'Allah! Ackbar! Mahomet is his prophet. The descendants of Israel, that power and glory and dominion be ascribed to God; one only; eternal and immutable.' Or, shall a Christian trinitarian insist that the only inscription made or worships had, shall be to God, in unity of substance and trinity of individuality? When all these different brethren, on this question agree in the one and great and sublime belief of faith, that God is the Supreme Being, Creator and Governor of all things infinite, eternal and great Jehovah; why then can not all meet as brethren, in a truly fraternal and tolerant spirit, one with another? And if the lodge where the 'gathering together' occurs be in the land of the Parsee, let the brother of that faith offer his prayers; if in the home of the Hindu, or the Persian, or Islamite, let one of that faith, or, better still, if the great majority in each one of these would let one who visits them offer prayer in his own way. This generosity of action, this noble exercise of true Masonic toleration would disarm that offensive spirit which seeks the propagation of a creed with the bayonet, joins the missive to be hurled with the missionary sent; and is ever furnishing materials for mere sectarian strife."

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Gain in one week		56.

One club of FIFTEEN subscribers has been received this week from S. Y. Orr, Morning Sun, Iowa. He asks the privilege of adding to the list at the same rate. Several others have made the same request. We here say to all who have succeeded during the last six months in sending in clubs of five or more that they may add subscriptions to that club for the next six months at the rates their clubs paid, if by doing so they think they can secure more subscribers than otherwise. All who avail themselves of this offer should mention the fact when they forward subscriptions. One club of five has been received from P. Nicklas and Bro., Chambersburg, Pa. Wm. Steel, Beaverton, Oregon, completes a club of five, and Ira Green, Rossville, Ill., adds four to his previous clubs of five and ten. A. W. Dunbar, Elkhart, Ind., writes: "I am in hopes of sending you more new subscriptions after spring opens and work can be obtained." A friend who has lived for many years in Du Page county, said that in his opinion a list of two hundred subscribers might be obtained by judicious canvassing in Wheaton and vicinity. Are there not several friends there who can collect clubs of five, ten, more or less, during the present spring vacation of the College term? "Time and tide wait for no man." If you have an opportunity to increase the circulation of the Cynosure DO NOT LOSE IT.

OUR YOUNGER READERS will find matters of interest to them in the Publisher's Department, 16th page of this number. Don't forget to read it.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.—We had hoped to give our readers a definite statement of the Publishing House fund in this number, and the announcement that the Carpenter building was ready to be occupied by the National Christian Association; but, as it is necessary for the Auditing Committee and Directors' Board to examine the pledges and accounts carefully in a matter of such moment, it is necessary to wait another week. Meanwhile the Directors meet on Wednesday of this week. and the General Agent and Treasurer will place before them the accounts and notes, which amount to some $10,500, for their consideration, whether or no they comply with the terms of Mr. Carpenter's agreement.

The record of the past month can be pointed to with satisfaction by every friend of the reform. The Treasurer's report of cash receipts is good reading for all but lodgemen. None can have fear of failure when works thus suppliment faith.

Marriage Certificates.

Over three months ago, we ordered 300 marriage certificates of the publisher and sent him a lot of books to pay for them. They were ordered sent to us by railroad, but the publisher sent 50 of them by mail, and they never reached us. We have just been informed that he is not able to send us any more till he can raise the money to pay for having them lithographed, though we have paid him for over 600 of them.

Several parties have sent us orders for these certificates with the money. Shall we return it, or will you have something else sent in place of the certificates? EZRA A. COOK & Co.

Topics of the Time.

The situation in Europe is more interesting just now than at any previous time since the people of Herzegovina took up arms against the Turk. Reports from the Russian press during the past week show a vast change in the discussion of the Turkish question. It will be remembered that the Austrian proposition for pacific measures, and concessions on the part of the Sultan, were refused by the revolted provinces. But their cause would have been hopeless if Austria and Russia had agreed to stand by the Andrassy agreement. The boldness with which Russian journals now declare for the insurgents is therefore a hopeful indication for them, and may lead to such complications as will drive the Musselman from European territory, which he has only held by virtue of conquest. The firman of the Sultan making concessions to the provinces was generally received by them with incredulity, and Rev. Mr. Easson, missionary at Latakia, speaks of it as only one illustration "of the way in which a Turk can lie." On the other hand the Mohammedans want no favors shown to the Christians, nominal or real.

"A paper unique in spirit and phraseology—at least as compared with similar documents in recent years," is the Boston Journal's comment of the proclamation of Gov. Rice, of Massachusetts, for the annual fast on Thursday next. It is truly a state paper of other times, recalling vividly the fervent piety of the Pilgrims, and most opportune on this hundredth anniversary of our national life. Rarely if ever, during the last quarter century, has any proclamation of this kind expressed such sentiments as these: "That He will give power on earth to the Gospel of His Son Jesus Christ our Lord, that he will feed those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, solace our adversities, dispel our fears, strengthen our faith, and ennoble our joys, with the assurance that amid all the mutations of life and death, He 'the Lord of Hosts is with us,' and that 'the God of Jacob is our refuge'" At no time has it seemed more fitting that there should be a call to sincere humiliation for national sins, and for a return to a nobler, honester manner of living. There is "power" only in the Gospel to produce this in the nation or the individual.

At the recent Christian convention in New York Mr. Moody replied to a question on the advisability of a fair to pay a church debt. "You musn't ask such a question of me without expecting an ungracious answer. I am bitterly opposed to all fairs. You do not know their effect in the West as I do. There is nothing that so opens the church to the world as these miserable church bazaars. I remember I was never as mortified as when I read in a Western paper the advertisement that for 25 cents any man could kiss the handsomest woman in the fair. I say that it is a sinful shame for which the church should blush. We can never hold a fair but the devil gets in after a while. Why, I'd rather a hundred times preach in the street than in a church erected with money raised by these means."

Stand to the Right.

Stand to the right, what'er your condition,
Even though friends may to enemies turn—
Better have enemies in a just mission,
Than a dark record of infamy earn.
Friendship that's fickle is not worth preserving,
Wealth gained by fraud and deceit is a curse.
Stand by the right then, undaunted, unswerving,
Poverty's bad, but dishonesty's worse.

Stand by the right—it were folly to barter
Self-independence for station or gain—
Better to virtue and truth fall a martyr,
Than win a success mixed with sorrow and pain.
An unsullied heart and a conscience approving
Are worth all the wealth that the world can bestow.
Stand by the right—be forgiving and loving,
Asking no favor and fearing no foe.

Stand by the right! 'Tis the best and the surest—
Wrong may appear for a time to succeed,
But he is most happy whose heart is the purest—
A self-condemned sinner is wretched indeed.
Hate and detraction in vain may assail thee,
If thou art pure when their arrows they cast;
Honor and rectitude will never fail thee—
Stand to the right, and you'll triumph at last.

What Ails America?

BY REV. J. K. ALWOOD.

There are five great evils preying upon the vitals of American society. These are Infidelity, Intemperance, Papacy, Secretism, and FOG-IN-THE-PULPIT. All evil principles and wicked institutions perfectly harmonize on one point; viz., in their opposition to the kingdom of Christ and the weal of society; and in this sense one evil is as great as another. They have a common source and a common tendency. But some evils are greater in their effects than others. Some sins are more destructive than others. Some sins are prolific roots of many others. None are greater in this respect than Fog-in-the-pulpit. The sublime prophet Isaiah, said on one occasion, "His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber. Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand; they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter." Afterwards he said, "Judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off; for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter. Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey." These words are very appropriate in our country at this time. Freemasonry and Satan in company have blinded the eyes of the watchman with riches, honors, and pleasures. Their lips are locked by solemn oaths and horrid penalties when truth is in high demand. When a false comment on God's word is needed to cover up crime they are voluble as parrots. When God says "Swear not at all," they say, "Go into the lodge and swear." When God says, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved; he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God;" these befogged, dumb watchmen say, "The votaries of benevolent institutions hate the light, and keep their best deeds in profound mystery, from fear that their kind-hearted brethren should cut their throats, tear out their tongues, cut them in two, tear out their hearts, or smite off their skulls and expose their brains to the scorching rays of the sun." Thus they flatly contradict God's word. They call God a liar. They say it is right to protect one another in crime. "Secret things belong to God." But they say, "Secret things belong to wicked, blindfolded, oath-bound men, who are corrupt enough to resort to such measures for protection against the demands of justice."

He who does not know that this is the attitude of multitudes of American pulpits, is not posted on the most important events of the day. The pulpit is the censor of the public conscience. The pulpit is sold to the god of this world and consequently wrapped in thick darkness. "Like priest like people." "My people love to have it so." No set of men are so culpable for the corruption of frauds, swindles, and defalcations of these times as the clergy. Their dastardly timidity, and loathsome lusting after the world, wrap the word of God in thick mist, and consequently vital godliness, truth, righteousness, judgment and justice are among the rare exceptions. Conscience is benumbed, truth lies bleeding, and giant crime stalks rampant over the land.

"The fair of form, the mild of mood,
Do honors to the man of blood;
Nay, smile assent to giant crime;
And call his darkest deeds sublime."

—The veteran S. D. Greene is confined at home with a painful but not dangerous ailment. Late numbers of the Cynosure have aroused his enthusiasm, and he proposes, as soon as he can get about, to start for a club of ten, or twenty, or more. These are the efforts that make the way for the reform.

The Symbolism of Masonic External Preparation.

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

The Ritual informs us that the candidate for Masonry is prepared as follows:

For the first degree: By being divested of all metals, neither naked nor clothed, barefoot nor shod, hood-winked, with a cable-tow once around his neck, in which condition he is conducted to the door of a lodge, by a friend, whom he afterwards finds to be a brother.

For the second degree: By being divested of all metals, neither naked nor clothed, barefoot not shod, with a cable-tow twice about his right arm.

For the third degree: By being divested of all metals, neither naked nor clothed, barefoot, and hoodwinked, with a cable-tow three times around his body.

That the reason he is neither naked nor clothed is, because Masonry regards no one for his worldly wealth or honors, it being the internal and not the external qualifications of a man that should recommend him to be made a Mason.

This preparation in truth symbolizes:

1st. The forlorn condition of a people bereft of God and revelation, their unregenerate and degraded humanity arising from their dearth of all knowledge of the true God, whom only they can know through the light, science, and mysteries of Blue Lodge Masonry.

2d. The improvement in their condition as attainable only by a radical regeneration from ignorance and vice through the blood and atonement of Hiram Abiff, the second person of the Masonic Trinity, who mythically died, that all the mystic "Sons of Light" might be saved from a "living grave of iniquity," and raised by the divine grace of Masonry to the "true faith" of everlasting salvation.

3d. The approach of the dread monster, and a passage through the "dark valley of the shadow of death" as a prelude to resurrection and regeneration; the laying off the habiliments of worldly affections and ties; the severance of all past relations, and a rebirth into a new world of perennial and never-fading beauty, where the Triune God of Masonry in his majesty, power and glory forever reigns on high;—the candidate scenically representing death in literal dress, and new birth in nature's feebleness of want, and presenting a living exemplification of man's lot of life—his entry and his exit—"naked he came into the world, and naked he departs," and figuratively carrying out the Scriptural truth: "Except ye be born again, ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven."

4th. The utter disregard for all worldly wealth and honors entertained by the Triune God of Masonry in his choice of living blocks for the erection of his spiritual edifice, his "house not made with hands eternal in the heavens," it being the internal and not the external qualifications of a man that recommend him to be made a Mason.

5th. The happy equality consequent upon the discarding of worldly wealth and honors, which exists in perpetuity in that heavenly Jerusalem, where the children of one Almighty Father, having through his great love and mercy been brought to a knowledge of truth and light, are ever found equally near and equally remote from his awe-inspiring throne of wisdom, strength and beauty, and upon whom he bestows with equal hand, and without respect to person, his choicest blessings.

6th. The primitive condition of mankind in the early ages of the world, when in a state of barbarism, with but few wants, scanty means, and possessing no knowledge whatever of the "arts and sciences" (Masonry especially,) and without any of the advantages which accrue to men dwelling together in organized and well-regulated society, the candidate himself personating the wild man of the woods in search of light, truth, and civilization.

7th. The outside world as savages, barbarians, and unrepentant devils with such rights and privileges only as educated, polished, and thoroughly cultivated men living in civilization and refinement may see fit to accord them, viewing their forms of government and law as crude, diabolical, and profane, without binding force, utterly unfit for recognition, and objects meet for abrogation and abolishment.

8. The urgent necessity for union and fraternity among men, the better to alleviate each other's suffering, relieve each other's wants, and sustain each other in the various pursuits of life, but more especially to "free" each other from the burdens and restraints of profane society and the rigors and penalties of profane law enforced by the usurping governments and powers of earth, exigencies which have been carefully considered and maturely met by the formation and institution of that powerful association known and designated as "Free and Accepted Masons."

9. The wretched condition of beggary, misery, destitution, and servitude which mankind are now enduring and in which they are held through the vicious power and tyranny of the profane government of the world, and from which they can be extricated only through a new birth in to a world of re-existence, a birth into that world which lives, moves, and has its being within the mystic temple, within the pale of Masonic fellowship, where the Triune God sets the captive free, the wicked world cease from troubling and the weary do find rest.

10. The sun shorn of his vigor and power and in his deadened condition of winter, the season of short days, fogs, cold sleet, snow storms, piercing winds, diminished heat, and feeble light, when the life powers of earth lie dormant and hushed in nature's grave; the candidate personating in his progress through the ceremonies of initiation, the sun in his course of travels through the signs of the zodiac and among the winter and summer constellations and becoming when his course is run and he is raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, himself a "sun of mystic light—a star in glory fixed."

11. The curse of wretchedness which the Triune God, should he spare their lives, will most certainly visit upon the sinful and disobedient of the craft through the condign punishment to be meted out agreeably to the rules and usages of his fraternity, by pointing the offenders out to the world as unworthy vagabonds, destroying their interests, deranging their business, transferring an evil character after them wherever they may go, and exposing them to the contempt of the whole fraternity and the world at large, and thus bringing home to them through the severity of their sufferings, a poignant sense of the terrible consequences to flow from divine displeasure when provoked by the misdeeds of unforgiven guilt, and imagining to them also by a reflex of their own accursed condition, a most heart-sickening realization of that parallel curse visited by Almighty God upon Adam when he was driven forth from the Garden of Eden to wander as an exile and vagabond for his great sinfulness in having disobeyed the divine command.

All of which ideas are symbolically and indissolubly connected with the candidate's state of preparation at the moment he crosses the threshold of Masonry's mystic temple to partake of its rights, lights and benefits.

Christian Holiness.

I trust "Holiness to the Lord" is written on the Cynosure as it is yet to be on all things in earth. I am glad to see that people are so generally asking, "May I expect to be holy in this present life? Let us say, Yes.

1st. Because God has commanded it. We have a right to expect that what he has commanded us to do, he will help us perform.

2d. Inspired men have prayed for it. David said, "Create in me a clean heart." Christ said, "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." "Sanctify them through thy truth." Paul said, "I pray God that your whole spirit, soul and body be preserved blameless to the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." What inspired men have prayed for we have a right to expect.

3d. God has promised it. The Lord said by Ezekiel (xxxvi. 25-27): "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you and ye shall be clean from all your filthiness and from all your idols will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you and cause you to walk in my statutes and ye shall keep my judgments and do them."

Paul says, (1 Thes. v. 27): "Faithful is he that hath called you who also will do it." This with many others, proves that God expects us to seek for and attain to holiness in this present world.

4th. As an experience, it has been actually attained. Paul says (Gal. ii. 20): "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life that I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God." Again he says (Gal. vi. 14): "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ whereby the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Again he says, "Ye are witnesses, and God also how holily and justly, and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe." (1 Thess. ii. 10): To be holy, just and unblameable, is here declared to be the behavior of the apostles. Who shall dispute it? and who in view of what Christ did for the "chiefest of sinners" shall doubt his ability and willingness "to save to the uttermost all that come unto him."

Yours in the Lord, H. H. Hinman.

An Unaccepted Challenge.

Rev. A. G. Byers, Columbus, O.:

Dear Sir:—I see by the secular press that you have been appointed Grand Chaplain of the Masonic Grand Lodge of the State of Ohio. I therefore presume that you are an admirer of Masonry. As I am honestly opposed to all secret societies, and especially to Masonry, I ask you to an oral discussion of the following: 'No man can be an intelligent Freemason and be a Christian.' I will affirm the above to be true. Discussion to take place at a place and on a time agreed upon by the parties: and to continue at leaat three days. I am a minister of the Wesleyan Methodist connection of America; and for my reputation in this community, I refer you to Rev. Mr. Rife or Rev. Mr. Howe of this place. Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience, I am, dear sir, very truly yours, Geo. Richey.

Pataskala, O., Nov. 17, 1875.

Some four months have passed since I sent the above to Rev. Mr. Byers, a leading minister of the M. E. church, and he has remained as silent as the grave. Why is it that ministers of the Christian religion will unite with and adhere to Masonry when they dare not defend it before the public? Why does Rev. Byers, a man of superior abilities, decline to defend Masonry? It is evidence to my mind that he knows that it will not bear the light of investigation. He knows that Masonry is a system of religion. A. G. Mackey in hi Lexicon, page 371, says, "All the ceremonies of our order are prefaced and terminated with prayer, because Masonry is a religious institution." It is a religion that frees its votaries from sin. See same book, page 16. "Acacian: A term derived from akakia, 'innocence,' and signifying a Mason, who by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is free from sin." Not free from sin by virtue of faith in the atoning blood of Jesus, but by strictly adhering to Masonry, which totally denies Jesus, as man's Redeemer. See Manual of the lodge, same author, p. 50. "The Blazing Star is said by Webb to be 'commemorative of the star which appeared to guide the wise men of the East to the place of our Saviour's nativity.' This, which was one of the ancient interpretations of the symbol, being considered as too sectarian in its character, and unsuitable to the universal religion of Masonry has been omitted since the meeting of the Grand Lecturers at Baltimore, in 1842." Mr. Byers well knows that the most distant allusion to Jesus is not tolerated in the religion of Masonry; for that would be too sectarian.

Mr. Byers well knows that the Bible is not the standard for the faith and practice of a Mason. See Masonic Jurisprudence by Mackey, pp. 33, 34. "It is a landmark that a 'Book of the Law' shall constitute an indispensable part of the furniture of every lodge. I say advisedly, a book of the law, because it is not absolutely required that everywhere the Old and New Testaments shall be used. The 'book of the law' is that volume which, by the religion of the country is believed to contain the revealed will of the Grand Architect of the universe. Hence in all lodges in Christian countries the book of the law is composed of the Old and New Testaments; in a country where Judaism was the prevailing faith the Old Testament alone would be sufficient; and in Mohammedan countries and among Mohammedan Masons, the Koran might be substituted."

Thus we see that the religion of Masonry, while it saves from sin, is a very accommodating affair; it is like a nose of wax, you may bend it to suit all countries and all practices.

Now, of the things which we have said, this is the sum. 1. Masonry is a religion that promises present and future salvation to its adherents. 2. Masonic religion denies Jesus Christ; therefore it is atheism, for "whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: [but] he that acknowledgeth the Son, the same hath the Father also." 3. Masonry denies that the Holy Bible is a revelation from God; makes it equal with the Koran or with the writings of Jo. Smith. No wonder Mr. Byers fears to come before the public as the advocate of this anti-Christ. I believe that the time will soon come, when all Masons will be denied a place in every branch of the Christian church that has either love for Christ or self-respect. GEO. RICHEY.

Pataskala, O., Mar. 17, 1876.

—A holy life is made up of a number of small things. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles, nor battles, nor one great heroic act, or mighty martyrdom, make up the true Christian life. The little, constant sunbeams, not the lightning; the waters of Siloam, "that go softly" in their meek mission of refreshment, not the waters of "the river, great and many," rushing down in torrent, noise and force, are the true symbols of a holy life.—Bonar.

—When an experienced Christian merely uses his experience for his own comfort, or a standard by which to judge his fellow-Christians, or makes use of it for self-exaltation, as though he were infinitely superior to the most zealous young men, such a man mars his talent, does mischief with it, and makes himself heavily responsible. I beseech you who have long walked in the way of godliness to use your experience continually in your visitations of the sick, in your conversations with the poor, in your meetings with young beginners, in your dealings with backsliders; let your paths drop fatness; let what the anointing God has given you fall upon those who are round about you.

Is it a Reformation?

There are some sanguine souls who hail every fresh exposure of political rascality, and every additional example of sharp and decisive retribution, with patriotic delight as the victory of an aroused and indignant nation over a brood of treacherous spoilers whom she has just discovered and is fast exterminating. The smashing of the Tweed ring in New York, and the Canal ring at Albany; the exposure of the Credit Mobilier corruption schemes; the overthrow of Secretary Belknap, and the flight of Mr. Schenck from the officers of the British crown, have each in their turn given unfeigned delight. The verdict just rendered in the Tweed suits, under which the city of New York will recover six millions and a half of her stolen funds, provided property to that extent can be found belonging to the thieves, is the most recent ground of congratulation. We should imagine that by this time, the joy of victory and the satisfaction of offended justice has come to pall upon the taste, and exulting patriots were beginning to inquire when the end would be reached. These victories are very gratifying, but for every serpent's head which is bruised beyond recognition, a hundred others seem to start forth in its place. We find the great political parties equally corrupt. We see accusers and accused resting under an equal stain, and we begin to wonder whether the whole nation is depraved.

We would not disparage the value of these investigations and their results. They will serve as a temporary check upon dishonest practices, and they will shame into the decency of concealment much which they will be unable to correct. But we shall not cease to testify that in all this there are no evidences of a true national reformation. Individual wrong-doers have been detected and punished, but other men of the same general character have stepped into their places. Political affairs have not been lifted away from wicked hands to the care of God-fearing men. That can only be accomplished by the elevation of politics into their true sphere as a part of religion, or as the nation's conscious service of God. Of the more general acceptance of such a conception of politics, the times do not afford a single token. It is sufficient, for proof of this, to remember that no movement for the exposure and punishment of corrupt officials has been undertaken in any higher name than that of the tax-payers. We hear much of wrong done to the people whose hard earnings go to replenish the treasury, but nothing of the honor of God who abhors theft and bribery, and before whom the land is guilty for these crimes.—Christian Statesman.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT
James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT
Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

Duties of the Hour.

VIOLA, Ill., March 16th, 1876.

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to preform:
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

The highest attainment mortals ever reach is to see the hand of God in every thing, and to learn how to move in harmony therewith. In so doing the old prophets, martyrs, saints of all past ages have marked the grandest eras of earth's history. In so doing only, can we of this age fill up God's design in our creation.

"The foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men." "Commit thy way unto the Lord, and he will direct thy steps," is spoken to governments and nations, as well as to individuals. "Happy is that people whose God is the Lord." God's great chart of civil and moral government among men and for men is the grandest work on Political Economy this world ever had; and especially now will it serve as our lighthouse for our ship of state in this perilous storm of iniquity, fraud and corruption.

The Christian's first business in any crisis is to ask. "What is duty, and how shall I perform it?" The world's first business is to ask—"What is policy, and how to make it available!"

It took ancient Israel forty years to learn how to see God's hand leading them, and to learn how to move in harmony therewith. It took their leader, Moses, forty years before that, to learn that same lesson himself. When they as a people moved too slowly, too stupid to see God's hour among them, it behooved God of necessity to thunder his righteous judgments upon them until they could see his hand, and reverence his name. Thus only can God awaken the morally dead.

God plead with our own nation forty years concerning the oppressions and wickedness of slavery. The heart of our nation hardened under this warning like Pharaoh's of old, until our highest exponent of the national will declared that "The black man had no rights that the white man was bound to respect." God corrected that mistake and cured that folly by the war of the great Rebellion with all its dreadful details. Our nation did then learn wisdom.

Forty years now God has been pleading with this nation on the rum question, rising early and sending by his prophets and apostles concerning this evil that dishonors God and ruins man. The heart of our nation hardens under all this light, and weight of woe. This iniquity and mischief is framed and licensed by a law, the highest in our law. Our nation reaps revenue from man's ruin body and soul. Say, Christian voter, how long in the light of the past history of national sins, how long can you expect God to wait on you to do your duty in this crisis, with the cry of helpless grief from the widows and fatherless of this national rum traffic?

O do not mock God and the poor, by saying that alcohol is a scientific necessity and therefore must be had, and these ills endured. Abuse you say, follows every good thing. True, true enough in this morally diseased world, but God requires you to measure out to those abuses righteous judgments in his name, which has proved availing in other ages with other sins; and has, too, proved salutary with other sins in our age. Money is a good thing as a medium of exchange; counterfeiting that money is made a high crime, state's prison offense. Fire is indispensable to human comfort, but the ill use of that element is made a high crime by universal law, state's prison offense, and more—capital, punishable with death. But counterfeiting and incendiarism both together fall infinitely short of producing the misery, and woe, and want that the licensed rum traffic now does, with our nation's knowledge and approval.—Say, Christian voter, can you see any duty here resting, upon you, for God and humanity! Make the rum traffic a crime. Take away the licensed recognition of it, and make it a high crime against the Commonwealth. Shut up the offender in the State's prison, and if the offense involve human life, let the offender as an accomplich in orime, or as in arson, where life is involved, pay the forfeit with his life. See here, Christian citizen, the whole weight and responsibility of this government, its management, its policy, all, fell into your hands this centennial year—your "ballott" that you will surely cast one way or another, will be your individual verdict on the rum traffic as well as on other vital issues—for God and humanity, or against them. Neither of the old parties make this an issue; both are pledged to licensed rum. Both parties bow to this rum king as Whig and Democrat did to slavery. Both parties now leave God entirely out of this count. Christian voter, where is duty at this hour? The recording angel will keep this tally. The National Temperance Alliance raises a standard against rum. The American Party does the same, and more, against organized secrecy, the fruitful parent of iniquity and crime. These parties are God's witnesses in the present crisis; they "stand in the breach" between our national sins and God's righteous judgments. God bless them.

A word to Republican friends. You stick to the Republican party, doubtless with good motives. You can see, as all might see, that the Democracy of to-day is enmity against our republican government "in the letter and in spirit." It is rebellion itself, and despotism besides. So you say the Republican party must save our country, must live for that end. Your motive is good, but are your means, your party, the best you can use? You say it is an established party, with fixed principles devoted to liberty. Sorry to contradict you here. Had it been devoted to liberty enough to have hung the leaders in treason against this government, and thereby have saved thousands of honest victims since the war; had it been fixed in principles of honesty and true Republicanism against "salary grab," and "credit mobilier," and rum license; were it now established in anything higher and nobler than holding place and power, it might have a claim on your support. The American party is Republicanism, with rum and organized secret despotism left out.

J. C. Graham

—A revival of the Whig party is probably an inevitable incident of the political future. The Republican party was constituated of anti-slavery Democrats and of anti-slavery Whigs. The pro-slavery and reactionary Whigs at the same time went over to the Democratic party, and some of them and much of their spirit rule in that party to-day. The mixture has not been a happy one in either party. The elements are incongruous; they coalesced for a purpose, and the end having been accomplished, these elements show signs of a determination to separate. It remains to be seen in which of the two present parties the real and sound Democratic doctrines—the doctrines of hard money, local self-government, and non-interference—will obtain the predominance. At present they seem to be more vigorously and sincerely asserted in the Republican than in the Democratic party and the Independents, who lean just now toward the Republican side, are mainly infused with the true Democratic spirit, and so far as they can influence the Republican policy, will carry it in that direction. But there is no doubt that the Whig spirit and Whig principles of centralization and consolidation are strong among many of the most influential Republican leaders, and there lies the danger to the Republican party in the future.—N. Y. Herald.

In my article in Cynosure, Feb. 17th, on the effects of bad voting, read five thousand—not 500,000. Slavery was the curse of the land till our voters raised up a Lincoln. Now naught but our votes can exterminate 5 000 secret clans of oath-bound conspirators. Friends, if you expect Christ will judge you "according to the deeds done in the body," will you—can you vote for the powers of darkness to rule out his laws from the earth, and then hope to face that deed in safety before your Judge? Temperance.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Woman's Temperance Union Mar. 31st, some very encouraging reports of progress in the work were made. The report of the Executive Committee contained an interesting reference to the work which the ladies have accomplished in private. They have visited police courts, and have gained considerable valuable information concerning the relation of intemperance to crime. A plan has been put in operation to make the polls at the next election more respectable than they have been in the past, and the ladies propose to break up the back-door trips to saloons. A temperance movement has also been successfully begun among the newsboys of the Home. The Treasurer's report showed a balance of $510. Equally encouraging reports were made of the Sunday services at Lower Farwell Hall, the average attendance at which has been from 110 to 200. During this month 158 signatures were secured to the pledge.

Small Pox! Small Pox!

Mr. Editor:—It would seem from your last issue that the report of two mild cases of small-pox in an adjoining county has aroused the "eternal vigilance" of Dansville! The supervisors, the physicians, health officers, the board of health, sound the alarm and muster to the rescue! Resolutions, ordinances, rules and regulations are adopted to warn and protect the citizens, large placards are posted through the principal streets, and sentinels are appointed and posted to guard the town from the approach of the dread disease. This is considerate surely. This is wise, it is humane, it is indeed suiting the action to that good old saying, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Even though two or three only should be found susceptible or exposed to the infection, and suffer and perhaps die from the disease. But is it not a most singular and incredible fact that the same profound wisdom and consideration should not only indifferently suffer, but deliberately license and thus legalize and sanction any number of places to be fitted upon purpose, and in an enticing style, and kept open night and day, Sundays not excepted; for spreading throughout the community an infectious, diffusive, maddening and destructive poison, a poison infinitely worse than small pox! Infinitely worse from its moral, social and material effects upon society; infinitely worse because it not only kills the character and kills the body, but kills the soul! A poison which when taken into the system irritates and inflames the mucous membrane of the stomach, disturbs and deranges the liver and kidneys, fouls and fires the blood, disorders and weakens the tissues, bedevils and frenzies the brain, corrupts and depraves the heart, perverts the judgment, benumbs and deadens the sensibilities, stupifies and sears the conscience, and in short, degrades and palsies the whole man; bloats his face, blears his eyes, burns his vitals, blasts his industry and his usefulness, blasts his character and his happiness, blasts the peace and comfort and happiness of his family and friends, blasts his hopes of heaven, and finally, if through the commission of crime, to which it directly leads, it does not thrust him into prison, or suspend him upon an ignominious gallows, or dump him dead in a gutter, or kill him in a drunken fray, it soon hurls him into the burning hell of delirium tremens, a most frightful disease, which, for its indescribable horrors, the annals of suffering humanity furnish no parallel, not even the fearful hydrophobia! Talk of small-pox! Who would not rather a son, a brother, a father or a husband would die, so to speak, forty deaths of small-pox, than live one vile life of drunkenness, and die one wild, frantic, hopeless, despairing and horrible death of delirium tremens!—Geo. W. Clark in Dansville Advertiser.

Revival and Temperance.

In Chicago, the Daily Temperance meeting in Farwell Hall is attended by a large number of men once addicted to drink. This congregation is fluctuating—some soon obtaining work, others removing from the city, most non-attendants upon the churches—whose chief moral instruction is here, or not at all. Last October a stranger from Boston, thinking a meeting conducted by ladies a novel sight, wandered into lower Farwell Hall meeting. This man, an inebriate for twenty years was touched as never before. All the next day the sweet songs and testimonies reverberated through his memory. Friendless, hungry, shivering, walking the streets for want of shelter the night previous, he here found practical sympathy, and, filled with gratitude, he formed the solemn purpose of a regenerated life.

"If there be any salvation for me, I will find it" he said. So earnest was he, that, on the weary foot-march for employment, entering a cemetery, kneeling alone on the cold sod, he poured out his prayer to God. But the only answer seemed to be the strengthening of his resolves, for no work appeared. Still he said, "You may not believe it, but I am ten times the man I was when I came in here first." Then followed an interval of absence, when we feared him lost. Presently he entered the headquarters his pure complexion, neat attire, and manly bearing, attesting that he had kept his pledge.

"God has answered all my prayers," was his joyful testimony. He had found work and a Christian home.

Last week a refined young man, a fashionable drinker, called to sign the pledge.

"This ends my drinking forever. This means more than you know. This carries other reforms with it." On being told there were crises of life in which destiny was decided, he said, "This is the turning point in mine!"

These are samples of the work that God is doing through the Temperance Union.

O, consecrated ones, thrust in the sickle into this great ripe harvest and reap. The Master of the vineyard is come, and calleth, O brother, O sister, for thee! Social drinking is Satan's masterpiece. It is the prolific parent of all other vices. It silences conscience. It renders nugatory the preaching of the pulpit. It unfits the masses for all just consideration of truth and duty. It keeps multitudes out of heaven. Let the church mass their forces against this enemy, that they may take the world for Christ!—M. B. Holyoke.

Anniversary of the Iowa Anti-secrecy Association.

There will be a convention of the friends of anti-secretism at Western, Linn Co., Iowa, commencing at 7½ P. M. Tuesday, April 25th, 1876, and to continue in session until Thursday, 27th. Walker of Illinois, and other able speakers will be present. Let the auxiliary associations, churches and neighborhoods favoring the objects of the convention see that delegates be chosen to represent them, and all unite in defraying expenses of delegates.

Systematic and sworn secrecy is a an enemy to the church, the state, and the social compact, and must be defeated by the force of truth and the grace of Him who in secret said nothing. Let prayer be offered that the convention be blessed with abundant success.

Delegates from the south and north will stop at Ely Station, which is three miles east of Western, on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Minnesota R. R. Those from the east and west will come to Cedar Rapids and then to Ely Station, where conveyance will be furnished to Western. M S. DRURY.

Notes by the Way from the Illinois Agent.

At Lanark we have many warm friends and an efficient organization, The labors of Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. P. Hurless, and E R nayne have had a marked effect. In view of the fact that in two of the churches protracted meetings were in progress, it was not deemed best to have more than a private meeting of the friends for consultation and prayer. From there in company with Mr. Corning, the earnest friend of this cause, I went to Mt Carroll. Our cause had never been presented here and its friends were few and timid. Rev. Corse of the Evangelical Association, and Rev. J Dodson of the U. B. church, a seceding Mason, gave us an earnest God-speed, but were so engaged that they could not aid us. I preached for Bro. Dodson on Friday evening and on Saturday evening lectured in Lee's Hall to a good audience, which was made up largely of Masons and Odd-fellows. Expenses were $4.50, receipts, $1.57; but we sold books enough so that we were able to pay our bills, and left to preach next morning at the Center Hill U. B. church, and lecture there the next evening.

From thence I turned homeward and on the 15th returned to Winnebago, where I gave two lectures in the Free Methodist church with a good attendance considering the state of the weather and roads. From here I went to Rockford, called on some friends and went south to Kishwaukee, where I spent the Sabbath. By invitation of the pastor, Rev. Mr. Brooks, I preached and lectured twice in the Wesleyan church. We have many warm friends here; friends who do not forget the two grand elements of success, praying and giving. Bro. Brooks has been suffering for six months from fracture of the hip joint and has but just resumed preaching Fathers Sovereign and Bothwell, two aged Wesleyan preachers, supplying his place.

From thence I came to Byron where I unexpectedly found our General Agent. With him I went to Wales, where I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. J. Wright, who shows our faith in our reform by gifts and works. I spoke in the U. B. church to a fair audience, and had the best of attention. There are no Masons here except the M. E. minister, who is reputed to be one. May the Lord bring him to a better light than that of the lodge.

On Sabbath morning, March 26th, I came back to Byron on horse-back through deep snow-drifts, and by invitation of Rev. Beekman, pastor of the Congregational church, preached from Is. xliii. 10. The Lord was with me and seemed to give power to his word.

On Monday evening, March 27th, I spoke in the Congregational church to a good congregation. Quite a number of Masons were in attendance, and gave excellent attention. Bro. Milo Smith, a member of the church, and who was made a Mason in the Byron lodge, added his most effective testimony, confirming what I said of the lodge. Others, including the pastor of the M. E. church manifested a spirit of honest inquiry that was most encouraging, and on the whole, the cause is making good progress in Byron.

From here, after one more lecture I go to Henry county. Yours in the Lord, H. H. HINMAN.

From Marion County, Ind.

Mar. 14, 1876.

Three years ago Bro. Stoddard gave us two lectures here. The Masons called him bad names. One year ago this winter John Levington gave us five lectures and the Masons said he lied and did not know what he was talking about. One Mason said he was a great advantage to them, for all the women that heard him wanted their husbands to join the lodge. But lately the people have been reading; I have sold several books and got a few subscribers for the Cynosure, and when Kiggins came the people were better prepared to believe him. He gave three lectures at West Newton and two at Beech Grove, at each place in Friends' meeting house. Of course the Masons were mad, but the people were well pleased with the lectures and are beginning to get their eyes open; and some of the Masons in West Newton are already ashamed of their order and all that is wanting now is for Ronayne to come here and expose the whole fraud in all its heathenish forms, and Masonry will be dead in West Newton. I think there is a month's work for Ronayne in Marion, Morgan, and Hendricks counties.

How often do we hear the expression, "O the Masons are too strong. You can't put them down now; it is too late." This is cowardly. I believe that if the Cynosure could be read by every intelligent man in the United States for one year, and then it be left to a vote they would vote down the lodge. Masonry would be killed so dead that it could never be brought to life again. I think the Cynosure the best paper in the world. With such a board of managers and such an army of good Christian soldiers in the field, I never think of failure. I have joined this army for life or during the war.

PRESTON ALLEN.

Ronayne in Medina County, Ohio.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

No pen can adequately describe the scene of the laying out of our Grand Master Hiram Abiff at Medina, by E. Ronayne. His showing Freemasonry to be a living lie, opposed to all good was truly successful. His vindication of the teachings of the Bible and of good men of all ages from all sympathy with the spirit and principles of Freemasonry was complete. His showing that Freemasonry was of the devil, gotten up by the devil to promote his own cause and would land its votaries in the lodge below, was truly awful and convincing.

I would not recommend Mr. Ronayne to continue working the degrees unless in communities where strongly urged. There is so much fraud, idolatry, lying and tomfoolery in the ceremonies, lectures and oaths that no just man can assist in the performance, even with a mental reservation, without feeling humiliated. There is no need of Mr. Ronayne's working the degrees. If he will go forth in the strength and name of the Lord God of hosts the man who will not be convinced of his sincerity and knowledge, and be moved to action by his earnest appeals and exposition of the truth, will never be moved until Gabriel's trump shall call him to judgment. In haste, yours,

BRO. K:—It is late to say anything of Bro. Barlow's visit and labors in this vicinity, Homer and Butler, more than two months past. But a few words even now may be encouraging. I was able to be with him in his labors only two nights. He preached for me, and for the Lord, and I think was acceptable to both. From what I hear of the four lectures he gave, and another sermon, they were all excellent, had a good effect, encouraged the friends of this great reform, strengthened the wavering, convinced the doubting, caused some of the adherents to the polluted system of secretism to look ashamed and keep still, and some who are set against conviction were stirred up and protruded a very poisonous but dull sting. Many are wanting more lectures through these and adjacent towns. I think several weeks could be profitably spent in this region at a proper time by Bros. Barlow and Remington. We have a good many warm friends to the reform who are willing others should pay the bills, but it is so in all reforms. I am anxious to have the Publishing House secured. Have been weighing my scanty portion to see if I could not pinch out another $100. It is doubtful. Lord give courage and success is my prayer.

Appeal to Unwilling Masons in the Church.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I wish to say a few words in behalf of my brethren in the M. E. Church, and all others concerned, in regard to the relation which they sustain as members of the Masonic association. These poor men are slaves, bound down in the very worst kind of slavery. I speak of those who have gone into the lodge under false impressions, not having given the subject the proper consideration; and while expecting good, have found no real good but much evil. I believe there are many who hate the institution as they hate the devil, but dare not express their views. Now my dear brethren, look at your associates; behold your "master," behold your "brethren." Who is this you call "Worshipful Master?" Who are these you call "brethren?" You abhor this institution of Masonry. You know it is a work of darkness. You realize it is the devil's stronghold; it is Satan's seat.

Perhaps you are a young minister standing upon the walls of Zion to warn the people of the evils that now exist and of those that are approaching. You have been led into this den by men whom you thought were Christians, you find yourself burdened, and bound with the most galling bonds. You want to unburden your soul; you seek the counsel of a senior minister; you approach him, and lo! you discover he is your "brother." "Ah," you say, "I dare not communicate my feelings to him; he will report me to the lodge as a traitor and I shall be summoned to appear before my 'worshipful' and there perhaps I will see him whom I have sought as a spiritual counselor ready to take my life in that manner in which I suffered, the penalty to be imposed upon me at my initiation. O what shall I do! Here I am surrounded with men that ought to be my spiritual guides and counselors, and I call them 'brother,' 'brother;' but O! how do I really regard them? I fear if I unburden my mind to them that I will have to suffer a terrible death."

Thus, dear friends, does every member of the order hold all of the other members. And no matter how dark and damnable may be the deed, you must keep it concealed, or your own life is at stake; and no matter how much you may want to get out of this damnable pit of mire and clay there is no help in man; your only hope is in God. Are you willing to lose your life for the sake of your great Master, who has said he that will save his life shall lose it, but he that will lose his life for my sake shall keep it unto eternal life. Weigh the matter well. Do you fear men who are able to kill the body but after that have nothing more they can do, more than you fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. O come out from it and assert your freedom as servants of the most high God!

As for those that strictly adhere to the institution no matter what their profession is, I believe the only way to move them is to make them feel that they are lost, that the wrath of God abideth upon them and unless they speedily repent they will be lost forever. May God help them to see themselves as he sees them. L. Raymo.

Another Witness.

Springfield, Ill., March 27th, 1876,

Dear Cynosure:—In 1868 I became a third degree Mason, I am now willing to testify before the world that I renounce and denounce it. I have always felt that a Christian man had no business to be a Mason, for religion cannot mix with Masonry any more than oil will with water; and I do desire this work may go on in the name of Israel's God, and Masonry be hurled to its native hell, that the name of God may be honored by all.

I am now living in Springfield, Ill., O how I long to see the Anti-masonic, banner floating on the breeze and on the banner inscribed: "Holiness to the Lord," that we may soon realize that the Lord ruleth and reigneth.

Charles G. Webb.

From a Baptist Church Record.

Carmel, N. Y., Mar. 22, 1876.

Editor Cynosure:

I find in the history of the Baptist church of Carmel, N. Y., of which I have been a member about forty years, that the church put brethren under admonition for joining the Masons in December, 1802. There is no more said about the matter until March 29th 1823, the following question was made the subject of a special conference of the church and answered in the affirmative: "Shall we continue those members which have now a standing with us and receive all that we believe to be a Gospel experience, if they do belong to the Masonic order?" This matter was called up again November 5th, 1825, and resolutions passed which read: "1st. All former acts relative to Masonry are hereby recalled. 2nd. We disapprove of the external acts of Masonry where they go to the grief of the brethren." There is no more said about the matter until 1828. The Masonic excitement still continued and had prevented the church from coming to communion for a long time. To meet this the church on the 17th of May, 1828, voted "that it should be considered a church discipline that a member of the church should visit the Freemason lodge and agreed to come to communion two weeks from to-morow." Hiram Cole.

The Seceders.

Elmwood, Ill., March 24, 1876.

Dear Cynosure:—The list of seceding Masons seems to get but few additions as yet. I know of four Master and three Entered Apprentice Masons who have renounced and denounced the lodge more or less publicly, but who do not quite like to give their names for that list. One good Christian man who has not been in a lodge for more than thirty years, is yet afraid to have his name appear from some indefinable dread, or fear of something, and I find that nearly all the seceding Masons have this terror. Is not this a commentary on the Masonic profession of charity and brotherly love?

I find men who are Odd-fellows, grangers, etc., who could not be induced to become Masons, because they believe Masonry wrong, and yet they dare not open their mouths publicly against the iniquities of Masonry, because they belong to a "sister society," in fact, this is the argument used by Masons to close their mouths. Masonry seems anxious to multiply the brood of the lesser secret "orders" and increase their membership, because if this does not at once increase the number of applicants to the "ancient" craft, it puts candidates in training, or leading strings, and, at least, corks up opposition. Men who would otherwise be fearless advocates of the truth, are held under false notions of honor from taking any part in this great reform. It occurs to me that a better way to get at the real feeling on the subject among Masons, is to take from the Grand Lodge reports the number of men who are indefinitely suspended for non-payment of dues.

The lodge at this place gets twenty-five dollars for the three degrees. A member informed me not long since that his dues were less than two dollars a year. Now if it is a fact that such exalted rights and benefits are obtained as they pretend, and for which a man must pay not less than $25 and declare upon his honor that, "unbiassed by friends, and uninfluenced by mercenary motives," he seeks membership in this high-toned order, why is it, that in this country last year 12,620 were suspended for non-payment of dues? The paltry sum required is too small to say that poverty is the reason. The truth is that a very large proportion of these suspensions are of members who feel that they have been sold, and by quietly dropping out they escape the odium attached to seceding, and they have not a word to say. There are others of this class who imagine they did see something grand, "that it is a good thing if it was lived up to," but they explain that Masonry is not now what it was once, so many scoundrels have got into the lodge that it is practically run in the interest of rascals, hence they cannot affiliate. I am acquainted with several such illustrations, and probably there is not a town of any size in the whole country that is without such representation, so just to publish a list of the few who feel it their duty to give their names makes the movement look very small, and does not in any way represent the real feeling on the subject, nor by any means the extent of the opposition to Masonry from its own ranks. I will soon tell the friends of our reform what we are doing here for the work. For the war, H. W. Marsh.

From an Elder of the Mormon Church.

Rossville, Ill., March 22. 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

While under the hospitable roof of your friend and subscriber, A. Lewis, Esq., I met with several copies of your journal, and read with interest some of the articles contained therein, in addition to your platform for the coming Presidential campaign, and could not but but feel to endorse the sentiments contained therein, especially the points wherein you contend so earnestly for the maintenance of the Bible in our public schools, and the prohibition of the manufacture of liquor.

While in conversation with Mr. L. he stated that the general impression was that the people with whom I live and with whom I am one, were members of the Masonic fraternity and Odd-fellows society. While I am ignorant as to the purposes and designs of the above named societies, I yet wish to set the "Mormon" people right before the eyes of the world upon that subject. We as a people have nothing whatever to do with these societies; are not members of them; do not uphold or sustain them; but on the contrary find some of the bitterest enemies we have in the ranks of the Masons, who have a lodge in Salt Lake city, composed of men, who to-day are moving heaven and earth to cause trouble to come upon a much misunderstood and maligned people. That they do this as Masons, I could not say, but that they do this as men, I do know.

Wishing you success in the promulgation of the principles of temperance and peace, I am very truly yours,

Elder J. Morgan,

Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The Publishing-House.

Paxton, Ill., Mar. 21, 1876.

Editor Cynosure:

Enclosed you will find $12 for the Publishing House. Times are dreadful hard, but we cannot forego the privilege of contributing our mite. On the next installment may the Bountiful Giver enable us to do more. One especial reason that deeply moves us, is, that daily prayers are to be offered up in this House. What an instrument of power for good is this? Other instrumentalities are essential; but this is the main-spring, and gives life and power to the whole. What a precious legacy is this? When each in his place scattered here and there, in city and village, on prairie and hillside, and mountain, in every vocation in the midst of the struggle, and toil, and conflict, realizes that fervent and effectual prayer is daily ascending to God in their behalf, it fills them with a new strength, gives them new courage, new hope, new zeal. May I be included in the number of those who shall share in this rich legacy. May each and every true soul be included. May the Publishing House become the center of an influence which will secure a union of prayer which shall shake the dominions of darkness and scatter the night of secrecy, and bring in the full-orbed light of truth and righteousness.

I have been pressed down by paying security money, and thought I could not do anything. But I could not let this struggling crisis pass without doing something, so I put down ten dollars; the sum looks little; I wish I could make it a thousand times as large. Then Johnny said he would give a dollar if Frank would. Well, who are Johnny and Frank? Johnny is a fifteen-year old orphan boy who has lived with me three years. He asks the privilege of raising a pig to make some money, so as to have some to give to a good cause. Surely Johnny shall have his pig. By the way, he takes the Cynosure. Frank is a young man who is like Jacob, he halts on one leg, having his hip joint dislocated by inflamatory rheumatism. He gets his money by hard work. But he wants some stock in such a precious investment. He has a heart big enough to give a thousand, but will not be denied the privilege of giving his mite. He also takes the Cynosure.

Readers of the Cynosure can you not look right close about you and in one week find enough names to consummate this most glorious work? How sweetly we shall sleep, how joyously shall we awake when this is done.

A Friend of the Reform.

Mantorville Minn., March 17, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Some time since I made an offer of one hundred dollars for the Publishing House, provided the whole amount would be raised. But fearing the first instalment, (ten thousand dollars) would not be raised by first of April A. D., 1876, I hereby enclose a P. O. order for $25 hoping (by what I. see acknowledged) that the said ten thousand will be forth coming.

There are many things this year, urged upon the attention of Christians by way of contribution, but few if any in my mind are of more importance than the anti-secret reform. The Christian Cynosure, is the only really sonnd paper advocating reform in temperance, including the monstrous evil of tobacco-using in all of its forms as well as the evil of alcohol stimulants; but to the shame, (shall I say it) of most of our churches and ministers, but little notice is taken of the evils growing out of the habit of tobacco-using and sworn secrecy.

Now I hold that it is more inconsistent for any Christians church to receive into its membership a person belonging to any oath-bound secret organization, than to receive a member into church relation who is at the same time holding church relation in or with another Christian church, and expects to so continue; and not only so but being as I am a member of the regular or close communion Baptist church (so called) I consider, it far more inconsistent to receive to our communion a Freemason or Odd-Fellow than a member of any orthodox church. Oh consistency where is thy jewel!

S. Hillman.

OUR MAIL.

E. W. Bruce, Hickory Corners, Mich., writes:

"I am trying to stand firm in the cause of reform and hope the time is not far distant when a complete victory will be ours. While lecturing last year in Oceana Co., exposing the works of the Masonic darkness as best I could, I felt that the Lord was with me and success attended my labor. During the course of my lecture three Masons, two of them Master Masons, one of whom was a minister of the Gospel acknowledged that I had told the truth. We have many friends here who are fighting the old 'handmaid' and we expect to 'fight it out on this line.'"

A friend in York, Pa., renews for 3 months and writes:

"Again I am compelled to renew for a short time, as I cannot send a larger amount. But as soon as I can do so I will renew for a year."

Renewals for six months are much more welcome than discontinuances. We can sympathize with people who are scarce of money.

Silas Waldron, Norfolk, N. Y., writes:

"I circulate my papers after I have read them. They take well with some; others can't believe that a man can so degrade himself as to go through the performance as represented We have a good many Masons about here. I thought I would get a man to lecture here, but as yet I have not done so. It is a disgrace for a minister of the Gospel to be initiated if not to any one else."

J. M. Snyder, Norton, Ill., sends a new name with his renewal and writes:

"Much of the labor in bringing up the subscription list of the Cynosure grows out of the fact that it was started twenty years too soon for a popular movement. * * You cannot go backward and can only go forward slowly, but you are right and God is with you and will be."

Our General Agent on hearing the above letter remarked that in his opinion the Cynosure should have been started earlier instead of later. However, we think with Mr. Snyder that it is gaining ground and will soon rise above all embarassments occasioned by its starting either too late or too early.

Hiram Hough, New Garden, Ind., writes:

"I am deeply interested in the spread of our principles in regard to secret societies. I never let an opportunity pass without putting in a word for the good cause. I hope it will gather strength as it rolls on until it drives out all darkness."

Wm. Mauchmer, Constantine, Mich., writes:

"We had J. L. Barlow here last night to lecture for us and he will be here Saturday night and give us another one. He stirred up the Masons considerably. We have a bad set of Masons here, and outside people are blind."

Wm. Steel, Portland, Oreg., writes:

"I wish the cause the greatest success, and having been one of the "Old Liberty Guard" the Masons will not likely try to scare me much."

Stephen Jackson, Lamoille, Ia., sends his renewal and writes:

"I like a paper that will defend the right as well through evil as through good report."

R. D. Nichols, Jonesville, Mich., writes:

"As I pass around I gather evidence from members of the grange and from Odd-fellows of the genuineness of the Exposition of these two secret societies respectively as published by the Cynosure. Also acknowledgments that Odd-fellowship and Freemasonry make no provision for the redemption of lost men, there being no atonement or Saviour provided, and that Masonry at least hinders the conversion of its members, one Mason saying to another that he would like to have all the young men converted before joining the lodge, because they are less likely to be afterwards. I presume that the religion of Masonry is not always discovered to be Christless or satisfaction with it would be less common. The closer the counterfeit the more harm."

M. W. Holt, Barton, Wis., sends 7 subscriptions and writes:

"I am sensible that your paper has changed many minds in this vicinity. * * By putting your paper in the hands of different individuals you have gained several subscribers before this."

Mary Lancaster, Cambridge, Me., writes:

"We are living in a quiet little village where some of our best citizens are Masons. The Masonic Hall is near us. The superintendent of our Sabbath school is a Mason of the third degree. My soul yearns to place the truth in the hands of the leading members of the church who are not Masons also in the hands of our intelligent young men out of the church. How can I reach them? I am doing all that I can with what I have to do with, and I think I am doing good. I am ready to do what I believe I ought, leaving the results with God."

Nellie Swan, Tomaroa, Ill., writes:

"If by the grace of God I am permitted to rear my family I shall make it one great object of my life to instruct and warn them against the evils of associations which bind their members with the most terrible oaths to protect their brethren whether right or wrong. And I wish that every mother in the land would go and do likewise."

Eli Hoover, Bennet's Switch, Ind., writes:

"My health has been so poor this winter that I could not get out from home much. When I do I always remember the Cynosure."

We hope your health will improve rapidly, and also that those with better health will follow your example in "remembering the Cynosure."

Oscar E. Shoup, Cheapside, Ont., writes:

"Send me two Expositions of the grange. I like the paper."

Cannot our list of names from Ontario be increased? The subscribers we have there now though few in number seem to warmly approve of the sentiments of the paper.

Mrs. L. W. Rowley, Utica, Minn., writes:

"I am now 60 years old and remember well the Morgan excitement, also read the Morgan Expose. The oaths and penalties in the late ones are the same. Let us hope that the all-wise Ruler in his own good time will cause Freemasonry with all its sustaining links to be overthrown. They are operating badly in these parts on Sabbath schools and meetings. Minnesota needs a lecturer with the moral courage of a Cameron to awaken her to action."

Let any one who will volunteer to take this place address J. P. Stoddard at this office.

H. M. Woodford, Waverly, Ia., writes:

"I like your paper and often think of what Mr. Kiggins said when he lectured here a year or so ago, that God's mill grinds slow but sure. The lectures which we have had here in exposing Masonry are by no means forgotten."

Earnest Thompson, Gillette, N. J., writes:

"I am finding out something new every week of the power and influence of Masonry and Odd fellowship, and I am greatly indebted to your paper for knowledge and arguments to meet the great evil that pervades many of the towns about here."

J. Hankins, Mason City, Ia., writes:

"I am glad to see the importance of an independent church organization discussed embodying the principles of our reform. I suggested that to Bro. Stoddard a year ago. Will hold myself ready to enter that body as soon as opportunity offers. In addition to the seceding Masons of Iowa you may give two more who publicly renounced Masonry at the National camp-meeting at Cedar Rapids over two years ago; E Skinner, now P. E. on Dubuque dis. and Rev. Burnett of the upper Iowa Conf."

Lesson for Apr. 16.—Peter's Defense.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts ii. 12-28. Commit 16 21. Primary Verse, 21.

12 And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this?

13 Others mocking said, These men are full of new wine.

14 But Peter standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice and said unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words:

15 For these are not drunken as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day.

16 But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel;

17 And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams:

18 And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy:

19 And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke:

20 The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come:

21 And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.

22 Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazereth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know:

23 Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain:

24 Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that he should be holden of it.

25 For David speaketh concerning him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face; for he is on my right hand that I should not be moved:

26 Therefore did my heart rejoice and my tongue was glad; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope:

27 Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

28 Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.

Farm and Garden.

There appears no settled rule in regard to the seeding of grass-land. Farmer A has sown in the spring, and had excellent success, while Farmer B failed of a stand; and so it is for all seasons of the year, failures and success lie along the pathway. To the practical farmer the success is plain, for then the conditions of moisture and warmth were favorable, and, on the other hand, unfavorable. In this part of the country, the best time for seeding is after the ground has been frozen and a light snow has fallen. The snow is useful as showing how the seed has been distributed, and the first thaw carries the seed to the moist earth, and it becomes imbedded into it, and, on the approach of warm weather, is sure to grow. In short, I have never known a failure when thus sown. For this purpose, the land should be prepared in the fall, harrowed and rolled. At all other seasons there is more or less of risk, as the season may not be so favorable. During a wet summer we may sow at any time, and I have known many instances of success in sowing on the stubble in July and August; but it is many years since such a venture would have been a success. Some argue that any time during the winter will do equally well; but such is not the fact, and the better time is early in the season, along with the first light falls of snow. As regards clover, the same rule holds good. No set of fixed rules can be adhered to, for things must be taken as they are; yet we must select the best time, and take advantage of it when possible to do so. It is this that makes the difference in results. Then, again, the proper time and good preparation make a difference in the quantity of seed sown, and this accounts for the difference in practice,—one man sowing 6 quarts and another 16 to the acre; and both are right, and generally have about the same stand of plants. The one, depending on the better preparation and more proper time, requires less seed; and sometimes the use of a roller makes all of this difference. More than one-half of the grass and clover-seed is thrown away on bad management. This is a great waste, and often useless, though we must not forget that occasionally we are compelled to sow out of the best season, and must take the risk. The weather is beyond our control, and all we can do is to so arrange our plans as to meet ordinary conditions.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 1876.

"A new departure" for the children will be found on the 16th page. Their "Corner" always has good things for them, but it is likely to overflow if they become engaged as young reformers.

THE "FIRE IN THE REAR."

The history of the lodge during the late war of the Rebellion would, if fully written, form the darkest chapter of that dark period of our National history. Sowing a treasonable spirit in the ranks at the front, it organized most effectively against the Union cause in treasonable societies in the rear. The following from a New York paper during the later years of the war is a most remarkable statement, and most conclusive of the treasonable operation of the secret orders.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.

Judge Advocate General Holt's report upon the testimony gathered by him concerning the treasonable secret organizations formed in the loyal States as adjuncts to the rebellion, is published in the Post to-day. According to this report the treasonable order embraces societies bearing various titles, such as the Mutual Protection Society, Circle of Honor, Knights of the Mighty Host, Knights of the Golden Circle, Corps de Belgique, Southern League, Order of American Knights, Order of the Sons of Liberty, Peace Organization, Star Organization, American Organization, Democratic Invincible Club, Democratic Reading Room, and McClellan Minute Men. The latter title is the one borne by a secret political organization in the State of New York and other parts of the North. Of it Judge Holt says, it would seem to be a branch of the Order of American Knights, having substantially the same objects to be accomplished by means expressly suited to the localities in which it is established; for as the chief Secretary of this association, Dr. R. F. Stevens, stated in June last, to a reliable witness whose testimony had been furnished, that those who represent the McClellen interests are compelled to preach a vigorous prosecution of the war in order to secure them the popular sentiment.

The McClellan minute guard as appears in a circular issued by the chief Secretary at New York, is organized upon a military basis similar to that of the order proper. It is composed of companies, one for each election district ten of whom constitutes a brigade, with a Brigadier General at its head.

The whole is placed under a commander-in-chief. The first supreme commander of the order was P. C. Wright, editor of the New York News who was last May sent to Fort Lafayette. Vallandingham was his successor.

Robert Hollaway, of Illinois, acted in Vallandingham's stead during the absence of the latter from the country.

Col. Sanderson, in his report on the progression of the order, expresses the opinion that the order was founded by Vallandingham during his banishment and upon consultation with Jeff Davis and other prominent traitors at Richmond.

The order in Indiana boasts that the ritual came direct from Davis, and one of the witnesses states positively that Davis was a member.

The members belonging to the order have been variously estimated at from 300,000 to 1,000,000, but Vallandingham in his Dayton speech puts it at 500,000, which is probably nearest the total. These are scattered through Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Kentucky, Missouri and New York.

In March last, the entire armed force of the order, capable of being mobilized for service, was represented to be 340,000.

The testimony shows that arms have been furnished the members. In the Hon. D. W. Voorhees' office were found letters to Ex-Senator Wall, of New Jersey, in regard to the purchase of 20,000 Garibaldi rifles, to be forwarded to the West.

Arms were to be furnished the order by way of Canada, and to be paid for by assessment upon the lodges.

Much testimony was taken upon the point and the report is full of evidence of extensive operations in this particular.

The ritual contains broad declarations of State rights, and against the authority of the Federal Government to coerce, by arms, a sovereign State and argues that the executive officers of the Government may be expelled by force of arms when they refuse to administer the Government in accordance with the letter of the accepted Constitution. The oaths declare that a member will defend with arms the principles of the order whenever directed by competent authority of the order. It was admitted by one of the order in Missouri that, on joining, he understood the object to be aid and assistance to the Confederate Government. He adds, the order is hostile, in every respect, to the General Government. It was exclusively made up of disloyal persons, desirous of securing the independence of the Confederate States, with the view of restoring the Union as it was. The other purposes of the order are shown to be aiding soldiers to desert; destruction of Government property; destruction of private property, and persecuting Union men; assassination and murder, and the establishment of a Northern Confederacy.

NOTES.

—The convention of the National Reform Association in Chicago, for which partial arrangements were made last month, was, for various reasons, postponed until Fall. The general convention of this body meets in Philadelphia in the last week in June.

—Mr. Ronayne wishes us to notify the friends of the reform that he desires for the present to be addressed at his residence, "No. 104 Bremer street, Chicago." He has returned from a long trip through New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, with much physical exhaustion, and will probably pass the next week or two in recuperating. Pray that his strength may be renewed in better measure and his rest be short.

—The General Agent is about finishing up his office work for a time, and preparing to take the field. He attended a meeting of the Directors on Wednesday, and for to night arrangements were being made as we go to press, by the students at the Chicago Theological Seminary (Cong.) for an address by him on Freemasonry. Such an occasion will be, we hope, the opening of a new and better era on reform questions in the institution.

To the Anti-masons of Connecticut.

DEAR BRETHREN:—As the time for holding our second annual State meeting draws near, I herewith, through the Cynosure, send you greeting, and a few thoughts in relation to our State meeting, and the cause in which we are engaged. An opportunity will be given you, by your presence, voice, and contributions, to hasten forward this work with the aid and blessing of the Lord, that this monstrous, iniquitous institution against which we contend, may be exposed, hated and shunned by all decent and right-minded people in the land, causing it to sink and be buried in oblivion. I adjure you in the name of all righteousness, and for the sake of deluded and perishing humanity that you falter not, nor withhold the means you have in your power to push forward this work. If those who have already enlisted in this cause refuse or hesitate to go forward, others will take their place and reap an abundant reward, not only of their own labor but also of that which we may have sown.

I feel that I have nearly done asking people directly for money to carry on the work. You have your convictions; you know somewhat of your duty, brethren, and you must answer for it; not to us, but to Him who will exact a strict account and who will reward every man according as his work shall be.

We all undoubtedly realize the present financial depression and distress, but that is not to prevent us from doing good as we have opportunity, for what have we that we have not received; and cannot He who owns and holds all in His hand cause us to abound more and more or deprive us of that we already possess? Surely the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, and he can command his blessings upon us. Giving doth not impoverish him, nor withholding enrich him.

The work of reform must be done by few; it is the Lord's way; not popular; very crossing to man's pride and vanity, and no occasion for boasting. It needs true men, men who will stand by their convictions, who count not their lives dear unto themselves, and will die if needs be, for Christ, that they may attain unto life eternal; "for he that seeketh to save his life, shall lose it." Is there not a tremendous meaning in these words of our Saviour? and how should it bear upon our life? The time is hastening, and not far distant, when the Lord will lift up a standard against him, and that all the powers of wickedness combined shall not prevail against Christ's church, although a merited and needed chastizement will overtake it.

It is a time for honest work. We see it everywhere. Extraordinary efforts are being put forth to secure men from the power and penalty of sin; while the love of many is waxing cold, and the insidious, slimy and hideous reptile called Masonry, is gathering the professed followers of Christ to its embrace, sapping at the very vitals of Christianity, and binding men, soul and body in worse than African bondage.

the lodge, will bring upon this nation the judgment of God, and result in a second "French Revolution" on American soil. Who is so blind that they cannot discern these things in the light of past history, even without looking into the Bible?

There are those who see the "sword" coming, are giving the warning, and desire to be hid from this time of impending and desolating evil. There is, and will be a "refuge" from the coming storm to those who seek for it aright, while the "tyler's sword" and the "grand bailing sign," will perish with those who use it.

While the enemy is coming in like a flood, we are assured that the Spirit of anti-Christian character of Freemasonry and kindred societies, and that they are prepared to take us and our government by the throat. There are other parties, sects and combinations seeking to do the same. Have we forgotten the lesson of our history, written in blood, that "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty?"

But will it suffice in time to come? No. I do not seek to disguise my understanding of it, for unto this government and people as unto Nebuchadnezzar of old, it is spoken that amidst fraud, corruption, licentiousness—and every abominable work, its glory and order are departing. This damnable crowding out of Christ and the Bible, which we see everywhere, and particularly in tant, in which the souls of men will be TRIED. The powers of darkness are marshalling their forces for the deadliest onslaught upon Christianity this world has ever known, to culminate in that brief but terrible reign of the anti-Christ, the man of sin, the filling up of Gentile wickedness and apostasy, foretold as the end of this dispensation. I am not prophesying, but reiterating the things THAT ARE WRITTEN.

Nor will I cry, "Peace and safety," when I know by the sure word of prophesy that sudden destruction is coming. Yet we are not to fold our hands because we cannot stay or turn back the tide of evil, but reach out and pull men from the fire, as it were, and thereby save some. We all realize the

This cause demands that we should be fearless. But few will speak against it in public. The ministry will not do it. The Lord is using more humble means to reach the people. Woman may yet be enlisted in this work, and when she does take it in hand, the knell and doom of Freemasonry in this country will be sounded.

My brethren, let us be strong in the Lord, and courageous; let us quit like men. Thus shall we be approved of by our Heavenly Father; shall find a place prepared for us in his pavilion, wherein we may be hid in the day of the Lord's anger, when he shall come forth from his place, to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity.

Persons, in ordering seeds for their spring planting, should be sure to obtain them of reliable seed dealers. Seeds will not germinate if they are too old; and disappointment and delay often result. Experience of seedmen indicates that, if properly gathered and preserved, beans will retain vitality 2 years; beet, 7; cabbage, 4; carrot, 2; sweet corn, 2; cucumber, 10; lettuce, 3; melon, 10; onion, 1; parsnip, 1; peas, 2; radish, 3; squash, 10; tomato, 7; turnip, 4.

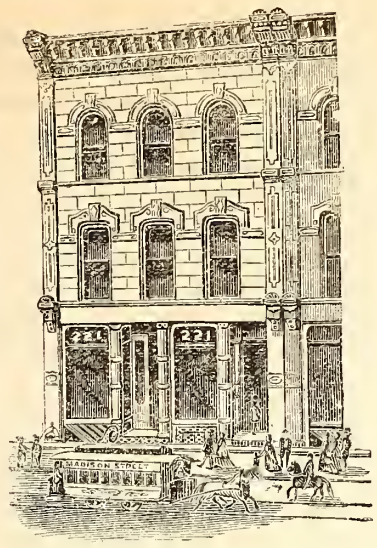
Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. Henry Cogswell, who has for some years been pastor of the Disciple Church in Mansfield, O., has accepted a call to Wadsworth, Medina Co., in the same State. Mr. Cogswell will be remembered as an effective speaker at the Pittsburgh anniversary and other conventions of our reform.

—The Rev. Dr. Scudder, of Brooklyn it is said, is being urged to accept a call from the Union Park Congregational Church of Chicago.

—There are now ten Protestant churches in Japan, with about five hundred members.

—Presbyterian missionaries plead earnestly for more laborers in Persia, in Western Africa, in Mexico, and among the Indians of our own land.



—The Centennial Commissioners have decided that they do not feel authorized to grant any space within the limits of the Exhibition grounds for the erection of a building in which religious services may be conducted. The subject has been referred back to the Council of the Philadelphia branch of the Evangelical Alliance.

—Japan has a Bible-in-the-schools controversy, the Buddhists endeavoring to have the reading of the Bible in the Christian school in Kivoto prohibited by order of the Emperor. The Buddhists are very influential and are favored by the Emperor, but his chief counselor and the minister of Education are friendly to Christianity.

—The following recommendations made by the Albany Presbyterian are good ones: That the first Sabbath in July, 1876, be designated as a day of praise and thanksgiving to God for his great and distinguishing blessings to us as a country, and that the pastor of each church deliver a discourse on that day on history of his church.

—A correspondent in Troy, N. Y., writes to the N. Y. Witness as follows: "We have had a very interesting revival in Troy and vicinity ever since January 1st. On Sunday 82 were received into the Fifth Street Presbyterian church, 29 into the Ninth Street Presbyterian, 100 into the Third Street Baptist, 113 into the Fifth Street Baptist, and 26 into the First Presbyterian. In West Troy about 40 were added to the Presbyterian church, and in Lansingburgh on one Sunday 156 were received into the First Presbyterian church and 210 into the Methodist.

—Rev. Dr. Noble, who has been pastor of a Presbyterian church in Washington, D. C. for over forty years, stated publicly, lately, and he has good opportunity for obtaining statistics, that there had been over one thousand conversions in connection with Mr. Hammond's recent labors there; and those conversions have not been simply among the classes who are impressible to religious influence, but also among those who are generally considered to be without the pale of orthodoxy. Both Israelities and Catholics have embraced the simple truths spoken, and are rejoicing in their new found faith, and this has not been brought about by any undue excitement or appeals to the senses.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The National Christian Association

PRES. OF THE LAST NATIONAL CONVENTION.—David R. Kerr, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Galaxy has its usual quota of novels which are a damage to any one who reads them. Other articles of more or less interest are, "Is Nature Inconsistent," "War Memoirs," on the name Smith, Homes of American Aborigines, American pronunciation of English, "A final Word on Mr. Emerson," "The Bonanza Mines of Nevada." Sheldon & Co., New York.

News of the Week.

—The first case in the whiskey trials in Chicago have resulted in a verdict of guilty. Another distiller is now being tried, and then the sentence of those who plead guilty will be given. This first verdict will most materially strengthen the prosecution in the cases which are to follow, as this case was a test of the importance to be attached to the testimony of the informers The grand jury returned on Monday an indictment against Ex-Congressman J. D. Ward, the late U. S. attorney here.

—The dam of a reservoir at Worcester, Mass., gave way last Thursday and a huge flood was rushed upon the mills, villages and railroads below. The damages were estimated at over a million, the railroads suffered severely. The Albany and the Norwich and Providence will be blocked for several days. One man and two boys are reported missing and it is feared that they have been drowned.

—The Belknap impeachment articles have been prepared by the judiciary Committee and were adopted by the House on Monday. The managers were chosen, Geo. F. Hoar of Mass. being the only very prominent member. The usual formalities of presenting the articles of impeachment will be carried out. The Senate will then pass a resolution directing Gen. Belknap to be summoned giving him a few days to prepare a defense. His council will probably be Montgomery Blair, Matt. Carpenter, and Jere. S. Black.

—The House on Friday passed the so-called Silver bill. It provides for the insurance of subsiding coins of the denominations of 10, 20, 25, and 50 cents in amount sufficient to redeem and replace the present fractional currency; and makes silver coins of $1 legal tender in sums of $50, and lesser coins in sum of $25.

—Telegrams from St. Petersburg, proceeding from authoritative sources, confirm the report of the abdication of the Czar.

The Czarowitch will be intrusted with the Regency and full sovereign powers during the summer.

The conference between the Austrian and Turkish Commissioners on the pacification of Herzegovina has been broken off. The insurgents have refused all terms proposed.

"Rest."

Rest is not quitting
The busy career;
Rest is the fitting
Of self to its sphere.

'Tis the brook's motion,
Clear without strife,
Fleeing to ocean
After its life.

'Tis loving and serving
The Highest and Best;
Tis onward unswerving!
And that is true rest.

Memoirs of the Rev. Wm. Goodell, D. D.

Among the many excellent biographies of eminent Christian men that have been issued from the press during the last few years, that of the Rev. Wm. Goodell, for more than forty years missionary of the American Board in Turkey, stands conspicuous in interest and importance. His life is identified with the history of the missions of that Board, he being present at the ordination of the first missionaries it sent out, and in a few years after entering upon his own life work, under its auspices from which he only returned in 1865, when old age and infirmities led him to seek a quiet home in the family of a son living in Philadelphia. Here he died in 1867. The great work of his life was the translation of the Bible into the Armeno-Turkish language, for which he was eminently fitted by his fine classical education, and a marked natural faculty in acquiring languages. The book abounds in interesting facts and reminiscenses connected with his labors in Beyrout and Constantinople; and in the midst of them, his character from whatever point viewed, shines with a luster dimmed by few imperfections. In times of prosperity he was the earnest, faithful Christian laborer, preaching, teaching, ministering to the sick, establishing schools, and planning broadly and wisely for the extension of Christ's kingdom in that land, where a corrupt priesthood and the false prophet had so long had sway. When the fires as they often did, took their devastating way through the city, and the fatal pestilence walked forth in darkness, or when the more dreadful persecution raged, he became, by his calm trust in God, and uniform cheerfulness, a tower of strength to the terrified and stricken ones. Not only was he beloved and respected by his fellow-laborers, but he had also influence with the Sultan, and high officials, and gained the friendship and respect of many representatives of foreign powers.

In the natural world, when we behold an extra fine specimen of tree or plant we naturally ask, what has produced this result? What fortunate circumstance of soil or clime, or what peculiar skill in the procedure has called into existence an object of so much beauty? In like manner, when a character of surpassing excellence appears on the stage of life, we instinctively ask, what were the conditions of his early nurture and culture? What influences developed a character of so much strength and usefulness? In the case of Dr. Goodell, the book presents a picture of his early days striking, touching, and instructive. We behold a small brown house containing two rooms and a loft, in which twelve children are born, eight of whom arrive at maturity. A farm of 100 acres is all the visible means for their support, and this does not seem to be productive. Advancing years bring not to them increasing worldly prosperity, but sickness, and losses entailing embarrassments from which it is impossible to recover. What a life of hopeless poverty is appointed them, and at times they are so reduced that the father, like the Shepherd of Salisbury Plains, says grace over a meal of potatoes and salt. But instead of gloom and despair settling down upon this household, its inner life displays a scene of unusual content and happiness. The higher life that the intelligent and pious parents lead lifts them above anxiety and trouble, the roots of faith strike deeper as the clouds lower, and all the Christian graces seem to be in lively exercise. What a delightful atmosphere this must have been in which to train youthful minds and hearts! Dr. Goodell, in a letter to his brother, touchingly alludes to his patient mother sitting in this house and carding her wool by the light of a pine knot, "while she sings the sweet words"

"Hov'ring among the leaves, there stands
The sweet celestial Dove;
And Jesus on the branches hangs
The banners of his love."

Little did that mother think, while thus singing for Jesus, that she was distilling an influence around her, which like the perfume of the broken alabaster box to its possessor, would lift her from obscurity, by associating her forever with the world-wide reputation of her son; and that father who put praying before plowing, and who might almost literally be said to have prayed without ceasing, did not probably even by the eye of faith take in all the bounteous spiritual harvest in store for him. His crops of corn and wheat were light; but he gave to the church eight children, three of whom became members of the Gospel, and whose wide-spread influence will continue to bless the world till time shall end. When it was decided to send his son William to Philips' Academy, Andover, no certain way of defraying his expenses for even one quarter though diligently sought, had been found, but walking by faith, not sight, the important step was taken. Human tenderness would have spared this youth the long walk of sixty miles with his trunk strapped to his weak back—the hoot of the village boys in the towns through which he passed, who tauntingly inquired if he had a monkey or anaconda to exhibit—and the tears he shed when on arriving at his wearisome journey's end, not one of the families licensed by the trustees to take boarders would receive him. But had there been no tears shed, there would have been none for God's own hand to wipe away, and had this discipline been spared, the poor profane and intemperate shoe-maker, who took him in, and boarded him, might not have shone forever a star in his crown of rejoicing, as there is good reason for supposing he now does. This good deportment and fine scholarship soon won him friends and needed aid. Not the ravens with bread, but two fat oxen came all the way from Vermont to the Academy door on one occasion, sent by an uncle "to help draw him up some of the steep and rugged hills of science." In this school and in Dartmouth College, he received a fresh baptism of the spirit which sealed him to the work of the ministry and a missionary's life.

It is to be hoped that this work so replete with interest and full of instruction will be extensively read.

H. W. P.

Woman's Work for Woman.

Among the many sufferers by the financial panic of '57 was a Christian family in Pittsburgh, They started west to retrieve their fortunes. One trouble followed another until they were driven out on the frontier of one of the Territories far beyond church privileges. Some years afterward, sitting by the ample fire place of their adobe dwelling, the woman told me of her great sorrow in being separated from the courts of the Lord's house. That at times such a sense of desolation would come over her, that she would weep by the hour, until, completely unfitted for her household duties, she would have to take to her bed sick at heart for the sanctuary.

Thousands of Christian women with anguish of heart mourn their involuntary separation from church privileges. They followed an ungodly husband or father; or a combination of circumstances apparently beyond their control brought them into their present position. And their great sorrow is their separation from the church.

Many of these Christian women are mothers. And they are bowed down with grief, not only on their own account, but also because their children are growing up away from the molding influences of the sanctuary. Some months ago, crossing the mountains, as the stage stopped at a mining camp to change horses and the mail, we made a hasty call on a Christian woman, of whom we had previously heard. A few words of conversation and a short prayer were had. In leaving mention was made of a communion season to be held forty miles distant on the following day, and the fountain of her grief burst forth anew, refusing to be comforted. A communion season, and she had not known of it in time to prepare herself and children to attend! What though the journey was a tedious one, taking her across the mountains, where in midsummer a road was shoveled through an immense snow-bank for the coach to pass. What though it would have cost from $50 to $75. For years she had been waiting and praying for her church, and now its communion was to be celebrated within forty miles of her. Pointing to her eldest daughter, a girl of fourteen or sixteen years of age, she said, "That child has never seen a communion season." And as she remembered the subduing and solemnizing influences of such occasions upon the children of believing parents, and realized that her children were deprived of these things, it seemed as if her heart would break. Oh! you mothers, who can frequently and regularly refresh your own hearts at the communion table and take your children with you, has this mother, and thousands of mothers similarly situated in your own land, no claim upon you—upon your sympathies and labors—that you are doing so little to supply their needs?

In former days they may often have kept you company to the house of God—it may be sat in the same pew and gathered around the same table.

But the providence of God has sent them to the frontier to assist in the establishment of other churches, while it has left you in the enjoyment of accustomed privileges. And in doing so does not God require that you should assist those that have gone out and are now destitute?—Herald and Presbyter.

The Name of God.

It is printed in forty-eight languages.

As Louis Burger, the well-known author and philologist, was walking the Avenue des Champs Elysees, he heard a familiar voice exclaiming: "Buy some nuts of a poor man, sir! twenty for a penny." He looked up and recognized his old barber.

"What! are you selling nuts?" said he.

"Ah! sir, I have been unfortunate."

"But this is no business for a man like you."

"O! sir if you could only tell me of something better to do," returned the barber with a sigh.

Burger was touched. He reflected a moment; then tearing a leaf from his memorandum-book, he wrote for a few moments, and handed it to the man, saying:

"Take this to a printing-office and have a hundred copies struck off; here is the money to pay for it. Get a license from the prefecture of the police, and sell them at two cents a copy, and you will have bread on the spot. The strangers who visit Paris cannot refuse this tribute to the name of God, printed in so many different ways."

The barber did as he was bid, and he was always seen in the entrance to the Exposition selling the following handbill:

THE NAME OF GOD IN FORTY-EIGHT LANGUAGES.

Hebrew, ELOHIM or ELOAH.—Chaldaic, ELAH.—Assyrian, ELLAH.—Syriac and Turkish, ALAH —Malay, ALLA.—Arabic, ALLA.—Language of the Magi, ORSI —Old Egyptian, TEUT.—Amorian, TEUTI —Modern Egyptian, Tenn. Greek, THEOS.—Cretan, THIOS.—Aeolian and Doric, ILOS.—Latin, DEUS.—Low Latin, DIEX.—Celtic and old Gallic, DIU.—French, DIEU.—Spanish, DIOS.—Portugese, DEOS.—Old German, DIET.—Provencal, DIOU.—Low Breton, DOUE.—Italian, DIO.—Irish, DIE.—Olala tongue, DEU.—German and Swiss, GOTT,—Flemish, GOED.—Dutch, GODT.—English and old Saxon, GOD —Teutonic, GOTH.—Danish and Swedish, GUT —Norwegian, GUD.—

Slavic, Buch.—Polish, Bog.—Polacca, Bung.—Lapp, Jubinal.—Finnish, Jumala.—Runic, As.—Pannonian,—Istu.—Zemblian, Fetizo.—Hindostanee, Rain.—Coromandel. Brama.—Tartar, Magatal.—Persian, Sire,—Chinese, Prussa.—Japanese, Goezur. Madagascar, Zannar,—Peruvian,—Puchocamae.

A few days after Burger met the barber.

"Well, said he, "has the name of God brought you good luck?"

"Yes, indeed. sir. I sell on an average a hundred copies a day, at two cents each, or two dollars; but the strangers are generous; some give me ten cents and others twenty. I have even received half a dollar for a copy; so that, all told, I am making five dollars a day."

"Five dollars a day?"

"Yes, sir; thanks to your kindness."

"Well done!" thought Burger, as he walked away. "If I were not a literary man, I would turn peddler or publisher; there is nothing so profitable as selling the learning or wit of others."

Children's Corner.

Time Enough.

Two little squirrels, out in the sun,
One gathered nuts, the other had none:
"Time enough yet," his constant refrain,
"Summer is still only just on the wane."

Listen, my child, while I tell you his fate:
He roused him at last but he roused him to late;
Down fell the snow from a pitiless cloud,
And gave little squirrel a spotless white shroud.

Two little boys in a school-room were placed—
One always perfect, the other disgraced;
"Time enough yet for my learning," he said;
"I will climb by and by from the foot to the head."

Listen, my darling; their locks are turned gray;
One as a governor sitteth to-day;
The other a pauper, looks out at the door
Of the almshouse, and idles his days as of yore.

Two kinds of people we meet every day—
One is at work, the other at play;
Living uncared for, dying unknown,
The busiest hive hath ever a drone.

Tell me, my child, if the squirrels have taught
The lesson I longed to implant in your thought;
Answer me this, and my story is done,
Which of the two would you be, little one?

John and the Postage Stamp.

John was a boy who "lived out." Every week he wrote home to his mother, who lived on a small farm among the hills. One day a man picked up an old envelope from the kitchen wood-box, and saw that the postage-stamp on it was not touched by the postmaster's stamp, to show it had done its duty and was henceforth useless. "The postmaster missed his aim then," said John, "and left the stamp as good as new. I'll use it myself."

He moistened it at the nose of the tea-kettle, and carefully pulled the stamp off.

"No," said conscience, "for that would be cheating. The stamp has been on one letter; it ought not to carry another."

"It can carry another," said John, "because, you see, there is no mark to prove it worthless. The post-office will not know."

"But you know," said conscience, "and that is enough. It is not honest to use it a second time. It is a little matter to be sure; but it is cheating. God looks for principle. It is the quality of every action that he judges by.'

"But no one will know it," said John, faintly.

"No one!" cried conscience. "God will know it; that is enough; and he, you know, desires truth in the inward parts."

"Yes," cried all the best parts of John's character; "yes, it is cheating to use the postage-stamp the second time, and I will not do it."

John tore it in two, and gave it to the winds. And so John won a victory; and wasn't it worth winning?—Ex.

"What are you going to do with Jesus?"

At the recent annual meeting of the Children's Special Service Mission at Mildmay (England), Rev. G. J. Llewellyn, of Ledbury, related the following touching incident, which occurred at on of Mr. Moody's meetings, at which he was present in Manchester:

The group he spoke to in the inquiry room consisted of two young men, two working women, a hardened-looking burly man, and a little girl of seven or eight years old. He spoke first to the young men, then to the women, and then to the older man.

All this time the child was eyeing him most earnestly, and when he had finished he said to her, "Well, little girl, isn't it time for you to be in bed? Are you waiting for any one?"

"Yes, sir," she said, "I am waiting for mother," pointing to one of the women. "Do you think mother will give her heart to Jesus to-night, sir?"

He was much surprised, and said to the child, whose name he found was Ada, "Why, Ada, are you a Christian?"

"Yes, sir."

"How long have you been one?"

"Ever since last night sir."

"And how was it, Ada?"

"Well, sir, last night Mr. Moody was preaching, and he said, "Young man, what are you going to do with Jesus to night? Young lady, what are you going to do with Jesus to-night?" And then he said, "Little girl, what are you going to do with Jesus?" and he looked right at me. After the meeting was over, I wanted to speak to Mr. Moody, but mother was very cross, and dragged me home, and put me to bed, but when she had gone down stairs I got out of bed again, and kneeled down, and gave my heart right up to Jesus."

This simple faith staggered him, and he asked her what made her think Jesus had made her his child. Ada answered, "Because I went to him, and he has promised never to send any one away who comes to him."

This confession which was made before the whole group, quite broke them all down. The old hardened man said, with the tears trickling down his face, that he wanted to accept Christ as the little girl had done, and before they left there was reason to believe that all the five in that group had been led to give themselves to the Saviour.

A Brace of Dog Stories.

The Buffalo Advertiser says: "On Thursday a Mr. Stambach, residing on the Hamburgh Turnpike, called at No. 7 Police Station and reported to Captain Flanigan that a large Newfoundland dog, attached to a hand-wagon, had been standing on the turnpike, about a mile from the city since Tuesday morning, and refused to move, though some one had released him from the wagon, which was partially filled with willow branches, evidently cut by the dog's master, from a grove in the vicinity. This morning it was ascertained that the animal's owner was Andrew Selrick, a basket-maker; also, that on Wednesday night he had been arrested by an officer of the Second Precinct, and yesterday morning committed to the workhouse for thirty days in default of a fine. It is believed that, being cold, Andrew left the dog and wagon at the place where they were found to get a drink," and that he took a number of "drinks," till he became intoxicated and forgot all about his property. The circumstances are remarkable, and afford a good illustration of the faithfulness of a brute who had stayed for three days without food, waiting for his master, as opposed to the master's dissipation and neglect."

The Troy Whig gives the following in its issue of Saturday: "Yesterday a little girl was sent to a store with a $2 bill to make some purchases. The child on her way to the store lost her money, and returning home told her father of her ill-fortune. He at once went out in search of the missing cash. While prosecuting his search he was accosted by a lad named Ryan, living near by, who on learning what was lost, requested the gentleman to show a bill to a dog that was with the boy, and apparently interested in what was going on, and assured the gentleman that the dog would find the lost note. The gentleman with some incredulity presented a note for the inspection of the dog, which the latter seemed to examine intelligently, and then the boy sent the canine on a search. Shortly the sagacious brute returned, but with no bill, and the gentleman's look of incredulity became quite positive; but the boy asserted that the bill was not on the street. Had it been there, the boy maintained, the dog would have found it, and to vindicate the high reputation of his pet, asked the gentleman to place a bill on the street at a considerable distance and unobserved by the dog, which was done. More money was exhibited and the dog sent out at random. In a few minutes the sagacious animal returned with the note. In the meantime Mr. R Tunnard had found the lost note. The remarkable sagacity of the dog being told, Mr. Tunnard heard of the story and promptly restored the money to its owner. A comparison of events left no doubt that he picked up the bill before the dog was sent in search of it. The animal is a very intelligent water spaniel. that has been trained to search for hidden articles, which he does with more than human thoroughness. On one occasion a lady lost a gold ring, which the spaniel soon found and restored to the owner after being shown another ring by the lady."

Home and Health Hints.

Why the Teeth Decay.

The causes of the decay of teeth have hitherto been a matter of doubt, but the investigation of Leber and Rottenstein throw considerable light on the problem. They recognize constitutional differences in teeth, rendering some more sensitive than others to the influences that favor decay. These influences are not so much internal or vital, as external and chemical. Decay begins at the surface, and there it must be checked if checked at all. It is chiefly caused by acids, and by a certain fungus, the Leptothrix buccalis, found abundantly in the mouth. Under the microscope the fungus appears as a gray, finely-granular mass or matrix, with filaments delicate and stiff, which erect themselves above the surface of this granular substance, so as to resemble an uneven turf. The fungus attains its greatest size in the interstices of the teeth. Various acids are taken with food, or in medicines, or are formed in the mouth itself by some abnormality in our secretions, which should be alkaline, or by an acid fermentation of particles of food. But acids alone will not account for all the phenomena of caries in the teeth. They play a primary and principal part, making the teeth porus and soft. In this state the tissues having lost their normal consistency, fungi penetrate both the canaliculi of the enamel and of the dentine, and by their growth produce softening, and destructive, effects much more rapid than the action of acids alone can accomplish. Bowditch, in examining forty persons of different professions, and living different kinds of life, found in almost all of them vegetable and animal parasites. The parasites were abundant in proportion to neglect of cleanliness. The means ordinarily employed to clean the teeth had no effect on the parasites, while soapy water appeared to destroy them.

It is not necessary to employ any of the so-called "dental soaps." We have found by experience that the imported white castile soap, which is probably the purest soap made in the world—a fact worth remembering in other connections—is quite tasteless, or at least has no unpleasant taste. Rub the wet tooth-brush over a piece of this soap before dipping it into the dentifrice you use, and you have the most perfect combination for through cleansing of the teeth and destroying the obnoxious fungus. We assume, of course, that the dentifrice itself is not one that injures the teeth, as many of those in common use do.

Dear as the children are to her heart, many a tired mother draws a long breath of relief when they are all safe in their beds at night. Then for the first time all day the house is quiet, and she can finish the letter to her sister in Kansas, or steal a little nap in her easy chair, or perhaps indulge in a pleasant talk with her husband without interruption from little hands or voices. We commend to mothers the custom of putting the children early to bed. Little boys and girls are the better for long sleeps, and it is not to the benefit of their health or tempers that they are permitted to sit up until their elders retire. Nor do we favor the habit of some households, in which the children are allowed to fall asleep here and there, on sofas and lounges, early in the evening, only to be wakened with much shaking and calling, when bedtime comes. They are far more comfortable if properly undressed and settled for the night at the right time.

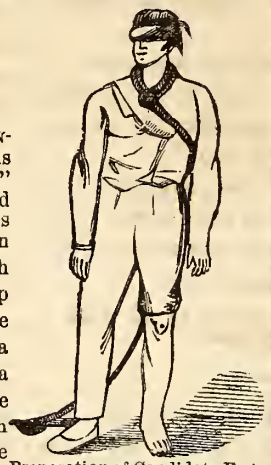
CHAPTER X.



FREEMASONRY AT A GLANCE.

ENTERED APPRENTICE DEGREE.

The Holy Bible on the altar is usually opened at the 123d Psalm and the square and compass placed thereon, the latter open and both points placed below the square.

PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE ENTERED APPRENTICE DEGREE.—He is ushered into the 'preparation room," where he meets the Junior Deacon and Stewards who divest him of all his clothing except his shirt. He is then handed an old pair of drawers which he puts on; the left leg is rolled up above the knee; the left sleeve of the shirt is rolled up above the elbow, a hoodwink is fastened over both eyes, a rope, called a cable-tow, is put once around his neck, and a slipper (with the heel slip-shod) is put upon the right foot.

Preparation of Candidate E. A. Degree.

Due-guard of an E. A.

Penal Sign of an E. A.

DUE-GUARD OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Hold out the left hand a little in front of the body and in a line with the lower button of the vest, the hand being open and palm turned upward. Now place the right hand horizontally across the left and about two or three inches above it.

PENAL SIGN OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Made from the due-guard by dropping the left hand carelessly; at the same time raise the right arm and draw the hand, still open, across the throat, thumb next the throat, and drop the hand hand perpendicularly by the side. These movements ought to be made in an off-hand manner, without stiffness.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE-GUARD:—(The usual way outside the lodge.) Simply draw the open hand carelessly across the throat and let it fall down by the side.

Candidate taking Entered Apprentice Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate:—"You will advance to the altar, kneel upon your naked left knee, your right forming a square, your left hand supporting the holy Bible, square and compass, your right resting thereon, in which due form you will say, I, with your name in full, and repeat after me."

GRIP OF AN ENTERED APPRENTICE.—Take hold of each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the first knuckle-joint of the first finger near the hand. If the person whom you are shaking hands with is a Mason, he will generally return a like pressure on your hand.

ENTERED APPRENTICE WORD—Boaz. It is the name of this grip.

ENTERED APPRENTICE STEP.—Step oft one step with the left foot and bring the heel of your right foot to the hollow of your left.

FELLOW CRAFT DEGREE.

The Holy Bible ought to be opened at the 7th chapter of Amos and one point of the compass elevated above the square.

Preparation in Fellow Craft Degree.

PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE FELLOW CRAFT DEGREE:—He is ushered into the "preparation room" as before, and divested of all his clothing as in the preceding degree. In this case the right leg of the old drawers is raised up above the knee, the right sleeve of the shirt is rolled up above the elbow, the slipper is now put upon the left foot, the left heel being slip-shod. The hoodwink is again put over both eyes and the cable-tow is put twice around the naked right arm and an apron tied on, in which condition he is "duly and truly prepared" and led by the Junior Warden to the door of the lodge as before.

Candidate taking Fellow Craft Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate:—You will advance to the altar, kneel upon your naked right knee, your left forming a square, your right hand resting on the Holy Bible, square and compass, your left forming a right angle supported by the square in which due form you will say, "I," with your name in full, and repeat after me.

Due-guard Fellow Craft.

DUE GUARD OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Hold out the right hand a little from the body and on a line with the lower button of the vest, the palm being open and turned down-ward; also raise the left arm so as to form a right angle at the elbow, from the shoulder to the elbow being horizontal and fore-arm perpendicular.

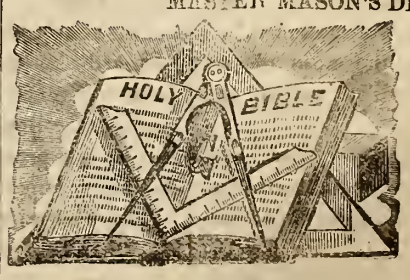
Sign, Fellow Craft.

SIGN OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Made from the due-guard by dropping the left hand carelessly to the side and at the same time raise the right hand to the left breast, with the palm towards the breast and the fingers a little crooked; then draw the hand smartly across the breast from left to right and let it drop perpendicularly to the side.

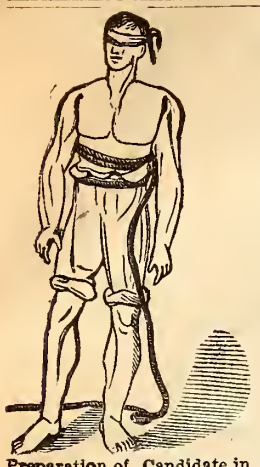
SIGN WITHOUT DUE GUARD.—(The usual way outside the lodge). Draw the right hand, palm open and fingers a little crooked, smartly across the breast from left to right and drop it carelessly by your side.

PASS GRIP OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Take each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the space between the first and second knuckles of the right hand. Should the person whose hand you hold be a Fellow Craft, he will return a like pressure on your hand, or else may give you the grip of an Entered Apprentice.

PASS OF FELLOW CRAFT—Shibboleth. It is the name of this grip.



REAL GRIP OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Take each other by the right hand as in ordinary hand-shaking and press top of your thumb hard against the second knuckle. Should the man whose hand you shake be a Fellow Craft, he will return a similar pressure on your hand, or may possibly give you any one of the two preceding grips.



WORD OF FELLOW CRAFT—Jachin. It is the name of this the real grip.

FELLOW CTAFT OR SECOND STEP.—Step off one step with the right foot and bring the heel of the left foot to the hollow of the right; your feet forming the angle of an oblong square.

MASTER MASON'S DEGREE.

The Holy Bible ought to be opened at the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes and both points of the compass elevated above the square.

Preparation of Candidate in Master Mason's Degree.

PREPARATION OF CANDIDATE MASTER MASON'S DEGREE.—He is conducted into the preparation room as in the preceding degrees. All his clothing is removed as before; both legs of the drawers are tucked up above the knees, both sleeves of the shirt are tucked up above the elbows, both breasts of the shirt are turned in, making both breasts bare. The hoodwink is again fastened over both eyes and the cable-tow is put three times around his body. No slipper is used in this degree. Should the shirt be closed in front, it must be taken off or turned front-backwards, as both breasts must be bare. An apron is then tied on and worn as a Fellow Craft, and thus he is "duly and truly prepared."

Candidate taking Master M son's Obligation.

Worshipful Master to Candidate, "You will advance to the altar, kneel upon both your naked knees, both hands resting n the Holy Bible, square and compass in which due form you will say, "I," with your name in full and repeat after me"

Due-guard Master Mason.

Penal Sign, Master Mason.

DUE-GUARD OF A MASTER MASON.—Extend both hands in front of the body on a line with the lower button of the vest with the palms open and turned downward, both hands being close together, thumbs nearly touching.

SIGN OF A MASTER MASON.—Made from the due guard by dropping the left hand carelessly and drawing the right across the body from left to right side on a line with the lower button of the vest, the hand being open as before, palm downward and the thumb towards the body. Then drop the hand perpendicularly to the side.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE-GUARD.—(Ordinary manner outside the lodge.) Simply draw the right hand as above described, carelessly across the body and drop it by the side.

PASS GRIP OF A MASTER MASON.—Take hold of each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the space between the second and third knuckles. Should the man whose hand you shake be a Mason he may return or give any previous grip.

PASS OF MASTER MASON—Tubal Cain. It is the name of this grip.

STRONG GRIP OF A MASTER MASON OR LION'S PAW.—Grasp each other's right hands very firmly, the spaces between the thumb and first finger being interlocked and the tops of the fingers being pressed hard against each other's wrist where it joins the hand, the fingers of each being somewhat spread.

CANDIDATE AS HIRAM ABIFF FALLING INTO THE CANVASS, having been struck in the forehead by the setting maul of the supposed third ruffian, Jubelum.

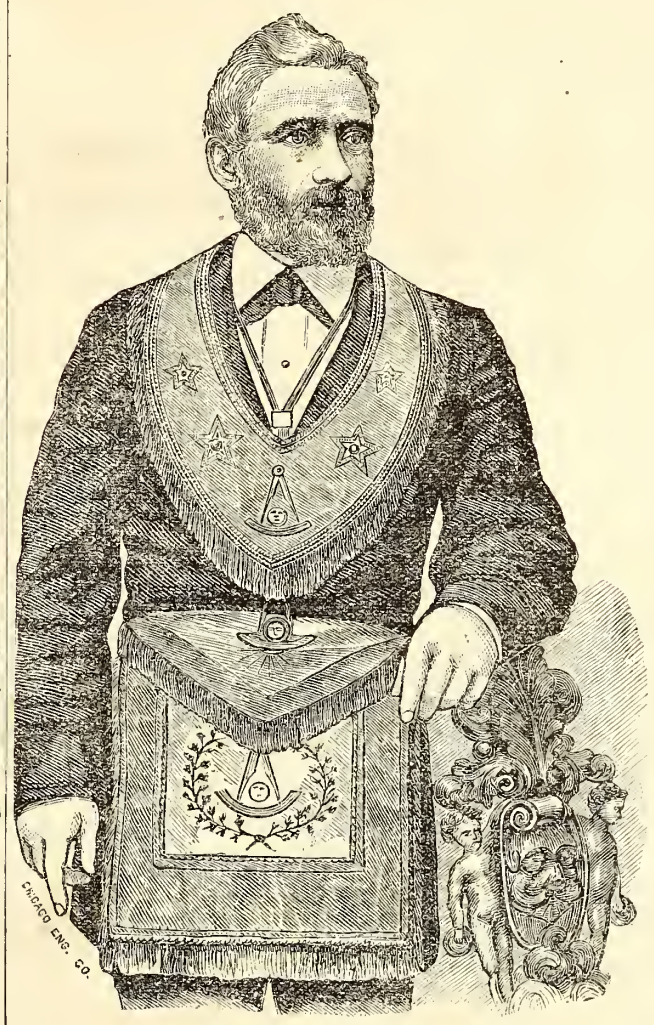
FIVE POINTS OF FELLOWSHIP.

Five Points of Fellowship.

Worshipful Master:—Which are the five points of fellowship?

Senior Deacon:—Foot to foot (Master and candidate extend their right feet, placing the inside of one against that of the other). Knee to knee (they bring their right knees together); breast to breast (they bring their right breasts together); hand to back (Master places his left hand on the candidate's back, the candidate's is placed by the Deacon on the Master's back); cheek to cheek or mouth to ear (Master puts his mouth to candidate's right ear thus bringing the right cheek of each together. See figure).

MASTER'S WORD:—(whispered in the ear of the candidate), Mah-hah-bone, after which the candidate whispers the same word in the Master's ear.



Grand Hailing Sign, Second position.

GRAND HAILING SIGN OR SIGN OF DISTRESS OF A MASTER MASON.—Raise both arms perpendicularly above the head and let them fall by three distinct motions. The first motion brings the arms to the position as seen in the figure, from the shoulder to the elbow horizontal and from the elbow to the finger-tips perpendicular. In the second motion the arms from the shoulder to the elbow are nearly close to the sides, from the elbow to the finger-tips still upright, and in the third motion the hands are dropped to the side. The words "O Lord my God, is there no help for the Widow's Son?" are never to be given with the sign outside the lodge-room. They are given only in the dark or when the sign cannot be used.

MASTER MASON OR THIRD STEP.—Step off one step with the left foot and bring the heel of the right to the heel of the left, the feet forming the angle of a square.

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Gain in one week, 16

March has been as our readers all know, a stormy, cold and muddy month. It has been a hard month for the Cynosure.

P. C. Stone, Round Grove, Ill., writes: "I intend to try and get up a club when the roads improve so that I can get around."

We believe that he is not the only one who will do so and look for better receipts during this month.

Martin Holt, Barton, Wis., sends seven names with fourteen dollars. G. Marcy, Portland, Mich., sends four names for a year and one for three months. James Currie, Clifton, Iowa, sends five for a year. Peter Woodring, Waverly, Iowa, sends in a club of eleven renewals. Two other friends send four names and encouraging words. We hope each worker realizes that the publishers are grateful for all efforts made to sustain them in publishing the Cynosure and above all that they are benefiting their country men and promoting the kingdom of God and its righteousness.

"Up! let all the soul within you for the truth's sake go abroad."

The Children.

When we were mentioning the different classes of persons who might work for the Cynosure's circulation we left out the children and hereby apologize for so doing. We do not think that they were offended by the omission, but this makes us if possible, more cheerful in offering an apology. We also have something more to say to the children. Every boy and girl over ten years of age ought to own and read a copy of the "The Broken Seal." A nice copy, bound in cloth costs one dollar. Now every person, old or young, who has not the dollar but wants the book, can get it by securing two subscribers for the Cynosure and sending their names with $4.40 to us ordering the book. If they send one subscription with $2.20 they can get the same book with paper covers. So far as we know, Willie Smith, Belpre, O., is the first boy in the whole world to get this "Broken Seal" in this way. His father writes: "My little boy has got one name and sends you $2.20 and wishes you to send him the Broken Seal, by Sam'l D. Green, as premium."

Who will be the next boy or girl to secure it? We want at least a thousand.

Remember for every name with $2.20, that you get for the Cynosure we will send you forty cents in cash or fifty cents in the books that we publish. We need a great army of Anti-masonic boys and girls to work for the overthrow of secret societies.

We want all of the boys and girls who are working to write to us stating what they are doing and how, and we will publish part of their letters in the Childrens' Department. We have already received one of the right sort from a boy fifteen years old which we publish here:

March 5th.

"Enclosed find ten cents; five for postage for free tracts, "To the Young Men of America," and five for the following: two tracts No. 3, two No. 7, eight No. 8, two No. 23. Please address O. W. Little, Preemption, Mercer Co., Ill.

Dear Editor:—I am a boy fifteen years old. I go to school now. Last Friday one of the scholars (a young lady) had an essay on Masonry. She upheld it strongly, and closed with her advice to young men, which was, "Join the Masons." So I thought I would send to you and get a few tracts for those young men to read, that they may see what Masonry is.

Yours truly, O. W. Little.
Preemption, Mercer Co., Ill."

This is a good beginning. Children be up and at work.

"The children are gath'ring from near and from far,
The trumpet is sonnding a call for the war;
The conflict is raging, 'twill be fearful and long,
Then gird on the armor and come marching along."

(Editorial.)

"WELL DONE!!"

These words, sublime since Christ uttered them, are to be addressed to every soldier who survives the battle-field of God. "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

This is no Napoleonic bulletin, addressed to the mangled remnants of battallions who have been fighting for they knew not what. Much less are they those chaplets, which wreath the brow of conquerors, whose merit consists in writing field-orders from secure positions beyond the reach of the balls. They are to be the meed of every soldier of Christ who fights "the good fight" against the "rulers of the darkness of this world."

Blood-nursed and watered with the widow's tears;

And it is no profane application of these words, to apply them to those who have toiled for and contributed to the CARPENTER FUND, and so have given a head-quarters to our cause. You see by Mr. Carpenter's note on the eighth page of this number that the pleasant building whose picture has been made by Mr. Cook to look us in the face from the pages of the Cynosure; this fair building is ours to occupy, and, when the further sum of about eight thousand dollars is raised, which we hope will be before the close of our Anniversary next June, that Madison street property is to be perpetually consecrated to the reform and owned by the National Christian Association, to stand till every lodge-charter is withdrawn and every secret worshiper of Baal disfranchised, excluded from the United States government, which he has sworn to disobey when its laws conflict with the private rules of his lodge!

Hail, freemen! Hail, holy men and women! Hail, ye little children, and ye aged veterans; who have toiled in this holy cause. We have turned the flank of the enemy, and established a fort whose guns will never be silenced until the bugles of victory shall sound around our globe. "For He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till He hath set judgment in the earth, and the isles shall wait for his law."—Isaiah.

Measures are already being taken to inaugurate a daily prayer-meeting in the Carpenter building, to be opened with a formal dedication of the building to that religion which takes a man to God through Christ, the only WAY in time or eternity by which a soul ever got there. We shall soon make all foreign missions which fail to exclude the lodge-worshipers, look as silly and shallow as the anniversaries of the American Board did while its missionary morality included caste and slavery as tolerated practices. (See Brooklyn Report of Dr. Wood's, 1845). We shall make idolatry in Christian lands more hateful, because less excusable, than idolatry in heathen lands. God helping us (and he will help us), we will make 221 Madison street, Chicago, to be remembered as the Thermopylae of the nations, with this grand fundamental difference, that the hosts of darkness and despotism, and not the handful who withstand them shall be routed and put to flight; and the peaceful Conqueror, greater than any Leonidas, shall make his triumphal entry from the clouds and again say to his faithful followers, "WELL DONE!"

The Great Secret Society.

BY A. M. MILLIGAN D. D.

The secret society founded by Ignatius Loyola in 1537, is the oldest, most perfectly organized, and most fully developed member of the family of secret orders now existing; and consequently the best specimen from which to judge of the capabilities, tendencies and characteristics of the other members of the family. In anticipation of the objection that the order of Jesuits is Roman Catholic, and therefore no proper criterion from which to judge of secret orders in Protestant communities, I reply that I shall consider its relations to and workings among communities of its own kith and kin, and in Catholic countries. What a Catholic secret order is among Catholics, that a Protestant secret order may be expected to be among Protestants.

Here, however, the parallel fails, but fails in favor of the Jesuit order, for it is an intensely popish order among papists, while the secret orders among Protestants are not Protestant, nor even Christian, but a sort of religion of their own, as much Mohammedan, Jewish, and even pagan, as Christian, and this on their own showing.

The objects of the order of Jesuits, or of the Societas Jeseu or the Society of Jesus, as they love to be called, are good: 1, The education of youth; 2, Preaching the Gospel; 3, Defending the faith against heretics; 4, Propagating the faith by missions. What better objects could the organization proclaim to the world—especially to the Catholic world—than these, the very purposes which the church of Rome proposes to herself, in the very sense in which the terms are used by the order. Does the order of Masons or Odd-fellows or any other of our secret orders propose as the reason for its existence any nobler or better objects? And yet the teaching and preaching of the Jesuits and their defence and propagation of the faith of the church of Rome, has resulted in intensifying the ignorance—blinding with prejudice,—and blotting out of the minds of their votaries, not only all Gospel truth, but even the light of the age, and preventing all progress into light and liberty as far as their power reaches and their influence extends. It has bound the church of Rome in a blind and slavish obedience to the Pope of Rome, who by the decrees of a council which Jesuits assembled and controlled, has been declared infallible and thereby constituted the absolute unlimited and universal head of all authority, thereby virtually abolishing all councils, controlling all governments, and enslaving all nations to the one man, "Who as God sitteth in the temple of God proclaiming himself to be God." This is the work of the Jesuits, to reduce the Popish world, and every papist in the world to the most absolute subjection and slavish bondage to the Pope, while the society, the power behind the throne, is greater than the throne, in secret, and irresponsible, controls the Pope, thus constituting their order the real ruler of the world; its absolute master and yet shielded behind an infallible Pontiff from all responsibility or blame for the wildest misgovernment. Thus the schemes of the Jesuits have brought the Catholic world into a bondage and debasement in comparison with which the gloom and despotism of the dark ages was light and liberty, and this when the world is illuminated with the glory of the nineteenth century. Gallican liberty which till this time had always been maintained is now utterly overthrown, and ultramontanism, of a darker hue than ever before, universally established. There is no power or authority in the church of Rome today, but that which resides in and emanates from the absolute and infallible Pope, and he is the mere creature of the Jesuit order, and whenever you find a consistent Catholic you find a man whose first subjection and highest allegiance is yielded to a foreign potentate who is absolutely governed by an irresponsible secret order. Those of your readers who wish to see this point thoroughly elucidated and established will find it in Gladstone's pamphlets or "Vaticanism inconsistent with Civil Allegiance."

The full result of the establishment of this principle has not yet revealed itself. It is not the purpose of its promulgators that it should. It would arouse too much alarm. It would array the civil powers too soon against the papacy. It would make "the horns hate the whore." But its natural and necessary results have not escaped the clear vision of Bismark and even the less clear vision of the Catholic statesmen of Italy, Austria and even Spain, and hence the attitude which they are assuming towards the Curia of Rome.

But let us confine our examination more particularly to the order itself. What are the means by which it proposes to accomplish and has accomplished its ends? How marshall its forces and controll them? This is accomplished by laying its members under certain vows and obligations. The oaths under which they are initiated are of the most solemn and awe-inspiring kind, and by educating their members to believe that they are more binding than any other. In this respect very similar and of the same nature with the oaths and obligations of the Masonic order, so that were they to violate them under the requirement of either church or State, they would be regarded by the order as perjured, and incapable of being held bound by any oath or obligation.

The vows of the order are four: 1st, Poverty. 2d, Chastity. 3d, Obedience. 4th, To go wherever sent by their superiors. By the vow of poverty they are bound to hold no property in their individual right, all their property and all that they can obtain is made over to the order, by which they are sustained, and in whose possession all have an interest, and all of which is to be used under the direction of the proper authorities for the accomplishment of the purposes of the order. This has proved a powerful lever in accomplishing the aims of the order, vast sums having by every conceivable means been accumulated in the society.

By the vow of chastity they are not bound to chastity in the ordinary sense of the term, as it is well known that the violation of the seventh commandment is not considered as a violation of their vows, but by it is really intended celibacy. They are not permitted to marry or to entangle themselves in a family relation. Celibacy being considered necessary to the complete and absolute abnegation of personal rights which is characteristic of the order. In both of these respects as well as in the last obligation, namely to go wherever sent by their superiors, the organization is more complete and perfect for the purpose for which secret orders were invented than any o h er of our secret orders. For while large sums are accumulated by the larger orders by initiation fees and dues capable of being expended in building grand temples, and on feasts and processions, as also of being used by unprincipled men for other and less honorable purposes, yet none of them require the surrender of all individual property. And while all the secret orders build a wall of secrecy between a man and his wife and children, and while chastity in a Mason's obligation means only so far as relates to a brother Mason's wife and daughters, still the family is not utterly destroyed, nor is the marriage relation negatived in the letter, though I cannot but feel that it is in the spirit.

The obligation to obedience, while it is more stringent and absolute than in any other secret order, binding the Jesuit to such implicit and unquestioning obedience and subjection to his superior as though he were a dead corpse moved and actuated entirely by the will of another, is still charateristic of and essential to the effectivness of all of them. They are essentially despotic, the lower degrees ignorant of the character and aims of those above them, and yet governed absolutely by them. And every member bound to answer the "grand hailing sign of distress" and help a fellow member to the extent of his ability whether right or wrong, and even when attempting to escape from the hands of justice.

With a few words in regard to the history of the order, I will close my article. The Jesuits at a very early period of their history managed to get into important positions. Lainz, the General of the order who immediately succeeded Loyola, was the Pope's legate to the council of Trent. He was als the opponent of Beza, at the conference of Poissy, in 1561. Soon, by their secret arts Jesuits had themselves established in nearly very prominent and important position where influence could be exerted or power obtained. Their institutions of learning, schools and colleges were free to young men of good families, talent or promise, and thus by obtaining control of education, the young men destined to become men of influence, were brought under their control, and moulded to suit their purpose. Thus in a very short time their power became so great, and their means of accomplishing their purposes being secret become so effective and often startling, especially as poisoning, assassination, false accusation, perjury and judicial murder were freely resorted to, that communities everywhere became alarmed, and were driven to resort to most active means for their own preservation. In 1594, when the order had been but little over 50 years in existence, the Parliament of Paris banished the Jesuits, having first convicted them of two attempts to assassinate King Henry the IV. Portugal expelled them in 1759. France expelled the order in 1764. Spain having been by their arts convulsed by an insurrection, banished them in 1767. The two Sicilies banished them in 1768. Sardinia and the Papal States expelled them in 1773, and in the same year Austria, and every Catholic State in Europe expelled the order from their territories, Prussia and Russia alone sheltered them. Russia, however, in 1817 also banished them, and England in 1810. George IV. forbade Jesuits in the kingdom. Thus these States nearly all of whom were Catholic were convinced that there was no other remedy for the evils that were sapping their very foundations, but expelling and driving from their states, kingdoms and provinces, these very companions of Jesus. But afterwards finding that even this remedy was not sufficient, the whole Catholic world demanded of Pope Clement XIII., the absolute and total suppression and abolition of the order. Cardinal Bellarmine, a Jesuit, while Clement was in robust health, predicted that he would die before giving his decision. Bellarmine's prediction was fulfilled, and the sudden death of the Pontiff postponed the accomplishment of the suppression of the order. His successor, Clement XIV., set himself to the terrible task, fully conscious of the danger. Caraccioli says the Pope's words were, "This suppression will cause my death." He signed the brief suppressing the order on July 23, 1773, then in robust health, and on Sept. 22, 1774, died after lingering for months in indiscribable torture, with every symptom of poisoning, his bones withered, his features livid, lips black, abdomen inflated, limbs emaciated and covered with livid spots, entrails burst when the pontificial robes were taken from his body, the greater portion of the skin adhered to them, the hair of his head remained on the velvet pillows, and his nails fell off, inducing in all the belief that the aqua tonafa, a most subtle poison, prepared by the nuns of Pemgia, had been administered to him." This secret order thus suppressed by Pope Clement XIV., was restored by Pius IX. At once it strided into power, used the present pope as its supple tool, assembled the Vatican council, proclaimed the Pope's infallibility, through the Empress Eugenie precipitated France into war with Prussia, against the Emperor's inclination, to break down the Protestant power in Europe. But Providence, whom even the Jesuits cannot control, intervened. Prussia was ready, and in a rapid succession of victories crushed the Empire which was the last hope of the papacy. The dogma of infalibility, has divided the church and developed the old Catholic movement. And now everywhere failed in Europe, banished from the German Empire, the devotees of the order are flocking to our shores, taking possession of our cities, trampling down our Sabbaths, assaulting our "public schools," expelling the Bible, and crying down our Christianity; whenever they can accomplish it thrusting their Grey nuns into the schools, or appropriating the public money for their sectarian institutions; insinuating their priests into our public institutions; wheedling corrupt politicians and obtaining control of political parties, by every conceivable artifice; with sleepless vigilance, and undiscouraged persistence, winding their dark sinuous folds around every institution of our free Republic, determined either to destroy or convert to their purpose every element of our nation's life; ready, when detected to join the popular cry, withdraw the offensive act, and denounce the actor, and deny all sympathy with their own schemes, until a more suitable opportunity offers, with the avowed policy to "Act but not agitate."

From all present appearances our country is destined to be the theater of the great struggle with this demon of darkness; this man of sin and son of perdition, and the question is, "Are we equal to the emergency? Can the Christianity, the patriotism of the country be aroused before it is too late? Present appearances indicate that the young American Samson will sleep till the Philistines have bound his limbs with new cords and withes, if not until shorn of his locks of strength and his eyes put out before he rises to dash in pieces his dark and desperate foe.

What Sayest Thou to these Things?

THE CARDINAL DOCTRINES OF FREEMASONRY.

Respected Brother Dubs:—In this we will take into consideration, the system of those societies, and their practical working. They all bind their members to keep inviolable their supposed secrets, and their teachings. Thus the following three points are essential to them all; in Masonry they are called the three jewels, viz: A listening ear, a silent tongue, and a faithful heart. Thus in the first place they are bound to act as spies for their order, to report the names and doings of those who oppose their principles, and also those of the order who for conscience, sake have left them, and warn the people against those things.

A certain brother who was overseeing the printing of a book he had written against secret societies, found in the course of a conversation, that the printer was a member of the Oddfellow order. The brother remarked to him, "In order to be true to your order, you will have to report the printing of this book to the lodge!" His answer was, "I shall have to do that." Now that this jewel of the lodge is intended for this purpose, to hinder and crush out all opposition to them, Weishaupt explains thus: "One must become a spy to the other; this will answer in the place of anricular confession." If this lodge principle is left to work out its legitimate fruit, how long will it be till the terrible inquisition of the middle ages would be virtually established by the lodge powers? In principle it is already carried out in a different form. By this system, true and honest men, who are conscienciously opposed to this evil and warn the people and the church against it, have their name cast outas evil, and lies are fabricated, and scattered abroad by lodgemen to destroy their character and reputation before the public, in order to kill their influence.

Not long since the writer met with an acquaintance from Pittsburgh. In the course of our conversation the subject of secret societies was alluded to. At last he said, "I have wondered why those preachers down there speak so hard against you. Now I see it, you are opposed to those societies, that is the reason." This man had wondered what wrong the writer had done that they spoke so dispagingly of him, and now found out that it was on account of my opposition to this evil. A certain presiding elder said, not long ago, "It would have been better for brother H., if he had kept still in regard to secret societies." Yes, if I had given consent by silence to the vile thing, all would have been right between them and myself! But how could we, when we saw Satan bringing his abominations into the church privily, and be true to the Master, the church and our ordination vow? No, never shall we be silent in this thing, as long as the Great Shepherd bids us to testify against that which is an abomination in his sight! Not until we close our eyes on this earth or this evil is vanished from the churches and the land; though we should be hated and dispised by those who appear to be the friends and brethren of the church of our youth! "For whatsoever is born of God, overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith,"—John v. 4.

We now see why committees were sent to us thrice by the lodge, with the request to join some secret society, though we did not see it then. The last time a committee of one came twice, and at last said, "Do give us your influence and we will give you ours." We answered, "If you will give out an appointment in a public place, I will give you a temperance speech; but I cannot conscienciously join your lodge."

"Well," said he, "if you cannot give us your influence we cannot give you ours."

Hearest thou this language of the lodge? Is it not the same that Satan used when he came to Christ? "If thou therefore will fall down and worship me all shall be thine." But Christ refused, and so did the writer and therefore the opposition.

Again, they must be faithful to their teachings. This is understood by the jewel of a faithful heart. These orders have religious rituals of their own, hence they claim to fit and prepare man for the place of the blessed. A certain brother in the ministry once said in our hearing as he was speaking of Masons, "It will all be right if they only live up to their rules." We were astonished at this brother's remark. Could it be that he was sincere in his opinion and did not see that it was a religion of its own? Of its own assumption it apes after the new birth of God's children, by bringing the candidate in the third degree from death unto life on the five points of fellowship. Is this not mockingly assuming the work of the Holy Spirit which he works in the hearts of the soldiers of Christ? In the pretended killing and raising of Hiram Abiff the lodge looks upon the candidate as being brought forth unto a new life for the good of the order. Thus Mackey teaches that a Mason who lives in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the order, is free from sin. See Mac. Lex. page 16. This to my mind is horrible and blasphemous. The work of God's grace, the virtue of Christ's death and efficiency of his blood are put aside by the lodge and a sensual world religion is put in the place of his blessed religion. Paul says, "This persuasion cometh not from him that calleth you; a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." No wonder many who once run well in the Christian race before they joined the lodge have since returned to their old sins, Laodicean-like become luke warm, and unfit for the Master's use. Will He not spue them out unless they repent?

I am your humble brother in the Gospel of Christ,

H. W. Hampe.

Will Publish Tableaux but not Truth.

BY WOODRUFF POST OF WESTERN N. Y CONFFRENCE.

In the Advocate and Journal of Feb. 17th there may be seen the following:

"Tableaux, 1776–1876.—Grand Centennial entertainment, consisting of Tableaux, Solos, Duets, etc., at the Alanson M. E. church, Norfolk-street, near Grand, on Washington's Birthday, February 22d, and 23d, at half-past seven P. M. Choice selections of Scriptural and National Tableaux will be presented in good style. Don't fail to come, or you may never have the opportunity of seeing our fathers and mothers of 1776 again. Admission only twenty-five cents."

This grand entertainment of course must incorporate Scripture to give it character and encourage a class of pleasure-seekers who profess to be Christians, that they may not hurt their tender consciences. To them the nonsense and sinfulness of such a device would become quite evident, were it not that it is sanctified by Scripture quotations. It is on this basis that Freemasonry and like secret societies find Christian supporters. Scripture is interspesed all through their heathenish and blasphemous rites and ceremonies. This enables the man whose heart is surcharged with love of honor and the spirit of the world, professedly a disciple of Jesus, to conceal his real character from the public gaze, and deceive himself as well. It constitutes a splendid shelter from reproach for make-believe Christians.

But I intended to refer to the fact that our papers will publish trashy or valueless stories and notices of Grand Tableaux, etc., which rather demoralize than otherwise readers and actors, at the same time refuse a solid article from the pen of such holy men as Finney, and so great men as John Quincy Adams, or quotation from the sainted Bishop Hamline, pointing out and condemning evils which are conspiring against both church and state. What I here say is truth and cannot be denied. "Gird yourselves and lament, ye priests, howl ye ministers of the altar, come, lie all night in sackcloth, ye ministers of my God." (Joel i. 13), for the truth is withheld from the people and the unwary are caught in the snares of the wicked, who "shoot in secret at the perfect.' Ps. lxiv. 4.

Multitudes of our best people are afflicted with secret society, Freemason and Odd-fellow ministers, and multitudes see the desolation wrought thereby, and the great evil of such societies in general; but neither our papers nor our pulpits are allowed to speak out against the crying evil. The iron heel of despotism is set firm against the issuing of light from such sources. How long shall it be? How long shall a wicked policy triumph. How long, O Lord, how long!

"Let the ministers of the Lord weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them. Joel ii. 17. Let the saints of the Most High weep and lament, and humble themselves before the Lord God peradventure he will turn away our reproach; for they have seduced my people, saith the Lord. They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, The Lord saith and the Lord hath not sent them; and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word. My hand, saith the Lord, shall be upon the prophets that see vanity and that divine lies. And, they have seduced my people, saying, peace, and there was no peace; and one built up a wall and others daubed it with untempered mortar, therefore I will rend it in my fury." Joel. "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee which frameth mischief by a law?" Ps. xciv. They swear falsely and profane the name of God. "They shoot in secret at the perfect, and fear not," for our pulpits and our religious presses are all "dumb dogs that will not bark," and trample justice and mercy in the dust.

Political.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

cr . That maintenance of the public 10edit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

A Political Experience.

West Branch, Iowa.

I read in the paper that some of our brethren are likely to halt between two opinions, or to do evil that good may come.

I will give a little of my political experience in Iowa. When the Whig and Democratic parties were wedded together on the slavery platform, I resolved to come out from them and not partake of their ungodly acts. I called a county convention in Iowa city, made a flag, having painted on it an eagle with its feathers well plucked. In the city they threatened to pull it down, but the slave worshipers let us pass on to the Court-house unmolested, except a few hard words. On the Fourth of July many refused to march under our flag or before or behind it. "True Democracy," was in large letters printed on the flag. A few days before the election the Whig champion of Iowa, Doctor J. B., informed brother Piney—a Methodist minister,—and myself, that if we voted the abolition ticket he would press us by the law. It was hard times. Piney and myself unfortunately, were in debt to the Doctor, one $33, the other $73. Piney failed to attend election; I attended with a cheerful heart. While the men of oppression folded up their tickets and handed them in, I unfolded mine, showed it to the crowd, informed them of the threats, and handed the ticket to the judges. In three days I was summoned to appear before the Justice of the Peace, of course, to suffer the penalty for voting against the so-called divine institution.

When the votes were counted after election, the clerk of the election, my class leader and steward of the circuit, arose and said he had the honor to tell me I was all alone. I said it would be so but a little while. It only took eight years for that one idea to burst the bonds of those wedded parties. That is now passed and I have joy, peace and comfort in meditating on that act of voting, and I now look forward with a pleasing prospect of doing the same act for the American party, if I stand alone at the poles. I can trust neither of the old parties. Now is the time to punish them for their shameful acts. If the people want this idolatrous beast of the lodge slain, God is able to help them to do it even in less than eight years. Let every lover of God and the nation fly to the rescue.

D. J. Wilson.

Bennington, Ohio.,

Editor Cynosure:

I like our American platform and nominations for 1876 very well, but it seems to me we are starting at the top of the ladder. If we would commence at home, in townships and counties it would be more like ascending the National ladder. Remember the old adage, first creep and then walk. We should have home tickets in the field first, so as to be united for the national fight as we will have opposition on all sides.

Jas. S. Daugherty.

Delavan, Wis.,

In looking over the Cynosure of March 16th, I see the question raised in regard to voting for Walker and Kirkpatrick. Now in looking the subject over I am inclined to think that if our friends or all those who favor the anti-secrecy reform, would put shoulder to the wheel for our nominees and the result should be a Democratic victory the Republicans would come to realize their dependence and would naturally wheel into line with the American party, as the anti-secretists are generally Republican. Now for myself I am thoroughly disgusted with the Republican party, I mean the men who are in power. They have become wofully corrupt. Now you have some of my views notwithstanding I may be governed by the result of the nominating convention.

H. Johnson.

Ellington, New York.

Inasmuch as you have invited "brief" articles on political Anti-masonry, permit me to make a suggestion on the start, to limit the pros and cons to what can be written on a postal card, subjecting every one to write plain, and in plain English, so that all can understand what each one desires to have done in regard to this (as some thinks), Evangelical American party. I should be very glad if it was the case and that every Christian man could unite in a general crusade against all the wrongs in our government, but this cannot be brought about as is clearly shown by two of the letters in the Cynosure of March 16th. It is evident to my mind that these men need to take another "degree" in Anti-masonry and all others like minded. I do wish they could be made to see, feel and know, that the two parties now in the field are truly, virtually Masonic, and to support them is to build up that accursed anti-Christian and anti-Republican class we so much abhor. We must stop voting Masons into office. They have no business to meddle in the affairs of our government, when they have one of their own, which they are bound by oath to support.

J. B. Nesbell.

Action of the Political Committee of the Indiana Association.

The committee met at the call of the chairman in Marion, Indiana, Apr. first, 1876. After duly considering the matter for which they had been appointed, unanimously agreed "That we call a State Convention to meet in Muncie, Delaware Co., on the 23rd day of May at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of putting in nomination candidates to be voted for, for State officers at the October election, and to select electors for President and Vice-president, and for transacting any other business coming properly before the Convention.

And now, friends of reform, of justice, and of truth, need we counsel and admonish you to be ready to meet in this Convention and to give it your influence and counsel that it may be a success? The duty we owe to ourselves, our country, and the cause of truth and justice certainly demands at our hands the sacrifice we will be called to make. This will probably be a year as hotly contested as any other known in the former history of the two great political parties of the country. Lodge men are awake also and no opportunity will be left unimproved, no difference what the cost or sacrifice. Shall we then who are contending for an outraged and insulted people, fold our arms and cry peace, while the threatening storm is ready to break over our heads. The day has gone by when it can be said in truth that secretism has nothing to do with our courts, our politics, the defalcations and frauds of our public officers. Look if you please at a Masonic address delivered only a few years ago by Albert Pike (who is Grand High Priest of Masonry in the U. S. and to whom every Mason in this land has sworn allegiance in that they swear to be in subjection to them that have the rule over them) and was published in the Cincinnati Gazette at that time. He says Masonry has and must still rule this nation. And it is too true that the people let them rule it, notwithstanding by their obligations to Masons and Masonry they absolve many of their civil and social obligations. Their own authoritative books show this. Webb's Monitor, an authorized work for the lodge, declares on page 242, "That he (the Mason) cannot cast off or nullify his Masonic obligation. No law of the land can affect it, no anathemas of the church weaken it. It is irrevocable." Again on page 197 he says that no error is more liable to mislead and produce pernicious results, than the assumption that Masonic government rests on the consent of the governed. This error strikes at the very base of the structure. And again he says, page 198, "The first duty of the reader of this synopsis is to obey the the edicts of the Grand Lodge, right or wrong; his existence as a Mason hangs on his obedience to the powers immediately above him. The one unpardonable crime in a Mason is disobedience." We might enlarge on this point but we have given enough that you may here see that Masonry is a government set up and controlled independent of our civil government. A government consisting of nine men to whom every Mason in the land swears unswerving allegiance. Webb, McCoy and Dr. Oliver, three high Masonic authors, all agree that the Grand Lodge of the U. S. consists of nine members. We may be permitted then to say from the above facts that our civil government both State and general is only a habit to be worn by lodge men, while it may be and to a great extent is, used to oppress the honest, confiding, tax-burdened masses.

Friends of truth and justice, will you arise in your majesty while you have the power and vindicate the rights bequeathed us by our noble fathers? Or will we allow party tricksters and lodge men to lead us blindfolded into the awful vortex of anarchy and ruin? Will you, we ask again, let some small hindrance keep you away from the faithful performance of your duties and obligations as American citizens. We hope not. All are invited to the State meeting. On behalf of the Committee,

Wm. Hall, Chairman.

Now, our plan would be—if our desires were to rule—to have not only the Bible read, but to have the most thorough moral and religious instruction given in all the public schools even to the extent of making the pupils, not only good citizens, but good Christians, if possible; for, if they were Christians, they ought to be better citizens. But our wishes cannot be made the rule in a system of public education, which is maintained by the State and supported by the taxes of the whole people. Nor can the plans of Protestants in general be made the rule. Much less are we willing to allow Roman Catholics to become the educators of our children, for their plan is to tolerate no system which is not controlled by their priests. It must be an out-and-out Romish system in order to meet their demand. That may do for Spain and Austria, and would once do for Italy, but it can not do—not just yet, at least—for the United States.—Herald and Presbyter.

—The Liberty party which first made the distinct issue in politics against slavery polled in the whole country 6 754 votes 1840; 20,918 in '41; 34,071 in '42; and 60,873 in '43.

Temperance.

The Chicago Daily temperance prayer-meeting maintains a healthy growth. Remember it in prayer.

Under the auspicies of the South Side Woman's Christian Temperance Union, a temperance lunch and coffee house was opened Apr. 4 at 906 Cottage Grove avenue, near the terminus of that line of street cars, for the benefit of the men employed on the line. A free lunch was spread between the hours of 11 and 3. At 3 o'clock a meeting of the friends of the cause was held for the purpose of dedicating the room and the work, at which speeches and prayers were made by several ministers of the different denominations in that part of the city. Miss Frances E. Willard was also present and made one of her usual effective speeches. The ladies then held a business meeting, and prepared to hold another meeting in the evening,—which was well attended. A feeling of interest seems to have been awakened by this work, and it is to be hoped and devoutly wished for that the ladies engaged in this enterprise may go on with the good work and so spread this leaven that the whole city of Chicago will be purified thereby. A reading-room is also attached, where men can sit and read that which will benefit them socially and morally; where the influences about them will be such as to draw out the good and pure in them, instead of pandering to a debased appetite. Services will be conducted at the room on the Sabbath.—Tribune.

The Woman's National Christian Temperance Union has organized a Lyceum Bureau for the advancement of its work. The general officers of the National Union, comprising Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer, Miss Frances E. Willard, Mrs. Mary C. Johnson, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, Mrs. S. K. Leavitt, constitute a Committee of Counsel.

It is the design of the Bureau to furnish speakers, etc., to those needing help in forming local, Young Ladies, and Juvenile temperance unions, in organizing Reform Clubs, and in holding mass meetings. Speakers, organizers, readers and singers, wishing their names placed upon its list must present credentials from the Executive Committee of their respective States. As soon as the list is completed, circulars with full details will be issued and duly forwarded by the Secretaries, to whom all applications should be addressed.

To advance the objects of the Woman's Lyceum all those desiring their names attached to its list will immediately communicate with Mrs. Mary T. Burt, or Mrs. D. A. Beale, Secretaries; either of whom may be addressed at Principal Office, 136 Lawrence Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The test came in the United States District Court, at Boston, to determine whether clubs which sell liquor to their members must pay the special tax required of dealers, and was decided by Judge Lowell in the affirmative.

The Liquor Question In a Nutshell.

A very strong impression would be made upon the public mind if, after some long period in which the boilers of steam engines have been fed with a mixture of spirit and water, it was suddenly discovered that the engines would work quite as well with the water, without the spirit, and that the millions of pounds that had been devoted to the production of the spirit had been so much waste. But the argument goes very much beyond this in the case of "the millions of engines called men," if it can be shown that there is hurtful as well as wasteful expenditure, and that in a very large proportion of instances the engines would have worked even better without the costly addition of the spirit.

In these days of the scientific application of the doctrines of economy, it certainly must remain a matter of some surprise to thoughtful men that in a land of advanced cultivation and intelligence so many millions of good money are continuously applied to the production of a commodity which, in the existing habits of society, may reasonably be held to be pernicious alike to the pockets, to the health, and to the morals of the community.—Edinburgh Review.

Temperance Semi-Centennial.

By a happy coincidence, the temperance reformation commenced in the year 1826, half a century after the proclamation of our nation's independence. Previous to this, there had been various efforts made for the suppression of intemperance by the formation of societies; but the grand principle of total abstinence was not avowed till the year 1826.

In a book entitled "The War of Four Thousand Years," it is said: "The year 1826 saw the dawn of a new and totally distinct era in the history of the temperance reform. In this year the Rev. Calvin Chapin, a native of Connecticut, commenced, in the Connecticut Observer, a series of papers, the caption of which, 'Entire abstinence, the only infallible remedy,' sufficiently explains their object and bearing." On the 18th of February, this year, the American Temperance Society was first organized at Boston."

In an English work entitled "Bacchus," it is stated that "The American Temperance Society was instituted in 1826. It owes its origin to the writings and labors of the Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher, and others, whose zeal in the cause of morals and humanity will render them conspicuous in the annals of philanthropy and patriotism. This institution, through the blessing of God, has materially contributed by its salutary operations, to save the country from impending ruin."

The use of alcoholic drinks diminishes man's capacity to endure both mental and physical labor, increases his predisposition to disease, and shortens the average duration of life.—[N. S. Davis, M. D.

Reform News and Notices.

EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY of the National Christian Association will be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20 to 23.

CONNECTICUT State Convention will be held in Hotchkiss Hall, Waterbury, April 26th and 28th.

Convention in California.

By order of Rev. John Black of Upper Lake, Lake Co., Cal., Chairman of committee of organization, a convention of the committee and all friends of the National Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will meet in the basement of the Congregational church in Sacramento, Sixth street, between I and J streets, on the 25th of May next, at 1 o'clock P. M. The meeting is for men and women, all persons friendly to the cause..

1. To consider the nature of the secret orders now widely operating in this country, and their bearing on the cause of Christ and our civil institutions.

2. To arrange for the labors of Pres. J. Blanchard of Wheaton College, Ill., during five consecutive weeks beginning on Sabbath, July 9th next.

All friends of Jesus Christ, who is superceded and set aside by the lodge; and all friends of open, free and equal popular government, and opposed to taking secret advantage of our fellowmen, are invited to meet in council at the above time and place. All who wish to avail themselves of the labors of Pres. Blanchard it is hoped will take prompt measures to hold meetings, one or more, in their respective localities, and be present to arrange appointments for the same. By order of

JOHN BLACK, Chairman,
PHIL BECK, Sec'y.

Anniversary of Iowa Anti-secrecy Association.

There will be a convention of the friends of anti-secretism at Western, Linn Co., Iowa, commencing at 7:30 P. M. Tuesday, April 25th, 1876, and to continue in session until Thursday, 27th. A cordial invitation is tendered to all the friends of the cause, in Iowa especially, and to all others who may choose to be present. Hon. J. B. Walker of Illinois, and other able speakers will be present. Let the auxiliary associations, churches and neighborhoods favoring the objects of the convention see that delegates be chosen to represent them, and all unite in defraying expenses of delegates.

Systematic and sworn secrecy is an enemy to the church, state, and the social compact, and must be defeated by the force of truth and the grace of Him who in secret said nothing. Let prayer be offered that the convention be blessed with abundant success.

Delegates from the south and north will stop at Ely Station, which is three miles east of Western, on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids, and Minnesota R. R. Those from the east and west will come to Cedar Rapids, and then to Ely Station, where conveyance will be furnished to Western.

M. S. DRURY, President.

—General Agent Stoddard spoke before the young men of the Union Park Theological Seminary on Thursday evening last. His remarks were well received, and met from some, whose discernment had marked the steps of the lodge, a hearty response. This introduction of the reform in the center of influence of the Congregational churches of the West is a hopeful indication.

—Bro. Stoddard after a week or more hard work in connection with the transfer of the Carpenter building and the local interests preparatory to the anniversary, has finally determined to go to Connecticut. The Iowa friends were earnest in their call, but it is hoped that arrangements may be made for all parties which will be best for the reform.

Mr. Ronayne, though still suffering, at times severely, from his previous trying labors, has accepted the urgent invitation of Connecticut friends and will attend their State meeting at Waterbury, on the 26th. From the 18th to the 20th of May he is engaged to speak in Hartsville, Bartholomew county, Ind.

—Friend Chalfant wishes to know if the portrait of Mr. Ronayne printed last week is a good likeness. We consider it a very good one, more accurate by far than wood cuts are apt to be.

From the Illinois Agent.

SHEFFIELD, Ill., April 7, 1876.

DEAR BRO. K.—I reached Annawan, Henry Co., April 1st. Lectured that evening in the U. B. church near there, and on the next day (Sabbath) preached twice. On Monday and Wednesday evenings, I lectured in the same place to rather small but increasing audiences. The exceedingly bad state of the roads made it impossible for many to attend, but our meetings were deeply interesting.

There has been an interesting revival in the U. B. church in this place, and there is still a deep religious interest. This prepared the way for a favorable reception of the truth. One brother who is a Mason, publicly testified to the correctness of my statements, and renounced the lodge.

In the village of Annawan I could get no hearing. The churches there are honey-combed with Masonry, and those not in the lodge are fearful and unbelieving.

From there I came to this place where I met a most cordial reception from the Free Methodist brethren. I spoke last night in their church to a full house, and expect to speak again to-night. So the good work goes on. Yours in the Lord, H. H. HINMAN.

UNIONVILLE, Mo.

We have commenced in earnest to preach on the evils of Freemasonry and secretism in Putnam county, Mo., and as the kettle boils, the skum of Freemasonry keeps making its appearance. May the great Jehovah in a thundergust of wrath sweep this Upas tree from the earth. Multitudes in this country will soon be raised up to hate the whore; to burn her flesh with fire until she shall consume away. Secretism unfurls her black flag wherever she dares, and shows no quarter to character, property, or life. Her weapons are dark and bloody. She strikes deadly blows, but conceals the hand that strikes; but her bloody deeds, her treachery, falsehoods, whoredoms, and treason against the church and state, have been called to remembrance before God, and we believe he will render unto her double for all her sins.

O, for a host of laborers, to pull down these pagan temples and overthrow the secret warders of darkness!

A Baptist Testimony from Eastern New York.

BEMUS HEIGHTS, N. Y., Mar. 18, '76.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have delayed writing, hoping to send more. Am glad to know success is attending the efforts of those engaged in the good work. Here a little leaven has been planted, and it is beginning to work. A few weeks since a former pastor of the First Baptist church in Stillwater returned on a visit to this place. He had formerly been a Mason, but did not meet with them while here; but after leaving we were informed that he had returned to them again. On returning to visit the church, he said to two of the members in answer to their questions: "I am no longer a Mason. I have a demit from the lodge." Upon which one of those members invited him to preach on the Sunday following, to which he agreed, and came early to the church on Sunday morning; but when informed by one of the officers of the church, of a resolution on the church book to admit no organized secrecy into the church, the gentleman declined to preach; or, to use his own words, he would not go into the pulpit trammeled.

Some friend of the "handmaid" took the matter up and wrote an article on the subject and had it printed in the Saratoga Sun, to show, perhaps, to the world, how a church is capable of abusing a "good man"—as the writer of the article concludes by saying: "He, (that is, said pastor) is a Mason, and therefore he is a good man."

May the Lord bless you and all others engaged in opposing evil.

Yours for the truth,
S. ROWLEY.

The Sabbath of the Law.

BUNKER HILL, Ind.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I notice in the Cynosure of Mar. 9th a subscriber in California endorses all the doctrine against secretism, but has some trouble about the Sabbath of the law. True, this is a deep subject and one that has given me study for two years.

I wish first to say that God has two covenants, the first to a special nation, the second to all nations, or whosoever will receive or obey it. It is in the first covenant that we find "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Now the word the specifies a particular day, therefore it is my duty, as one who keeps the Lord's day, to show that that day, the seventh, is not in force.

The first argument to that effect is found in Christ's sermon on the mount, that "one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." Matt. v. 18. Christ said, "It is finished," when he expired on the cross. This was the fulfiling of all sacrifices and burnt offerings. Here is something passing from the law, therefore it must all be fulfilled which was the accomplishment of all for which it was sent. "The law was our (the Jew's) schoolmaster to bring us to Christ." "The law was added because of transgression until the seed (Christ) should come." "Ye are not under law but under grace."

We will bring our second argument from the fact that the law latest enacted by any authority is the one in force, and that any law that is re-enacted in another either in part or entire does away with the previous law. Now the Ten Commandments have all been re-enacted in the Gospel, except "Remember the Sabbath to keep it holy," which is not in the new covenant. "In that he saith, A new covenant he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away." Heb. viii. 13.

I will bring my third argument from the Scriptures found in Col. ii. 16: "Let no man judge you in meats or in drinks or in respect of a holy day, or of a new moon, or of the Sabbath days." Why not? "Because they are only shadows of things to come." I am aware that some hold this as one of the feast Sabbaths, but it is written "Sabbath days" and days in the plural would include all Sabbaths.

Hosea predicted, "I will cause all her mirth to cease, her feast days, her new moons, and her Sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts." This covers all the holy or sacred days of the Jewish church, including the seventh day. Then have we no Sabbath? Yes, but not such an one as was given in Arabia, but such an one as we have by the resurrection of the Son of God. This is the day when the resurrection was first preached. This is the Lord's day that John spoke of, the Lord's glorious day and not his inglorious day; for the seventh day our Redeemer was in the grave when gloom and despair overshadowed the disciples, but upon the first day he came to them at three different times when they were assembled together, each time giving them instruction. Upon the first day of the week the primitive Christians came together to break bread, and leaving the Bible we have on record in ancient history the fact that for the first two hundred years all Christians (Jewish excepted) worshiped on the first day of the week. Ignatius, a bishop who lived in the days of Peter and became his successor, tell us that all Christians kept the first day of the week; and, dear friends, let us be Christians and keep the Christian Sabbath. Yours truly, D. A. BAILEY.

The Lodge Immoral and Deceptive.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR SIR:—I am reading upon the subject of secrecy, and by reading am becoming awakened to a more vivid realization of the alarming sin and danger of this diabolical institution, in its various forms of existence now so extensively popular. It is time that an opposing effort was made; Christians have like foolish virgins, slumbered too long, and during their slumber a potent enemy has been sowing tares; a miserable delusion is being spread abroad and the "hoodwink" is being put upon sensible men's eyes, even before they reach the ante-room of the lodge. This is done by the proselyting laudation of Masons well up in the degrees, who true to their principles and faithful to their wicked oaths, scruple not to represent Masonry as a high style of benevolence; an institution calculated "to make one wise"; a form of religion far in advance of the common orthodoxy of the day, etc., when they must know that all such representations are essentially false and will be found so by all who test them in the practical way. And Sir, upon reflection, I wonder that men of good judgment and sterling character can be induced to enter the ante-room of a Masonic sanctum, until they are permitted to know somewhat definitely of this "most ancient order of Free and Accepted Masons," who as they absurdly claim are building up the moral fabric (?) moral architects!—with midnight orgies and ample potations of the ardent on their festive occasions!

Take the aproned fraternity, rank and file, as they appear among others of our common humanity, and their superior morality and intelligence does not appear. It cannot therefore be a reason why men hasten to pay their hard-earned money for degrees; it is rather the magic power of secrecy to gratify an unhealthy curiosity, to rank Masonically with doctors of law, medicine, and divinity, with the so called great men of this and other lands, and to secure help in time of need. Therefore, in the vestibule of the lodge, before the bandage is put upon the candidate's eyes, after professing a "favorable opinion" of the institution, "a desire for knowledge," and a sincere desire of being serviceable to his fellow creatures; moreover, that he is "unbiased by friends, uninfluenced by unworthy motives," initiation is sought and the manacles are put upon his hands, tongue and heart by a self-renunciation worthy of a saint, as he tamely says, "I do," to the following question, "Do you sincerely declare upon your honor before these gentlemen, that you will cheerfully conform to all the ancient established usages and customs of the fraternity?" To this he says yes, without knowing one syllable about them! How palpably absurd! What a decoy is Free (?) masonry. It is, as I understand it, the loss of freedom, and the silence it imposes and maintains by its barbarous oaths, too lavishly cruel for any man of human sympathies to take, must be painful to any man of good sense and feeling. Yet dupes are too easily made and men who are too good for such companionship and too pure for such "work" as it is called, are being rapidly wheeled into line. Is not this the work of that enemy who "as a roaring lion goeth about seeking whom he may devour"? When the enemy comes in as a flood a standard should be lifted up against him.

It is well that some eyes are opened to see and some hearts made to feel. As the result, multitudes will be saved from the sham blows of "Jubela, Jubelo and Jubelum;" from death, burial and resurrection, in silly yet profane mockery, to spend their time and money better and more for God's glory and after the style of an unselfish benevolence. Being a verbi Dei minister, a minister of the word of God, I do extremely wonder that intelligent men ministers of the Gospel will consent to try the experiment of this falsely called *Free*masonry; and my wonder is many times increased by knowing what any man may know by reading what faithful and true men have written at the risk of their reputation and lives; that ministers after taking one or more degrees should remain there and descend the ladder, I will say, and take added degrees, which Robel tells us are no part of English Masonry; that, according to him, rightfully has but three degrees and was originated in London in 1717. How can they serve God and Masonry? I have but little faith in such ministers, I am free to confess, no matter what they may profess, or to what communion belong. I have read the remark that in proportion as Christians love the lodge room more, they love Christ less; and this is sustained by my observation. A man of my acquaintance whom I sought to prevent becoming a Mason, repelled me by saying that his father was a member of a respectable church, and he believed a good Christian, also a Freemason, and he once asked his father if he was obliged to leave the church or the lodge, which he would leave,—his ready reply was, "The church;" and this made him believe that Masonry was a good thing; better than a good church. I have prevented some from being "hoodwinked," and shall try to dissuade others May this temple of Dagon fall. I pray God to bless all proper means used.

OUR MAIL.

Wm. McKamy, Flat Rock, Ill., writes:

"The cause has many warm advocates who need only to be warmed up a little in this matter, when we think the evidence of their faith would be seen in a good, large club from this corner of the vineyard."

We need this "good, large club," and hope as spring advances a sufficiently high moral temperature will be experienced by these friends to enable them to secure it.

Geo. W. Clark, Dansville, N. Y., writes:

"I wish to continue the Cynosure. I cannot dispense with it. and I want to send it around among my neighbors, who read it with great interest."

C. Conkling, West Salem, O., writes:

"Mr. Ronayne's lectures here will be of inestimable benefit. It is evident that the lodge are put to it to know what to do. He compasses, however, too much ground to produce the highest moral effect. The lodge writhes under him."

James Currie, Clifton, Ia., writes:

"The members of secret clans have a controlling influence here while those opposed to them in sentiment are in a large and respectable minority; but many are deterred from making known their opposition through fear of sad consequences in the community and especially among neighbors and friends, and it is hard to determine who, if any, are entirely free from influence of this character. A course of lectures might help us to shake off these fears and see that the danger apprehended is more imaginary than real, could we but find ourselves able and willing to pay for it."

If you are not able to pay a lecturer see what you can do at home among yourselves. Christians generally find the "lions" chained when they go forward with God's Spirit in their hearts.

John Collins, Hicksville, O., writes:

"I am so well pleased with your expose of secret societies that I cannot do without the Cynosure. . . We have our full share of secret societies here, Masons, Odd-fellows and grangers. We had a Methodist minister in Antwerp who was a chaplain of the Masonic lodge. He preached a Mason's funeral sermon and of course extoled him to the skies, and exhorted his brother Masons to be faithful to their Masonic vows and they were as sure of heaven as though they were there already, and a number of them are well known to be spiritualists, infidels and skeptics. . . If I live till next fall I intend to poll one vote for Walker if it is the only one in Paulding Co."

B. T. Park, Erin, N. Y., sends five subscriptions for a year and writes:

"I like 'uphill business' the best, and by the favor of the Lord you shall hear from me again in this matter."

Israel Gable, Stewardstown, Pa., writes:

"I will distribute tracts and papers and may do some good, but what we want here is good lectures. There are plenty of Anti-masons here but they are all do-nothings. If we had good lectures to stir them up we might do something for the cause. I am waiting with all patience for the time to come for eastern Pennsylvania to get her share of lectures. Can you not do something to influence some of your lecturers to come this way?

Cannot Mr. Raynor visit the above locality?

Philester Lee, Lebanon, Oreg., writes:

"I have been opposed to secret orders of every kind since the Morgan murder. I live in a nest of different orders, and I have high times. I can reason them out of their argument easily. I would like to have lots of your tracts for distribution. I wish you God-speed in your righteous undertaking."

Honeywell tracts can be had by any one by sending 5cts per hundred for postage.

C. W. Loney, Fennimore, Wis., writes:

"I cannot afford to do without the paper as it keeps me posted so that I can talk to all the Masons and Odd-fellows and their Jacks, with whom our section of country is cursed."

David Glaspie, Oxford, Mich., writes:

"We have had a lecture here on the subject Masonry which opened the eyes of the people some. But the Masons have made the people think that the lecture hurt the church financially so that we cannot get another place for a lecture, our hall being under the influence of the lodge."

S. E. Orvis, Waukesha, Wis., writes:

"I think I can do more good in the cause of Christ with this dollar in this way than I ever did or could have done with five dollars in my former way of giving through M. E. church channels, and I thank God with my whole soul for the light. If the church of my early choice goes under with the murderous, blasphemous clutch of Masonry upon its throat, I am not in the craft. Am not a castaway, but a come-out, and mean henceforth to be separate from this hidden, stripping, swindling and lying imposture. We need a good, rousing lecture very much in this fancy-work church and lodge-ridden town."

Rev. E. S. Bunce, Wilton Junction, Ia., writes:

"You may add my name to your list of seceding Masons for the State of Iowa. Number of degrees, seven."

A. D. Carter, Deersville, O., writes:

"I am authorized to send you the name of Hannibal C. Robey of Leesville, Clark Co., O, as a seceding Mason of the third degree. Formerly of lodge N. Indiana, No. 16, Steuben Co., Brockville Township."

We have now a list of seceding Masons numbering 133. We want to double this soon.

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for Apr. 23—The Early Christian Church.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts ii. 37-47. Commit 37-42. Primary Verse, 39.

37 Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?

38 Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

39 For the promise is unto you, and to your children and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

40 And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation.

41 Then they that gladly received his word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

42 And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayers.

43 And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles.

44 And all that believed were together, and had things in common.

45 And sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all men, as every man had need.

46 And they continuing with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart.

47 Praising God and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."—Rom. x. 18.

TOPIC.—The First Revival.

—There is no need for the sinner to say: "What shall I do?" The Lord has done it all. Salvation is a free gift. Those who want it can have it without money and without price—without doing anything but accept it. Is. lv. 1; John vi. 37; vii. 37-39; Rom. iii. 24; iv. 4, 5; xi. 6; Eph, ii. 8, 9; Rev. xxii. 17.

—On the contrary there is need for the Christian to say, "What shall I do?" for "the harvest truly is plenteous but the laborers are few." Matt. xx. 6, 7; ix. 37, 38; John ix. 4; 1 Cor. xv. 58; Gal. vi. 8 10; 2 Thess. iii. 13; 2 Pet. iii. 14.

—"The promise is unto you and to your children." God never forgot the child. He did not work merely for one generation. He did not wait for the child to become an adult before he took him up in his arms and blessed him. The children are joint heirs to the promise. Gen. xvii. 10; Deut. xxxi. 12, 13; Ps. lxxviii. 6, 7; ciii. 17, 18; Prov. xi. 21; xx. 7; Is. xliv. 3.

—The sword of the Spirit wounds, but how quickly and gratefully doth the Lord who holds it, heal! It is in the hands of a loving physician and not in the hands of one who seeks our hurt. Heb. iv. 12; Ps. xxxiv. 18; cxlvii. 3; Is. xl. 1; lvii. 15; lxvi. 2; Jas. iv. 6.

—The early Christians were not morose ascetics. They were joyful men—full of a joyful experience. They ate their bread with gladness and singleness of heart. Any other presentation of religion than this is a libel, whether it be in words or in the lives of men. Is. lxi. 1-3; Ps. xxx. 11; Matt. v. 3 5; Luke i. 78, 78; ii. 14; John xiv. 27; xv. 11; Rom. viii. 6; xiv. 7; 1 John i. 3, 4.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

Farm and Garden.

SPRING WORK.

Spring has come! Spring has come! Spring has come!
Hark, the feathered songsters tune their notes of joy!

Yes, it has come, and one month of it has about gone; but the birds have not excited themselves to any great extent, unless it be in cages in parlors or cosy sitting-rooms. In fact, the singing birds themselves have not come, and will not until the snow-drifts which yet brave the sun, rise in vapor, or else run toward the sea. But, because the season is late, so much the more need that those who have gardens to make or lawns to dress should undertake it as soon as the conditions are proper and the weather will permit. Notwithstanding the untoward season in the North, there are many localities, in which the Tribune is a welcome visitor, where the early spring months mean spring in reality.

As soon as the frost has left the ground and the soil has become settled, —unless this work has been done in the fall,—the ground should be raked clear of trash, preparatory to spreading manure, and plowing or digging the beds. Wherever the soil is sandy the earth becomes firm before the frost is out; but, on all loams and other fat land, the soil always remains soft until the frost is entirely gone. Wait, therefore, until the earth is firm under the feet before you commence, and then make all ready for work.

One serious mistake with those who have not intimately studied the nature of soils, in that in their eagerness to have their crops early, they plow or dig while yet the ground is too wet. This should never be done until the soil is thoroughly friable, or will crumble easily between the fingers. When it will compact into a firm mass upon being squeezed in the hands, let it alone; for you may do mischief that cannot be repaired in years. Remember a lumpy garden-plat will cost you double the labor that one will friable and disintegrable; and it will be lumpy, or friable, according as it is worked wet or dry. Therefore, when it is right, seize the opportunity to get it ready for planting.

FROM THE LAWN

rake all trash, of whatsoever kind,—dead grass, leaves, sticks, etc.,—as soon as the sod becomes firm enough to bear the feet; and, if the surface is at all rough, rub it repeatedly with a narrow roller, such as may be drawn by one or two men. Clean off the graveled roads and walks, raking the surface towards the center from each gutter, leaving the larger gravel along the crown. Then finish with the roller. Thus you may have all tidy about the place, and the sun, when it does come, will soon start the young grass into greenness.

If the tulip and hyacinth beds, and those containing other hardy perrennial bulbs have been covered with mulch through the winter, as they should have been, remove the covering as early as possible, unless you wish to retard their growth; and this is not, of course, advisable, since the object is to get them in bloom as early as possible.

Cut out a few pretty beds for flowers in the hollow portion of the corners of the walks, where you may mass bedding plants and annual flowers; for they are all the more charming if you come upon them unexpectedly. A little time spent in beautifying the grounds is well spent. It not only adds to the charm of the house, but endears the children to its pleasant precincts. Happy the man who owns a home to make pleasant and beautiful! The one who does have a home and neglects to beautify it, deserves but little of his fellows, and nothing of posterity.

SEEDING SMALL GRAINS SEASONABLY

is seeding them early. If upon land fall plowed, as they always should be if possible, then, just as soon as the frost leaves the ground sufficiently so that the harrow, the drill, or the broadcast seeder can work without striking frost, work early and late to get in the crop. But, says one, you have told us that land worked when wet will bake and become lumpy. Yes, after the frost has once left the soil,—not before; for the subsequent freezing and thawing set all right again.—Chicago Tribune.

Masonic.

The Glory and the Shame of Masonry.

ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D.

The December number of the New England Freemason comes to us with the valedictory announcement of the editor that with that number the publication of the magazine will cease. During the past year it has "about paid its costs." This is consoling. Most Masonic journals die in debt. It is, of course, a matter of little importance to the fraternity whom he has striven to interest, that there has been no return to the editor for his labor.

The news of the extinction of another Masonic periodical, mortifies but does not surprise us. Here was a magazine, which for scholarly ability had not its superior in the world, a magazine which was constantly, by its able articles, throwing light on the history and the philosophy of Masonry—which must necessarily have elevated the intellectual character of all its readers—brought to a sudden conclusion, simply for the want of adequate patronage.

And almost the same mail which brings us this sad announcement, brings also the last transactions of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, which inform us that there are more than twenty-five thousand Master Masons in that jurisdiction. A quarter of that number would, as subscribers, have given permanence and prosperity to the New England Freemason. An eighth would probably have enabled it to maintain its existence, with no reward it is true, to the editor, but the consciousness that he was doing a good work.

It is useless to attempt to conceal the fact. Freemasons make great pretensions of attachment to their order, but that attachment does not bring to them as a general rule, any desire to see its intellectual character elevated. They will expend liberal sums for lodge and personal decorations, for pilgrimages and processions, but nothing for the support of Masonic literature. Go into a commandery, for instance, consisting of three hundred members, and say to them that it is proposed to make a pilgrimage or visit to some sister commandery in a neighboring State, the expense of which will be to each member about fifty dollars. Call for the names of those who are willing to go, and it will not be difficult in most cases to obtain a hundred. Go into the same commandery and say to the members that there is a valuable magazine, full of Masonic instruction and information, which is languishing for want of patronage. Call for the names of subscribers to sustain the work and to improve themselves, at an expense of three dollars, and the solicitor will be fortunate if he obtains ten subscriptions.

At the Centennial there will doubtless be magnificent displays of lodges, chapters and commanderies. Money will be expended for these displays without stint, but we should be ashamed to see a census taken and published of the number of readers of Masonic books in those crowds. * * * *

Years may yet elapse before Masonic scholars will begin to find it irksome to write for a brotherhood who will not read. The literary history of Masonry will continue to record the rise and fall of Masonic magazines. Printers will publish and lose their money. Editors will write and lose their time and labor. But there must at last come an end to all this.

And the end will be thus. Either the intellectual character of the craft will be elevated, and Masons will all recognize the fact that they should know something of the history and the philosophy of the institution or Masonic books and magazines will cease to be produced. Then will come the dark age of Masonry to be speedily followed by its extinction. Masonic clubs still called lodges, in deference to the past times, may continue to exist; but Masonry as a history to be investigated, and as a philosophy to be studied, will no longer have its place. The scholars who are now engaged in the effort to cultivate and diffuse a highly elevated tone to the institution, will, in sheer disgust, direct their studies to other and more congenial fields. Masonic literature being thus abandoned, Masonry must speedily degenerate. * * *

Now this is the glory and the shame of Masonry.

It is its glory that it has a noble literature, whose tendencies are all of the most elevating nature, and that there are scholars who labor incessantly, "without hope of fee or reward," to disseminate this literature among these brethren.

It is its shame that not one Mason in ten reads a Masonic book or subscribes to a Masonic journal: that there are so many who are content to expend their money on Masonic degrees and Masonic jewels, but not a cent on Masonic education.

The result is that Masonic magazines, which are sources of Masonic knowledge, are established, languish for a few years, or perhaps months only, and "languishing, die." The indifference of the craft puts out the light, and then they contentedly live on in ignorance.—Voice of Masonry.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1876.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

CHICAGO, Apr. 5th, 1876.

I am glad to say to the readers of the Cynosure that the conditions upon which I agreed to give the National Christian Association the use of my building, No. 221 West Madison St., have been complied with. According to the agreement I hereby give the Association the use of the building, together with all rents coming from the same, on condition that they pay all taxes, etc., and keep the building insured. PHILO CARPENTER.

OUR EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY.

The split among Congregationalists at Brooklyn, N. Y., will add to the importance of our coming Anniversary. We are told that delegates can be entertained to the amount of 500 or more, and we must meet in large numbers to force the issue of salvation by Christ or Masonry, on the agitated Congregational churches throughout the West. The Western State Congregational bodies have voted against the lodges, and will not go back on their record if we can force the issue squarely before them. And even if they should go back with the worldly elements of their churches, many will abide by Christ, and will not go with the lodge, but, along with enlightened and spiritual men and women of other names and denominations, will separate themselves from the Masonic leprosy of the nations.

A CONGREGATIONAL SPLIT.

When slavery was likely to be revealed and cast out of the churches of Christ it contrived to split Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists and others on other questions so as to leave slaveholders in both ends of each split, thus confusing and perplexing the minds of good men and hiding its hatefulness under their perplexity and confusion. The expulsion of idolatrous practices from Christian fellowship is a reform more fundamental than the exclusion of unrepentant slaveholders. It is to present to the nations the simple question of salvation by Christ or by ceremonies; by the atonement or by the priest. This issue will be staved off by every conceivable device of Satan and of wicked men.

The Beecher (Advisory) Council invented a scandal bureau to try Mr. Beecher, which has no more to do with the Bible, religion, or. Congregationalism, than the Latin mass has with prayer.

The New York and Brooklyn Association on motion of Henry M. Storrs, Secretary of the Am. Home Missionary Society, appoint R. S. Storrs, Buddington, etc., a committee to try Beecher before his nondescript Scandal Bureau, and threaten to denounce them and justify Beecher if they do not go into that scandal gull-trap. Of course Storrs, Buddington & Co. refuse, and they with McFarland, Taylor and others withdraw from membership in that Association.

This is the beginning of grave matters.

1. Henry M. Storrs, taking violent Beecher ground will drive from the Home Missionary Society in disgust all who believe Beecher guilty, and thus sink the funds thousands of dollars.

2. Andover, by its professors Meade and Smythe, have been in Brooklyn and they will sustain Storrs and Buddington and so will multitudes of Congregationalists all over the West who long since shrunk from Beecher on account of his no-doctrine, no-Sabbath and no-morals position. This will make a multitude of weak Congregational churches still weaker; and as the National Congregational Council is run by its Masonic Secretary, Quint, it will either split or support Beecher, whose religion, if it deserve the name, is decidedly Masonic.

The only thing for Christians to do in this muddle is to divorce their local churches from the lodge and form the National body proposed by Adam Crooks under the name of "The United Churches of Christ," and slough off the worldly unitarian and deistical elements which now weaken and destroy the piety of the nation.

Can there not be a national fast and convention for the promotion of holiness agreed on, that we may humble ourselves before God and implore his his intervention in our behalf?

A MOCKERY OF RELIGION,

"No man cometh unto the Father, but by me." John xiv. 6; "And whoso climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." John x. 1. What then must be the condition of the Odd-fellow who obeys the following proclamation and observes the day in accordance with the law and usages of his order? God being judge can he be anything other than a "thief and a robber?"

Now, therefore, I, M. J. Durham, M. W. Grand Sire of the Grand Lodge of the United States, in virtue of the authority imposed on me by law, do hereby enjoin upon all Grand and Subordinate Bodies under the jurisdiction to adopt proper proceedings for the observance of the Fifty-seventh Anniversary of Odd-fellowship in America, on the 26th day of April, 1876, by setting apart that day for thanksgiving and prayer.

Done at the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, this 26th day of January, 1876, and of our Order the fifty-seventh. M. J. DURHAM, Grand Sire, JAS. L. RIDGLEY, G. C. and R. Sec.

By this proclamation of the "Most Worshipful Grand Sire," of the "Right Worshipful Grand Lodge of the U. S.," every Odd-fellow is required, and of course expected to observe the day in "thanksgiving and prayer," and at the same time to observe in his devotional exercises the rules and requirements of that compact with which he is identified. If he does this he may not use the name of Christ the Mediator, for to many in this "universal brotherhood" this name is an offense, and to "intrude" it upon these "conscientious" members would be "sectarianism," which the lodge would never permit; thence it follows as a necessity that each member (ministers and professed Christians included) must go down on his knees and utter Christless prayers, or be unfaithful to his vow of fealty to the lodge. Some possessing a measure of love for their Divine Redeemer will doubtless hesitate, and many utterly refuse to participate in such fearful blasphemy, but those who comply, while professing to honer the "God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" will only mock him by trampling his laws under their feet, and rejecting the covenant of redemption in Jesus Christ. Does not this instance of lodge affrontery call for a rebuke from the religious press, and the pulpit of our land?

HOLINESS.

The old original Methodist Episcopal paper, Lion's Herald, thus notices the alleged lapse of Mr. Pearsall Smith, who for a time, led the minds of the sanctificationists of Great Britian. The Cynosure is in favor of holiness and its promoters, without expecting them to be omniscient or immaculate. There is this to be said, we have read the statement signed by Henry Varley and other leaders of the English holiness movement, and we are to this day ignorant of any specific charges against Mr. Smith, if any such exist; and we know enough of English Christians to know that unpopularity with many of them is the worst of crimes. But to the Lion's Herald notice which is this:

"The very moment a tendency is seen, on the part of ardent lovers of the Lord Jesus Christ, to render the atonement too objective, and to even seem to offer impunity to sin, the orthodox world cries out against it. The most rigid Calvinist becomes pronounced in his denunciations of such Antinomianism.

This was the supposed fault of Mr. Pearsall Smith; rather, indeed, a matter of inference than a fact. He was suspected of estimating too lightly the necessity for the inward and outward personal holiness, on the part of the believer, in his impassioned presentations of the grace and efficiency of the death and mediation of Christ, as the entire foundation of his salvation. Rigid orthodox ministers fairly drove him from his already appointed meetings, and from England, although his errors were simply matters of theory and not of practice."

BIRDS OF A FEATHER.

The following clipped from the Chicago Tribune, April 6th, is from its special Washington correspondent;

RELICS OF THE REBELLION.

We have here now Robert Toombs, that most unrepentant and recalcitrant of rebels, nearly 66 years of age yet as vigorous and ponderous as he used to be in ante-bellum times when he used to make speeches denouncing the North, and then keep the manuscript back so that he need not be called to account for what he had said. Of late years Toombs has paid great attention to the mysteries of the upper degrees of Scottish Rite Freemasonry, and he comes here to enjoy the teachings of the head of the southern jurisdiction of that order, Albert Pike. Pike is a native of Boston, and was educated near Newburyport, but he went South when a young man, and became entirely identified with the people of Arkansas Like Toombs, he has a stalwart figure, with a fine head crowned with flowing looks, which give him a patriarchial appearance. He practices law in the Supreme Court here, in partnership with his son and with ex-Senator Bob Johnson of Arkansas.

This wretch Pike will be remembered by our troops who fought under Curtis at Pea Ridge as the guerrilla who raised a regiment of Indians to scalp our soldiers had the rebels beaten us in that fight. A renegade native Yankee from a State which had on its statues book a law forbidding Masonic oaths. A rebel, who, unable to raise a regiment of southern secessionists was faint to command Indians; and Robert Toombs, his roll of slaves yet uncalled at Bunker Hill! Well may the Tribune's correspondent call these "relics of the Rebellion" aye, Masonic relics.

MOODY IN THE HIPPODROME.

Mr. Moody is making a record against the anti-Christ of the lodge of which no honest Christian man need be ashamed. In Brooklyn he bore testimony that the assumed benevolence of the lodge cannot be oompared with the exercise of the genuine virtue by the church. In Philadelphia he explained the word of God to be against the lodge allianee, and last week in the crowded Hippodrome in New York he repeats this exposition and shows that his testimony is not heard alone before the public audience. In this good work Mr. Moody is literally following the Lord, who for us "made himself no reputation." For a popular evangelist of Mr. Moody's experience to stand for this truth before the whole Christian world is an act of moral courage only to be looked for in one led of the Spirit. The N. Y. Witness thus reports his remarks on Wednesday, April 5th:—

Now look at 2. Thessalonians iii., 6: "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly and not after the tradition which he received of us;" and 2 Corinthians vi., 14: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness? Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you." Now if that is not a very clear language, that if we are going to keep company with God we have got to be separated from the world, I don't know what is. I don't know but that it would be a good thing to stop preaching the Gospel, and preach separation. This idea that Christians have got to be mixed up with ungodly men, is all contrary to the word of God. Oh! that some prophet would be raised up that would cry separation until we get the church of God separated from the world! "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." Some say that is matrimony. When I was in Philadelphia I spoke upon the text, and after the sermon a minister came down and said he agreed in almost all I said, "but I don't think," said he, "that it meant secret societies." "Do you belong to one?" I said. He said yes. You see people will not admit that a text applies to themselves. I think the thing, however' is very plain. If I am yoked up with an ungodly man how is God going to walk with me? How are we going to walk together except we be agreed? Mr. Moody then proceeded to show that in business and in matrimony we should be united with Christians, and in a general way urged upon all Christians the necessity of not conforming to this world, but keep constantly looking to Jesus.

—A caustic comment on the journalistic failure which grieves Dr. Mackey (see page 7) is published in the Masonic department of Pomeroy's Democrat. Pomeroy is a 32 degree Mason and pretends to speak with authority. He says:

"The New England Free Mason magazine is dead, after having for the past year just about paid its expenses. We are not surprised, for Masonic magazines do not generally pay their way into profit. We are often asked why? There are several reasons. Masonry is an oral institution that can live without books or printed passages. This is one reason. Another is, that many editors of Masonic magazines seek to ride the brotherhood rather than work for a living. Others spend more time over the bottle than is consistent with the dignity of the order. Another reason is that purely Masonic reading is dry and hard work. Another is that many a magazine is started by a weak brother who expects others to push him through the world, simply because he is a Mason, when the spirit of Masonry tolerates no such excuse for laziness. If the general Masonic paper or magazine were better, it would last longer and be a profit."

Centennial Map.—Mr. Rufus Blanchard, the well known map publisher of this city has issued a handsome pocket map of the United States, according to the treaty of of peace of 1783. It is a rare historical study and will be a valuable aid to the ten thousands of young folks who are reading at this best of times the history of their country. Published at No. 132 Clark street, at 25 cents.

The Publishing House having passed into the possession of the National Christian Association, the contributors to the fund will wish to know how they met the first of April. On that day the treasurer's books showed:

Cash donations,	$2187.37
Interest-bearing notes,	8115.00
Total,	$10,302.37
In addition to this sum there were:
Notes without interest,	$535 00
N. Pacific R R bonds, estimated	250.00
	$785.00
Additional to Apr. 8:
Cash,	$165 00
Notes,	1625.00

Making a sum total of $12,877.37.

As the bonds are to be sold immediately, and the non-interest-bearing notes are most or all due within a year, it may be safe to say that $2800 are raised or $7200 remaining to be collected on the second ten thousand. For this exhibit of the fund every friend of the reform should be truly grateful to Almighty God.

The Religious Daily of Montreal, The Witness, received not long since a worthy proof, of its value. A large and influential meeting was held in Mechanics Hall, Montreal, which set on foot a plan for establishing the paper on a permanent basis. It is proposed to raise a fund of $100,000 for the purchase of a suitable building to be used as the office of the Witness, and to present the same to Messrs. John Dougall, John Redpath Dougall and James D. Dougall; and it is fully believed that the measure will so commend itself to the sympathies of the public as to insure a prompt and liberal response.

The circular says: "For thirty" years, the Montreal Witness has maintained an able, impartial and earnest advocacy of civil and religious liberty, as well as of every cause connected with the highest interests of society; and has thus established the strongest claim to the sympathy and support of every right-minded member of the community. In an especial manner, it has been the unflinching defender of Protestanism against the aggressions of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, while maintaining the equal rights of Roman Catholics. The Witness, and the publications issuing from its press, have also been an incalculable blessing to the homes and families of our country, as a medium of diffusing useful knowledge and Christian principles.

To the energetic founder and editor of the Montreal Witness (Mr. John Dougall) the people of this Dominion must ever feel greatly indebted, and their sense of obligation will be intensified by a careful consideration of the self-denial and the patient toil with which Mr. Dougall, as well as his son, Mr. John Redpath Dougall, have discharged their arduous duties, and bravely confronted their many discouragements." We hope a similar plan may be soon undertaken by the Christian people of New York to establish Mr. Dougall's enterprise in that city. Few papers are doing more for the best interests of our States than the New York Witness.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Methodist Board of Bishops has appointed April 28 as a day of fasting and special prayer, for the General Conference which meets May 4.

—The great Presbyterian Council which was called to meet in Scotland, in July, has been postponed to accommodate Americans who wish to remain at home during the Centennial.

—There is a most remarkable revival of religion in Russellville, Ky., participated in by all the churches. It has been regarded as one of the most hard and unpromising fields in the State. Nearly 200 persons have come out on the Lord's side.

—Mr. Alman, a Baptist missionary, said he had baptized seventeen Jews, and that every large down-town congregation in New York has as many as fifty Jews connected with it. At least 2,000 of the professed Christians of the city are of Jewish extraction.

—The Reform Episcopal Church has been discussing the propriety of abolishing Lent from their book and practice. It seems to realize that the season is only a temporary suspension of worldliness and riotous pleasure, preceded to the very last minute by dissipation, which is immediately resumed upon its close. It has virtually become rather a rest from physical exhaustion occasioned by excesses than a holy preparation for a more godly life.

—It is expected that at the next General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, which assembles at Atlanta, Georgia, on the first Monday of May, the question of the union of all the colored Methodist bodies will be considered. The colored Methodist churches are three in number—the African, the Zion, and the colored Methodist; the aggregate number of their members is not much short of half a million.

The Home Circle.

Ye Sabbath Bells.

Suggested by a disturbance on the Lord's day, processions, music, and an evident intention "to break down the Sabbath." When the church-bells beg n to ring, the listener almost involuntarily exclaimed, "Ring louder!"

Louder, ye Sabbath-bells!
Ring earthly cares away!
Tell yon rude crowd where riot swells,
The Lord has risen to-day!

Louder, ye iron tongues!
To slaves of sin and shame,
To those who writhe in griefs and wrongs,
A Saviour's grace proclaim.

Ring out, ye Sabbath-bells,
In warnings clear and high,
To flee from paths where vengeance dwells,
Where those who roam must die!

Seek the poor drunkard out,
Who for the poisoned bowl,
The senseless mirth, the noisy shout,
Will throw away his soul!

Ye peaceful Sabbaths past,
Our favored childhood knew,
With holy joys too dear to last,
Our spirits pine for you!

Hark to yon shriek of wrath!
The steam-king on his way
Defiles the heavens with noisome breath—
Defiles the Sabbath-day!

Ring out the song, ye bells,
To Bethlehem shepherds given,
The song of peace and joy, that tells
How man is loved in heaven.

Ring out! from north to south
Till lakes to gulf reply—
Till east and west, each sounding mouth
Joins ocean's minstrelsy.

Louder and louder yet
The hallowed anthem swells—
Till those who roam no more forget
The sweet-toned Sabbath-bells.

—Am. Messenger.

Knowing Jesus.

Our lives never will rise very high in the beauties of holiness so long as we do not discover what is our true condition, or state and standing in Christ. Our life will otherwise be spent in legal strivings for that we could never attain in ourselves, but which is already ours, though we know it not—completedness in Christ Jesus. This we have, the very "weakest saint" on earth, the moment he believes. The thief had it—that morning on his way to hell, that night with Christ in paradise. What a high and holy motive to excite to weanedness from the world, and to a heavenly walk and conversation!

So long as a believer is occupied with himself, his consecrations, vows, resolutions, experiences—so long as his thoughts are taken up by an all-absorbing self-introspection, he will never make any progress in the divine life.

If he would grow in grace he must grow in the knowledge of Christ. To obey Christ we must love him with a pure heart fervently; but to love him we must apprehend him in his loveliness, and to do this we must, with unvailed faces, behold, as in a glass, his glory, and thereby be changed from glory unto glory by the spirit of God. This can never be done by a life of self-introspection. The more we are occupied with self, the more selfish we become—just like the invalid who is always so absorbed in his own ills, ever noting the beating of his pulse and the play of his own lungs, living on teas, and sitting moodily in the corner nursing his own aches and pains, instead of going out into God's broad sunlight and drinking in the air of heaven and the beauties of nature, until the pulse of life becomes self-quickened, and lusty health fills his disturbed veins with blood full of iron.—Herald and Presbyter.

The Thing Not to Do.

"Lean not to thine own understanding." Don't think you are wise in little things. Some man of the world will say: "That is really silly; it is good for babies." Yes, it is good for babies; we want to be little babies before Him. He would take all "the pride of life" out of us. Now, the thing to do is, "in all thy ways acknowledge Him"—all thy ways. Is it hard to trust Him for that? Don't you think that when He died to lead you to glory, He will lead you every step? Then the thing is done as far as you are concerned. God will do all the rest. He will take different ways for different people; different ways, perhaps, for the same man on different days. If you begin thinking how it is to come about, you will make mistakes; you must get quite away from your own wisdom. This is not so easy; just as it is easier to distrust our own righteousness than our own strength. But He is "made unto us wisdom;" there could be nothing stronger than that.

The question in many minds is, "To what extent am I to be kept from sinning? When am I to be kept? "The only answer we can give is: "You are to expect to be kept from sinning now." God does not give a reserve stock of grace which you can look at and say, "that is mine." He just gives you minute for minute, moment by moment, what is needed. It is like this: Suppose a man says to his friend—I will give you an empty purse—and in it you shall find any money you want the very minute you want it. I shall never give you any to keep in your pocket, but you may go to your purse for anything. Would that man be a very rich man, or a very poor man? I think he would be both. If he wanted a penny to buy a newspaper, he must call on his friend, and go to his purse for it. If he wanted a shilling, he could go for that. If he wanted a hundred pounds, he could go for that. He could get anything he wanted, but there would be something he could not do—he could not put money on the table, and look at it and say, "What a rich man I am!" He would get up with an empty purse, and go to bed with an empty purse, and yet he would have all he needed. That is the way God gives us his grace, never more than we need for that very minute—always quite enough.—Monod.

—Every morning is a sort of resurrection. At night we lay us down to sleep, stripped of our garments, as our souls will be of their bodily array when we come to die; but the morning wakes us, and if it be a Sabbath morning, we do not put on our work-day clothes, but find our Sabbath dress ready at hand; even thus shall we be satisfied when we wake up in our Master's likeness, no more to put on the soiled garment of earth, but to find it transformed into a Sabbath robe, in which we shall be beautiful and fair, even as Jesus our Lord himself.—Spurgeon.

The Caesars of the New Testament.

Julius Caesar was murdered in the Senate House at Rome by Brutus, Cassius and other conspirators, B. C. 44. Brutus and Cassius were defeated and slain at Philippi, by Antony and Octavius, B C. 42. The Caesars mentioned in the New Testament are distinguished as follows:

I. OCTAVIUS, the grand-nephew of Julius Caesar, was born during the consulate of Cicero, 65 B. C. He became Emperor of Rome (27 years B. C), under the name of Augustus Caesar. He is mentioned in Luke ii: 1, as ordering a taxation, or an enrolment with a view of taxation, to be made of the Jews at Palestine, who were tributary to the Romans. He died A. D. 14.

II. TIBERIUS CAESAR, was born B. C. 42. On the death of Augustus, he succeeded him as Emperor, A. D. 14. He died A. D. 37, in the seventy-eighth year of his age, and the twenty-third of his reign. As a hypocritical tyrant he died universally detested, being suffocated with pillows by his attendants when reviving from apparent death. Tiberias Caesar is referred to in Matt. xxii: 17-21; Mark xii. 14-17, and Luke xx. 22, 25, and also in connection with the tribute money payable to the Roman government in Luke iii: 1; xxiii: 2, and John xix: 12, 15.

Caligula, born A. D. 12, who succeeded Tiberias, and who reigned from A. D. 37 to 41, is not mentioned in the New Testament.

III. CLAUDIUS (Tiberius) CAESAR followed Caligula, and began his reign as Emperor A. D. 41. He was born nine years B. C., and until proclaimed Emperor, he remained in private life, and occupied himself with literature. Among other works he wrote a Roman history in 43 volumes, embracing the period from the reign of Julius Caesar to his own time, and also his own life. He died of poison, administered by his second wife, Agrippina (mother of Nero), A. D. 54, at the age of sixty-three. He is mentioned Acts xi: 28.

IV. NERO, was the adopted son of Claudius Caesar, and succeeded him in the government A. D. 54. He was distinguished for his cruelty, his vices, and his persecution of Christians. In the gratification of an insane caprice, he ordered Rome to be burnt, A. D. 64. He committed suicide A. D. 68. Paul refers to Nero in Acts xxv. 8, 12, 21; xxvi. 32; xxvii. 24: xxviii. 19. And bad as was the tyrant, the some apostle when imprisoned at Rome, sends greeting from the saints of Caesar's household, to the saints at Philippi, showing that amid the corruptions of the court, the power of the Gospel had prevailed. Phil. iv: 22.

After the death of Nero, Galba, Otho and Vitellius ruled by force, and amid distractions for about two years. Vespasian was chosen Emperor in A. D. 70. At his death, A. D. 79, his eldest son Titus, who besieged and took Jerusalem, A. D. 70, succeeded him. At the death of Titus, A. D. 81, Domitian, his brother, became Emperor. His crimes and cruelty, led to a conspiracy against him, and he was slain A. D. 96.

Nerva, the successor of Domitian, was one of the most virtuous of the Roman Emperors. He died A. D. 98. Trajan, the adopted son of Nerva, followed him in a successful reign of nearly twenty years, dying in his sixty-fourth year.

Four only of those enumerated, are mentioned in the New Testament; viz. Augustus, Tiberius, Claudius and Nero; but as those who are here named cover the century preceding, and the century following the Savior's advent, the records may aid in a more correct apprehension of the reigns of the Roman Emperors from Julius Caesar to Trajan.—The Armory.

The Metals in Olden Times.

It has sometimes been questioned whether the Egyptians had a knowledge of steel. It seems unreasonable to deny them this knowledge. Iron was known at the earliest time of which we have any record. It is often mentioned in the Bible and in Homer. It is shown in the early paintings on the walls of the tombs at Thebes, where butchers are represented as sharpening their knives on pieces of metal colored blue which were most probably pieces of steel. Iron has been found in quantity in the ruined palaces of Assyria; and in the inscriptions of that country fetters are spoken of as having been made of iron, which is also mentioned in connection with other metals as to lead to the supposition that it was regarded as a base and common metal. Moreover, in the Great Pyramid a piece of iron was found in a place where it must have lain for 5,000 years. The tendency of iron to oxidize must render its preservation for any long period rare and exceptional. The quality of iron which is now made by the native races of Africa and India is that which is known as wrought iron; in ancient times, Dr. Percy says the iron which was made was always wrought iron. It is very nearly pure iron, and a very small addition of carbon would convert it into steel. Dr. Percy says the extraction of good malleable iron directly from the ore, "requires a degree of skill very far inferior to that which is implied in the manufacture of bronze." And there is no great secret in making steel; the natives of India now make excellent steel in the most primitive way, which they have practiced from time immemorial. The supply of iron in India as early as the fourth and fifth centuries, seems to have been unlimited. The iron pillar of Delhi is a remarkable work for such an early period. It is a single piece of wrought iron fifty feet in length, and it weighs not less than seventeen tons. How the Indians forged this large mass of iron and other heavy pieces which their distrust of the arch led them to use in the construction of roofs, we do not know. In the temples of Orissa iron was used in large masses as beams or girders in roof work in the thirteenth century. The art of extracting metals from the ore was practiced at a very early date in Great Britain. The existence long ago of tin mines in Cornwall, which are so often spoken of by classical writers, is well known to all. That iron was also extracted from the ore by the ancient Britons is most probable, and it was largely used for many purposes by them before the Roman conquest. The Romans worked out iron extensively in the Weald of Kent, as we assume from the large heaps of slag containing Roman coins which still remain there. The Romans always availed themselves of the mineral wealth of the countries which they conquered, and their mining operations were often carried out on the largest scale, as in Spain for instance, where as many as forty thousand miners were regularly employed in the mines at New Carthage. Coal, which was used for ordinary purposes in England as early as the ninth century, does not appear to have been largely used for iron smelting until the eighteenth century, though a patent was granted for smelting iron with coal in the year 1611. The use of charcoal for that purpose was not given up until the beginning of this century, since which period an enormous increase in the mining and metallurgical industries has taken place; the quantity of coal raised in the United Kingdom in 1873 having amounted to one hundred and twenty-seven tons, and the quantity of pig-iron to upwards of six and a half million tons.—Sir John Hawkshaw.

Children's Corner.

To the Little Maidens.

Little maidens, love your mothers,
And be gentle with your brothers;
Still endeavor to be good,
Never noisy, bold or rude,
But with modest, easy grace,
And a bright and pleasant face,
Let the sunshine from your heart
Joy and happiness impart.
Thus in doing good to others,—
Father, mother, sisters, brothers,
Trying constantly to please us,—
You will grow to be like Jesus,
Walking in the path he trod,
Loving and obeying God.
Thus will every little maiden
Still retain her little Eden,
As we journey here below,
Shedding joys where'er we go.

Selected.

Rules for Parents Paradise.

We came across a little article the other day consisting of a copy of rules and regulations which the writer said he found pinned upon the wall of a house where lived a large family of remarkably well-behaved children. If you think it would be hard work to keep so many of them in mind all the time, just think also, what a happy place it would make of home if you only could. Here they are:

1. Shut every door after you, and without slamming it.

2. Never shout, jump, or run in the house.

3. Never call to persons up stairs, or in the next room: if you wish to speak to them, go quietly where they are.

4. Always speak kindly and politely to servants, if you would have them do the same to you.

5. When told to do, or not to do, a thing, by either parent, never ask why you should or should not do it.

6. Tell of your own faults and misdoings, not of those of your brothers and sisters.

7. Carefully clean the mud or snow off your boots before entering the house.

8. Be prompt at every meal hour.

9. Never sit down at the table, or in the parlor, with dirty hands or tumbled hair.

10. Never interrupt any conversation, but wait patiently your turn to speak.

11. Never reserve your good manners for company, but be equally polite at home and abroad.

12. Let your first, last, and best confidant be your mother.—Advance.

—The third largest bell in use in the world was recently placed in the southern tower of the cathedral in Cologne, Germany. Three castings were made of metal obtained by melting French cannon captured during the Franco-Prussian war. Two were unsuccessful, but the third was perfect. The twenty guns used weighed 50,000 German pounds, and to these was added 80,000 lbs. of tin. The time of melting was but ten hours, and twenty-nine minutes sufficed to fill the mould. The cooling continued for four weeks. The bell is 10 ft. 8 in. high, and 11 ft. 2 in. in diameter. It total weight is over 25 tons. Of the larger bells in existence, two those of Moscow, weighing respectively 193 and 63 tons, are broken. Pekin has one bell weighing 53 tons, and Novgorod, Russia, one of 31 tons—both of which are in use.

Fun with a Spider.

Spiders in many respects are just like other animals, and can be tamed and petted and taught a great many lessons, which they will learn as readily as a dog or cat. But you must take the trouble of learning their ways, and get on the good side of them.

One day when I had been reading in a book how spiders managed to get their webs across streams and roads, and from the top of one tall tree to the top of another, I went out and caught a large garden spider, one of those blue-gray sprawling fellows, and fixed him up for my experiment.

I took a stick about eighteen inches in length and fastened a piece of iron to one end of it, so that the stick would stand upon the end of itself. Then I put the stick in the center of a tub half-ful of water, and placed the spider on the top of the stick. I wanted to see how he would get to "land," which was the edge of the tub, without any help. He ran down first one side of the stick, and then the other; each time he would stop when he touched the water, and shaking his foot like a cat does, he would run up again. At last he came to the conclusion that he was entirely surrounded by water—on an island in fact. After remaining perfectly quite a long time, during, which, I have no doubt, he was arranging his plans, he began running round the stick, and throwing out great coils of web with his hind feet. In a few minutes little fine strings of web were floating away in the slight breeze that was blowing. After a little, one of these threads touched the edge of the tub and stuck fast, as all spider webs do.

This was just what Mr. Spider was looking for, and the next minute he took hold of this web and gave it a jerk as a sailor does a rope when he wishes to see how strong it is or make it fast. Having satisfied himself that it was fast at the other end, he gathered it in till it was tight and straight, and then ran on it quickly to the shore; a rescued castaway saved by his own ingenuity.

Spiders are not fools, if they are ugly, and He who made all things has a thought and care for all. The earth is full of the knowledge of God.—Ex

The Dormouse.

All our young readers know well the common mouse, and many have doubtless seen the field mouse; but the dormouse is probably known only to a few. The shape of the head and body of this pretty little creature proves that it is some relation of the gray-coated pilferer from our larders, but its somewhat bushy tail shows that it is also akin to the nimble squirrel. Like the squirrel, the dormouse has its home in the woods and thickets; but it is so shy and timid that we are not likely to see it unless we come upon it during its long winter's sleep.

The dormouse is very small, its body being less than three inches in length, and its tail about two incher and a half. Its color is light reddish-brown on the upper parts, and nearly white on the under. So rapid is it in its movements that the eye can scarcely follow it as it runs along the lower branches of the trees, or leaps about among the grass and leaves upon the ground. It feeds upon nuts, acorns, and grain, and, like the squirrel, it often takes its food between its fore-paws and sits upright to eat it. A pretty, round nest of grass, with a lining of moss and lichens, is built by the dormouse between the forked branches of a low bush, or within a hollow tree. In this it places a quantity of food, which it busily collects during the autumn. When the cold weather comes it rolls itself into a ball, by curling its tail over its head between its ears, and falls into a deep sleep. In this state it remains through the greater part of the winter, only waking up now and then when the air is unusually warm and eating a small quantity from its store of food. Creatures which, like the dormouse, pass the winter in a state of sleep or torpor are called hibernating animals.

"All that have received the truth should spread it. Some are ready to say, Truth wants so many things done that she is an expensive friend. This is a libel. Sin is expensive, drunkenness is expensive, worldly pleasures are expensive. Truth requires from you a portion of your money, time, and energy; but she will save you much, give you much, teach you many things, and ensure you an eternity of good."

Satan knows if thou playest the truant to-day thou wilt go the more loth to school to-morrow.

—Better be upright with poverty than be wicked with plenty.

Home and Health Hints.

Household Conveniences a hundred Years Ago.

Dr. Nichols, in the Boston Journal of Commerce says: Our fathers were groping in almost utter darkness, so far as a knowledge of the sciences was concerned, and but little progress had been made in invention and the arts; scarcely one of the modern contrivances for cooking, and for warming and lighting dwellings was known. Not a pound of coal or a cubic foot of illuminating gas had been burned in the country. No iron stoves were used, and no contrivances for economizing heat were employed until Dr. Franklin invented the iron frame fire-place, which still bears his name. All the cooking and warming in town and country were done by the aid of fire kindled upon the brick hearth or in the brick oven. Pine knots or tallow candles furnished the light for the long winter evenings, and sanded floors supplied the place of rugs and carpets. The water used for household purposes was drawn from deep wells by the creaking "sweep," and it is a curious circumstance that both the well and the building meeting the necessity of a water-closet were often at long distances from the house. In a cold night in winter, to be called toward either of them was something dreadful to think of. No form of pump was used in this country, so far as we learn, until after the commencement of the present centuary. There were no friction matches in those early days, by the aid of which a fire could be speedily kindled; and if the fire "went out" on the hearth over night, and the tinder was damp so that the sparks would not "catch," the alternative remained of wading through the snow a mile or so to borrow a brand of a neighbor. Only one room in any house was warmed (unless some one of the family were ill); in all the rest the temperature was at zero during many nights in winter. The men and women of a hundred years ago undressed and retired to their beds at night in an atmosphere colder than that of our modern barns and woodsheds, and they never complained.

—Pimples on the face usually indicate some defect of nutrition or some error in food. Many persons, on the adoption of a wise and reasonable diet, become for the first time free from pimples; therefore, instead of doctoring them with medicines, you should look well to your habits of life, improve your digestion, wisely regulate the diet, and keep the skin active by proper bathing, and much life out of doors. Few people, especially women, appreciate the good effects of out-door life, unconstrained by tight dresses.

—If you would lessen the work of ironing, fold your clothes the night before, and lay them upon a table piled on one another, covered with the ironing blanket, and they will be much smoother; sprinkle them in the morning, roll them up tight until you are ready to iron them, and the work will be a pastime. Some washerwomen, after taking them from the line, throw them into the basket helter skelter, all crumbled up, wrinkled and harder to iron.

—For damp closets and cupboards which generate mildew a trayful of quicklime will be found to absorb the moisture and render the air pure, but of course it is necessary to renew the lime from time to time as it becomes fully slaked. This last remedy will be found useful in safes and strong rooms, the damp air of which acts frequently most injuriously on the valuable deeds and documents which they contain.

News of the Week.

—The town elections of Chicago last week developed the depth of rascality to which tax-eating thieves can descend. Aided by the police, who pushed bankers, lawyers, capitalists and business men aside to make way for the slum of the saloons, they took possession of the polls in the 1st ward, and then actually robbed the ballot boxes from other wards and re-filled them with bogus tickets, by which means men were elected for responsible offices who were not known to be in nomination. A great meeting of business men in Farwell Hall on Saturday set on foot measures to wipe out the miserable crowd that has fastened upon the city offices.

—Belknap's four eminent lawyers have found a flaw it is said, in Marsh's testimony, and he is now expecting to be cleared in the impeachment trial.

—Investigations into the "Safe burglary conspiracy" which attorney-general Williams dismissed from the courts, shows as bad a business as has yet been explored. The President's Secretary, Gen. Babcock, figures largely in this as he did in the whiskey frauds and Belknap's swindling.

—The bill transferring the Indian Bureau to the War from the Interior Department has been reported on favorably by the House Committee, and will probably pass the House; but a majority of the Senate Committee on Indian affairs are known to be opposed to the plan, and it will stop with them.

—A dispatch of the Russian Telegraphic Agency, reviewing the situation, represents that the northern part of Herzegovina, which had been quiet for some time, is now in full insurrection, and the whole of Bosnia is in revolt. Turkey was never so seriously threatened as by this rebellion. Should the great Powers change their attitude toward Turkey, the Porte will only have its own inactivity to blame.

—LONDON, April 10th.—The Times' Berlin dispatch says the crisis of the insurrection is evidently approaching. If Austria does not interfere the insurgents will be reinforced by Bosnian and Servian allies. If Austria does interfere, Russian sympathizers may be expected to use their influence in favor of what they consider a national cause. Austria will most probably abstain from active intervention, but will prevent the passage of supplies across her frontier.

EDUCATIONAL.

—An effort to endow the College of California will be made by the Baptists of that State, during the coming year, as a centennial gift.

—The next meeting of the Ohio State teachers will be held at Put-in Bay, June 27th, 1876, and will continue in session three days, —Kansas has expended $3,389,085 in school-houses, and has a school fund of over $1,000,000, and constantly increasing. A pretty fair showing for so young a State.

—Twenty students in the University of Wooster, Ohio, have joined the University church, and others have united with the First Presbyterian church.

—The two normal schools established in Maine about twelve years ago have proved the superiority of this system over the teachers' institutes, and the latter were abolished at the last session of the Legislature. These normal schools have furnished the State with 1,200 to 1,500 trained teachers, and a third school is now proposed in the western part of the State, the trustees of the Brighton Academy offering to give it $20,000 in property and funds for that purpose.

—In a Michigan town of about three thousand inhabitants the principal of the public school, during three years, was an infidel. The result was that of his scholars there were not three conversions during these three years, and not half a dozen of all of them became church-members. The other instance was that of a minister's son, at another place who inquired after Darwin's works, and being told that they were unprofitable books, especially to the young, and being asked how he became interested in them, he informed his father that his teacher, to whose room he had been often invited, and where he had spent many an hour, had shown them to him and had spoken highly in their favor. These facts ought to be enough to warn parents to be careful what teachers are placed for the instruction of their sons and daughters; and such facts ought to be a rebuke to such of our people as send their children to irreligious schools instead of sending them to our own church institutions.—Telescope.

Our Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Masonry.

From the "Earnest Christian" of Oct. and Nov. 1875.

There are some men who have undertaken the solemn duty of expounding the Christian religion, the basis of our republican institutions, and yet make it a merit that they know nothing about one of the chief enmities of the Christian Religion. They are peaceably disposed men, who seem to think that ignorance is bliss.

But this position is not in accord with that assumed by St. Paul, who thought it best not to be ignorant of the devices of Satan, lest Satan should get an advantage over him.—2 Cor. 2: 11. A servant cannot disregard the wiles of his employer's enemies and at the same time be faithful to his employer's interests. The Savior himself earnestly warned his followers against the leaven of the Pharisees.

A minister of Christ, therefore, who does not warn his followers against the leaven of Masonry, which instead of being a leaven of sincerity and truth, is a Pharisaical leaven, of cunning, guile, deceit and falsehood,—proves false to his trust, and is one of the many who corrupt the word of God—2 Cor. 2: 17.—by making it a mere means of getting a living. He who shuts his eyes to a reputed evil or danger, cannot possibly be a safe guide. He willingly makes of himself a blind guide that leads into the ditch.

Is it not a sense of his own personal safety rather than a sense of duty to Christ, that prompts the shepherd of Christ's flock to say, "I know nothing about Masonry?" Is it not a duty to inform his flock, and put them upon their guard against wolves in sheep's clothing? Here is a new and strange religion growing up in the land, with the pretention of being a better religing than that of Christ, which erects temples costing in some cases over a million of dollars, and yet ministers of Christ consider it a worthy trait in their character to know nothing and to say nothing about it. Young men may be drawn away to perdition by thousands,; the Church of Christ be taken possession of by violence and craft; the wine of its holy supper be drank by sots, its rite of baptism be practised in burlesque by infidels, its confirmation be parodied by "Sublime and perfect Masons" professing the faith of Jews, Mohammedans, or Pagans; its entire organism be turned into mockery and jest; and yet the sentinel on the watch tower is to give no alarm! He is to know nothing about it!

Verily, if political reform is needed among our political office holders, much more is needed a reform among our preachers of religion. They ought to know something about what they pretend to preach.

And what are we to think of pretended reformers who aim at getting up revivals, and who leave their converts in the damning delusion that they can be Masons and still become new creatures in Christ. A revival that leaves the community under the impression that Masonry is compatible with Christianity, lacks the first element of being truly religious. Mr. Moody says that "the devil never sets himself to work until he has been routed." If this is the case, then the devil never sets to work in our revivals, for he is never routed by them so long as they fail to reach the subject of Masonry. The devil must quietly laugh at a revival which is so shallow as not to touch upon that egregious, religious imposture.

The duty of Christ's ministers is to preach the truth, and the truth cannot be known by hiding the eyes to facts. The practices of Masonry are terrible facts; they are subtle, deceitful tricks, at enmity with Christ, and to shut the eyes to them is to play the ostrich that hides its eyes in the sand, rather than to play the part of a man, who has undertaken the serious duties and responsibilities of the Christian religion and republican government. To bury one's talents in ignorance, may please the Masons and other ring-men, but it cannot serve the Lord.

Pitiable, indeed, is that spirit which is so overshadowed by the gloomy dangers threatened from a secret and wicked institution, that it dares not even look to see wherein those dangers lie. Untruthful to a painful degree, is that mind which will not investigate all things, but will let the waters of truth stagnate, and, as Milton says, "sicken into a muddy pool of conformity and tradition," such as Masonry is, to infest society with its malarious influence. How unworthily servile in a minister of that Christ who died that all men might be made free, to stand so much in fear of an institution of man, and that too, in a free country, that he refrains even from looking into it and forming his own opinions! How vain to think that he can serve Christ, and yet stand in such dread of men!

There was a time,—and indeed, that time is hardly yet past,—when Masonry, in all the arrogance of power, asked its opponents with supercilious surprise, if they expected ever to be able to put a stop to an institution so "ancient and honorable;" for it preposterously assumed all the virtues of the church, and felt that the powers of hell could not prevail against it. But a change is taking place in this state of things, so that we anti-Masons may now ask, if Masons ever expect to put a stop to anti-Masonry? Not until true religion and true republicanism are both dead. Already a dividing line has been run among our ministers of religion. There is a class of preachers who are entirely opposed to Masonry, as an abominable blasphemy;

another class believe in it, as better and broader than Christianity; and still a third class, who "know nothing about it." One of these classes cannot possibly be right, if the others are; and Christian society, for the sake of its own respectibility, will have to decide between them. Society at large cannot long shut its eyes to damaging facts, as some recreant ministers do.

When society will have given in its decision on this question, as it finally must give it, there will then be found few ministers who will make it a virtue of prudence to "know nothing about Masonry." Until then, and so long as the people of the United States remain, as they now are, subordinated to the sophistries of the Masonic lodge, their republican genius, their manhood, their power and dignity, must remain subjected to shame and depreciation.

On the 17th of June of this year, a long procession wound through the streets of Boston, and went up to Bunker Hill to re dedicate a monument there. At an earlier period, on the second of the same month, another procession, more formidable than the other for discipline and show, and perhaps for numbers, wound through the streets of New York, and marched up to a corner on Sixth Avenue to dedicate another monument. The first monument was a patriotic one, commemorating the struggle of a Puritan people for freedom and equality. The latter monument was a temple, erected to Masonry—an un-American institution, invented in a London grog-shop in 1717, and claiming to be a bettter religion than that of Puritanism; which imposes assessments under duress; administers oaths, and punishes with death those who violate them; which secures neither freedom nor equality; whose officers are appointed, and whose charters are granted, no outside citizen knows how or by whom, but whose members are known to hold a large percentage of all the polit,cal offices of the country; and yet there are ministers of the gospel, who commend themselves for Christian peace and meekness by making it a point to know nothing about Masonry. This foreign religion takes root and grows among us, in overwhelmining proportions, within the period of one short generation, and yet we have ministers who "know nothing about it!" A deadly rival of the Christian religion, and an insidious foe of republican government, flourishes in our midst, and there are ministers of the gospel, and pretentious political leaders, who are as innocent as doves of any knowledge of its character.

He who knows nothing of the history and workings of organized secret associations, against the principles of which the Christian religion has held a long struggle, and in which it is at best, soiled, smirched, and defaced, can form but a faint idea of the real force and application of the New Testament, and should not at this day undertake to expound it to his fellow men. If he boasts of knowing nothing ot such associations, whose books are scattered throughout the land, he simply shows himself unfit for his profession.

Editorial by Rev. B. T. Roberts.

In answer to a corrcspondent who says ;

"I must confess that I am of the numher, that know nothing about Masonry. Will you tell me through the Earnest Christian what wrong things the Masons have done and are doing?"

The question is not so much what Masonry has done, as what does Masonry require them to do, and what is Masonry? Many men are better than the organization to which they belong, and many are worse. Institutions mould men, to a certain degrec, but they do not always control them. Christians often do things which Christianity forbids.

We never were a gambler but we know what gambling is. For the greater part of our knowledge we rely upon human testimony. We were never a Mason, but we know what Masonry is. We do not talk in the dark concerning it. From its acknowledged champions we learn:

First, that Masonry claims to be a saving religion. It is a rival to Christianity. It claims to do for its votaries all that Christianity can do for them. In proof of this statement we give a few quotations from Town's "Speculative Freemasonry"—a work endorsed by the Grand Lodge of New York.—and a standard authority among Masons

"Speculaiive Masonry, according to present acceptation, has an ultimate reference that spiritual building erected by virtue in the heart, and summarily implies the arrangement and perfection of those holy and sublime principles, by which the soul is fitted for a meet temple of God, in a world of immortality."—Page 13. What more does Christianity imply?

Again he says:

"Speculativc Masonry combines thesc great and fundamental principles which constitute the very essence of the Christian system."—Page 37. Is it not, then, a rival of Christianity!

"It is no secret that there is not a duty enjoined, nor a virtue required in the volumc of inspiration but what is found in and taught by Speculativc Freemasonry."—Page 31. Of course there is then no need of the Bible! That these claims are false as false can be, can be clearly proved. But to the devout Christian it is enough to know that Masonry makes such claims.

Second. That Masonry as a system of religion, is wholly anti-Christian. It classes the Bible with the Koran and the sacred books of the heathen and thus rejects Christ altogether. Mark! We do not say this of Masons, but of Masonry. In proof of this we give a few quotations from high Masonic authorities.

The editor of Mackey's National Frcemason, in the April number of 1872, says, "The symbolism of Masonry, which is its peculiar mode of instruction, inculcates all the duties which we owe to God, as being his children, and to men as being their brethren."

This is a plain rejection of the Bible. Do you want anything plainer? You will find it in "Digest of Masonic Law," by Chase, a Mason in high standing. He says that to require a belief in the "divine authenticity of the Bible or in a state of future rewards and punishment is a serious innovation on the very body of Masonry."—Page 266. Many similar quotations from Masonic writers of celebrity might be quoted. But these are sufficient to show that Masonry, as such, rejects the Bible as an authoritative revelation of the will of God.

It rejects Christ. It does it in its ritual. Did you ever attend a Masonic funeral? Masonic prayers are read at the grave. But there is no mention of Christ. His mediation, his atonement is studiously ignored. If a passage from the New Testament in which the name of Christ occurs is quoted, the name of Christ is carefully omitted.

"The Mystic Star," a Masonic monthly published at Chicago in 1870, said, while commending an address delivered by Grand Orator Kending, of Iowa, "We regret, however, to notice a very exceptional expression in brother Kending's address. We refer to 'earth's Creator and man's Redeemer, Jesus Christ.' This sentiment is purely sectarian, and as such much at variance with brother Kending's general good taste. It is reasonable to suppose that not a tithe of those he addressed believed in this sentiment. All Universalists, all Israelites, all Spiritualists, and many others do not believe in it at all. And were all such removed from the fraternity there would be precious few remaining." Thus you see that, according to Masonry, to acknowledge Christ as man's Redeemer is sectarian! To do it a Mason, in a Masonic gathering, is altogether out of place!

The "Grand Master" of the "Grand Lodge of the State of New York," in his annual address in 1867, said, "I feel constrained to call the attention of the Grand Lodge to the fact, that the devotions in subordinate lodges in many cases are sectarian in their character. I earnestly desire that all things, which have a tendency towards indicating that Masonry favors or encourages the practice of any distinct belief or creed should be declared to be irregular."

This is outspoken. It is authoritative. As the lawyers say, it was spoken ex cathedra—from the throne. Prayers offered in the name of Christ in the lodge viclate the fundamental principles of Masonry.

Again, Masonry in its character as a religion, has a baptismal as well as a burial service. We extract from an account given in the Washington Evening Star, the following items. "The Master then called the lodge up, descended from his throne and, after a few words addressed to the group, lighted the incense on the altar. After a chant by the choir, the Master took the children severally in his arms, dropped their left hand in a basin of perfumed water, and said, 'By this symbol I devote you to the sevice of virtue and truth. May our Father who is in heaven keep thee innocent and pure all the days of thy life.' The Master then took the vessel of perfumed oil, dipped the little finger of his right hand therein, and marked with a delta on the forehead of each child, saying, 'I set upon thy forehead the symbol of wisdom, power and love of God. May he protect and guide thee in the right course all the days of thy life.'"

Here you see is not the slightest recognition of the Saviour.

We have thus seen from Masonic authorities that Masonry as a religious system, is wholly anti-Christian.

From equally reliable sources we lean that Masonry binds its followers with the most horrible and murderous oaths. Those whom it has thus bound it calls, as if in mockery, free. For proof on this point we cannot depend upon the statement of adhering Masons. For their oaths are a part of their system that they are sworn to conceal. And though these oaths are not binding—Masons having no more right than highwaymen to administer an oath—yet as long as they consider them binding their statements cannot bc relied upon. But many have, for Christ's sake, renounced Freemasonry, and been converted to God. The character of these men is a sufficient guaranty that they tell us the truth. Such men as President Finney and Elder Bernard would not knowingly and delibcrately publish falsehoods. Men coming out of the lodge in different parts of the country, without knowing anything of each other,—without any possibility of collusion, agree in their statements about the nature of Masonic oaths. Nothing can be made clearer by human testimony than that these oaths have been truthfully revealed.

We have room only for the penalty of the oath administered to an Entered Apprentice Mason. We quote from one of the first editions of Morgan's Book. "To all of which I do most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, without the least equivocation, mental reservation, orself evasion of mind in me whatever; binding myself under no less penalty, than to have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours; so help me God, and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same."

Is not this horrible? No man has any right either to take such an oath himself or administer it to others.

These oaths are not unmeaning. President Finney, in his book on Freemasonry—a book that ought to be carefully read by evry man in the land—says, "In a sermon which lies before me, delivered by Rev. Moses Thacher, a man well known in the religious world, and who has himself taken many degrees in Masonry, he says, 'The institution is dangerous to civil and religious rights. It is stained with blood. I have reliable, historical evidence of not less than seven individuals, including Morgan, murdered under Masonic law.'"

Such in brief, is Masonry. We have no unkind feelings towards Masons. We would do them all the good in our power. But for us to keep silent respecting Masonry, and thus tacitly endorse the idea that a man can both accept Christ and deny him—that is, be a good Mason and a good Christian at the same time, would be treason to Christ. "HE THAT IS NOT WITH ME IS AGAINST ME; AND HE THAT GATHERETH NOT WITH ME SCATTERETH ABROAD."—Mat. xii. 30.

Our Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Masonry.

From the "Earnest Christian" of Oct. and Nov. 1875.

There are some men who have undertaken the solemn duty of expounding the Christian religion, the basis of our republican institutions, and yet make it a merit that they know nothing about one of the chief enmities of the Christian Religion. They are peaceably disposed men, who seem to think that ignorance is bliss.

But this position is not in accord with that assumed by St. Paul, who thought it best not to be ignorant of the devices of Satan, lest Satan should get an advantage over him.—2 Cor. 2: 11. A servant cannot disregard the wiles of his employer's enemies and at the same time be faithful to his employer's interests. The Savior himself earnestly warned his followers against the leaven of the Pharisees.

A minister of Christ, therefore, who does not warn his followers against the leaven of Masonry, which instead of being a leaven of sincerity and truth, is a Pharisaical leaven, of cunning, gulle, deceit and falsehood,—proves false to his trust, and is one of the many who corrupt the word of God—2 Cor. 2: 17.—by making it a mere means of getting a living. He who shuts his eyes to a reputed evil or danger, cannot possibly be a safe guide. He willingly makes of himself a blind guide that leads into the ditch.

Is it not a sense of his own personal safety rather than a sense of duty to Christ, that prompts the shepherd of Christ's flock to say, "I know nothing about Masonry?" Is it not a duty to inform his flock, and put them upon their guard against wolves in sheep's clothing? Here is a new and strange religion growing up in the land, with the pretention of being a better religing than that of Christ, which erects temples costing in some cases over a million of dollars, and yet ministers of Christ consider it a worthy trait in their character to know nothing and to say nothing about it. Young men may be drawn away to perditlon by thousands,; the Church of Christ be taken possession of by violence and craft; the wine of its holy supper be drank by sots, its rite of baptism be practised in burlesque by infidels, its confirmation be parodied by "Sublime and perfect Masons" professing the faith of Jews, Mohammedans, or Pagans; its entire organism be turned into mockery and jest; and yet the sentinel on the watch tower is to give no alarm! He is to know nothing about it!

Verily, if political reform is needed among our political office holders, much more is needed a reform among our preachers of religion. They ought to know something about what they pretend to preach.

And what are we to think of pretended reformers who aim at getting up revivals, and who leave their converts in the damning delusion that they can be Masons and still become new creatures in Christ. A revival that leaves the community under the impression that Masonry is compatible with Christianity, lacks the first element of being truly religious. Mr. Moody says that "the devil never sets himself to work until he has been routed." If this is the case, then the devil never sets to work in our revivals, for he is never routed by them so long as they fail to reach the subject of Masonry. The devil must quietly laugh at a revival which is so shallow as not to touch upon that egregious, religious imposture.

The duty of Christ's ministers is to preach the truth, and the truth cannot be known by hiding the eyes to facts. The practices of Masonry are terrible facts; they are subtle, deceitful tricks, at enmity with Christ, and to shut the eyes to them is to play the ostrich that hides its eyes in the sand, rather than to play the part of a man, who has undertaken the serious duties and responsibilities of the Christian religion and republican government. To bury one's talents in ignorance, may please the Masons and other ring-men, but it cannot serve the Lord.

Pitiable, indeed, is that spirit which is so overshadowed by the gloomy dangers threatened from a secret and wicked institution, that it dares not even look to see wherein those dangers lie. Untruthful to a painful degree, is that mind which will not investigate all things, but will let the waters of truth stagnate, and, as Milton says, "sicken into a muddy pool of conformity and tradition," such as Masonry is, to infest society with its malarious influence. How unworthily servile in a minister of that Christ who died that all men might be made free, to stand so much in fear of an institution of man, and that too, in a free country, that he refrains even from looking into it and forming his own opinions! How vain to think that he can serve Christ, and yet stand in such dread of men!

There was a time,—and indeed, that time is hardly yet past,—when Masonry, in all the arrogance of power, asked its opponents with supercilious surprise, if they expected ever to be able to put a stop to an institution so "ancient and honorable;" for it preposterously assumed all the virtues of the church, and felt that the powers of hell could not prevail against it. But a change is taking place in this state of things, so that we anti-Masons may now ask, if Masons ever expect to put a stop to anti-Masonry? Not until true religion and true republicanism are both dead. Already a dividing line has been run among our ministers of religion. There is a class of preachers who are entirely opposed to Masonry, as an abominable blasphemy;

another class believe in it, as better and broader than Christianity; and still a third class, who "know nothing about it." One of these classes cannot possibly be right, if the others are; and Christian society, for the sake of its own respectibility, will have to decide between them. Society at large cannot long shut its eyes to damaging facts, as some recreant ministers do.

When society will have given in its decision on this question, as it finally must give it, there will then be found few ministers who will make it a virtue of prudence to "know nothing about Masonry." Until then, and so long as the people of the United States remain, as they now are, subordinated to the sophistries of the Masonic lodge, their republican genius, their manhood, their power and dignity, must remain subjected to shame and depreciation.

On the 17th of June of this year, a long procession wound through the streets of Boston, and went up to Bunker Hill to re dedicate a monument there. At an earlier period, on the second of the same month, another procession, more formidable than the other for discipline and show, and perhaps for numbers, wound through the streets of New York, and marched up to a corner on Sixth Avenue to dedicate another monument. The first monument was a patriotic one, commemorating the struggle of a Puritan people for freedom and equality. The latter monument was a temple, erected to Masonry—an un-American institution, invented in a London grog-shop in 1717, and claiming to be a bettter religion than that of Puritanism; which imposes assessments under duress; administers oaths, and punishes with death those who violate them; which secures neither freedom nor equality; whose officers are appointed, and whose charters are granted, no outside citizen knows how or by whom, but whose members are known to hold a large percentage of all the polit,cal offices of the country; and yet there are ministers of the gospel, who commend themselves for Christian peace and meekness by making it a point to know nothing about Masonry. This foreign religion takes root and grows among us, in overwhelmining proportions, within the period of one short generation, and yet we have ministers who "know nothing about it!" A deadly rival of the Christian religion, and an insidious foe of republican government, flourishes in our midst, and there are ministers of the gospel, and pretentious political leaders, who are as innocent as doves of any knowledge of its character.

He who knows nothing of the history and workings of organized secret associations, against the principles of which the Christian religion has held a long struggle, and in which it is at best, soiled, smirched, and defaced, can form but a faint idea of the real force and application of the New Testament, and should not at this day undertake to expound it to his fellow men. If he boasts of knowing nothing of such associations, whose books are scattered throughout the land, he simply shows himself unfit for his profession.

Editorial by Rev. B. T. Roberts.

In answer to a correspondent who says ;

"I must confess that I am of the number that know nothing about Masonry. Will you tell me through the Earnest Christian what wrong things the Masons have done and are doing?"

The question is not so much what Masonry has done, as what does Masonry require them to do, and what is Masonry? Many men are better than the organization to which they belong, and many are worse. Institutions mould men, to a certain degree, but they do not always control them. Christians often do things which Christianity forbids.

We never were a gambler but we know what gambling is. For the greater part of our knowledge we rely upon human testimony. We were never a Mason, but we know what Masonry is. We do not talk in the dark concerning it. From its acknowledged champions we learn:

First, that Masonry claims to be a saving religion. It is a rival to Christianity. It claims to do for its votaries all that Christianity can do for them. In proof of this statement we give a few quotations from Town's "Speculative Freemasonry"—a work endorsed by the Grand Lodge of New York.—and a standard authority among Masons

"Speculaiive Masonry, according to present acceptation, has an ultimate reference that spiritual building erected by virtue in the heart, and summarily implies the arrangement and perfection of those holy and sublime principles, by which the soul is fitted for a meet temple of God, in a world of immortality."—Page 13. What more does Christianity imply?

Again he says:

"Speculative Masonry combines those great and fundamental principles which constitute the very essence of the Christian system."—Page 37. Is it not, then, a rival of Christianity!

"It is no secret that there is not a duty enjoined, nor a virtue required in the volume of inspiration but what is found in and taught by Speculative Freemasonry."—Page 31. Of course there is then no need of the Bible! That these claims are false as false can be, can be clearly proved. But to the devout Christian it is enough to know that Masonry makes such claims.

Second. That Masonry as a system of religion, is wholly anti-Christian. It classes the Bible with the Koran and the sacred books of the heathen and thus rejects Christ altogether. Mark! We do not say this of Masons, but of Masonry. In proof of this we give a few quotations from high Masonic authorities.

The editor of Mackey's National Freemason, in the April number of 1872, says, "The symbolism of Masonry, which is its peculiar mode of instruction, inculcates all the dutics which we owe to God, as being his children, and to men as being their brethren."

This is a plain rejection of the Bible. Do you want anything plainer? You will find it in "Digest of Masonic Law," by Chase, a Mason in high standing. He says that to require a belief in the "divine authenticity of the Bible or in a state of future rewards and punishment is a serious innovation on the very body of Masonry."—Page 266. Many similar quotations from Masonic writers of celebrity might be quoted. But these are sufficient to show that Masonry, as such, rejects the Bible as an authoritative revelation of the will of God.

It rejects Christ. It does it in its ritual. Did you ever attend a Masonic funeral? Masonic prayers are read at the grave. But there is no mention of Christ. His mediation, his atonement is studiously ignored. If a passage from the New Testament in which the name of Christ occurs is quoted, the name of Christ is carefully omitted.

"The Mystic Star," a Masonic monthly published at Chicago in 1870, said, while commending an address delivered by Grand Orator Kending, of Iowa, "We regret, however, to notice a very exceptional expression in brother Kending's address. We refer to 'earth's Creator and man's Redeemer, Jesus Christ.' This sentiment is purely sectarian, and as such much at variance with brother Kending's general good taste. It is reasonable to suppose that not a tithe of those he addressed believed in this sentiment. All Universalists, all Israelites, all Spiritualists, and many others do not believe in it at all. And were all such removed from the fraternity there would be precious few remaining." Thus you see that, according to Masonry, to acknowledge Christ as man's Redeemer is sectarian! To do it a Mason, in a Masonic gathering, is altogether out of place!

The "Grand Master" of the "Grand Lodge of the State of New York," in his annual address in 1867, said, "I feel constrained to call the attention of the Grand Lodge to the fact, that the devotions in subordinate lodges in many cases are sectarian in their character. I earnestly desire that all things, which have a tendency towards indicating that Masonry favors or encourages the practice of any distinct belief or creed should be declared to be irregular."

This is outspoken. It is authoritative. As the lawyers say, it was spoken ex cathedra—from the throne. Prayers offered in the name of Christ in the lodge violate the fundamental principles of Masonry.

Again, Masonry in its character as a religion, has a baptismal as well as a burial service. We extract from an account given in the Washington Evening Star, the following items. "The Master then called the lodge up, descended from his throne and, after a few words addressed to the group, lighted the incense on the altar. After a chant by the choir, the Master took the children severally in his arms, dropped their left hand in a basin of perfumed water, and said, 'By this symbol I devote you to the sevice of virtue and truth. May our Father who is in heaven keep thee innocent and pure all the days of thy life.' The Master then took the vessel of perfumed oil, dipped the little finger of his right hand therein, and marked with a delta on the forehead of each child, saying, 'I set upon thy forehead the symbol of wisdom, power and love of God. May he protect and guide thee in the right course all the days of thy life.'"

Here you see is not the slightest recognition of the Saviour.

We have thus seen from Masonic authorities that Masonry as a religious system, is wholly anti-Christian.

From equally reliable sources we lean that Masonry binds its followers with the most horrible and murderous oaths. Those whom it has thus bound it calls, as if in mockery, free. For proof on this point we cannot depend upon the statement of adhering Masons. For their oaths are a part of their system that they are sworn to conceal. And though these oaths are not binding—Masons having no more right than highwaymen to administer an oath—yet as long as they consider them binding their statements cannot be relied upon. But many have, for Christ's sake, renounced Freemasonry, and been converted to God. The character of these men is a sufficient guaranty that they tell us the truth. Such men as President Finney and Elder Bernard would not knowingly and delibcrately publish falsehoods. Men coming out of the lodge in different parts of the country, without knowing anything of each other,—without any possibility of collusion, agree in their statements about the nature of Masonic oaths. Nothing can be made clearer by human testimony than that these oaths have been truthfully revealed.

We have room only for the penalty of the oath administered to an Entered Apprentice Mason. We quote from one of the first editions of Morgan's Book. "To all of which I do most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, without the least equivocation, mental reservation, orself evasion of mind in me whatever; binding myself under no less penalty, than to have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours; so help me God, and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same."

Is not this horrible? No man has any right either to take such an oath himself or administer it to others.

These oaths are not unmeaning. President Finney, in his book on Freemasonry—a book that ought to be carefully read by evry man in the land—says, "In a sermon which lies before me, delivered by Rev. Moses Thatcher, a man well known in the religious world, and who has himself taken many degrees in Masonry, he says, 'The institution is dangerous to civil and religious rights. It is stained with blood. I have reliable, historical evidence of not less than seven individuals, including Morgan, murdered under Masonic law.'"

Such in brief, is Masonry. We have no unkind feelings towards Masons. We would do them all the good in our power. But for us to keep silent respecting Masonry, and thus tacitly endorse the idea that a man can both accept Christ and deny him—that is, be a good Mason and a good Christian at the same time, would be treason to Christ. "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."—Mat. xii. 30.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts.

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

Good News for Hard Times.

If you want Anti-masonic books and have little money, for one new subscriber for the Cynosure for six months at $1.10, we will send Morgan's Exposé of Freemasonry, or Odd-fellowship Illustrated, or the Exposition of the Grange, and the Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, or the History of Morgan's Abduction, or any other of our publications up to twenty-five cents' worth.

For one subscriber for a year and $2.20 we will send Ronayne's Hand Book of Masonry, or The Broken Seal, Phelps', Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern, or John Quincy Adams' Letters on Masonry. That is, fifty cents worth of our publications. In other words: we allow twenty-five per cent. in books of our own publication on all Cynosure subscriptions.

We are having pleasant weather now and suppose that many of our readers are very busy, yet we hope they will not forget to do all they can to extend the circulation of the Cynosure

Have you that pleasure?

EDITOR CYNOSURE; DEAR SIR:—I draw books occasionally from the Public Library. In the finding lists (Secret Societies) No. 788 L. Carlyles Freemasonry, is found in print, but I can assure you, sir, it is another thing when you desire to draw said book, for it is never in. If it were at the bindery, surely the attendants should know. But I suppose there is a little lodge work behind it. Another matter. In the list of papers at the Public Library, I do not see the name of the Cynosure. How is this, Mr. Editor, I think it should be there. Now, if there is no other cause than the want of a year's subscription to keep it out of said place, it shall not fail for the lack of that, for I will send you the same myself, for that purpose. Please let me hear from you as soon as possible through the Cynosure.

Wishing you God-speed, I remain yours truly, B. MONROE.

ANSWER:

We send the Christian Cynosure to several Chicago Reading Rooms; but it has not been solicited for the Public Library. If you would like to donate the paper to that library you might help the paper and benefit citizens of Chicago by so doing.

Congratulatory.

MANSFIELD, O., Apr. 15, 1876.

* * In reading your card of the 7th instant, that you were in possession of the house that Bro. Carpenter put us in the way of getting, I have no language to express the joy that passed through my old frame to find that God was blessing our efforts. I had to stop and thank God for his tokens of kindness to us. Oh! let us work and pray for success. JOHN FINNEY.

LOCKPORT, Ill., Apr. 15, 1876.

I most highly congratulate you and all our friends on the success of our Christian Association in raising the necessary funds to secure the munificent Carpenter donation; and I now want to see the machinery of the Publishing House in full and perfect operation, and our thousand voluntary colporters engaged in selling the books and distributing the tracts of the society to the masses of mankind throughout the land, till the church and state, Congress and the legislatures, the courts, the jury and the ballot-box, religion, business and politics shall all be free from the blighting and demoralizing scourge of oath-bound secret conspiracies. Faithfully and fraternally yours,

ISAAC PRESTON.

Topics of the Time.

Thursday evening of last week was a memorable one in the services of the Hippodrome, New York. Not only was there the vast crowd overflowing the building, but Mr. Moody's discourse on the "I wills" of our Lord was with more than usual unction, and attended with more manifest and blessed results than perhaps any previous meeting in New York. At its close Mr. Moody asked, says the report, "all who were willing to give up their own wills and at once trust in Christ for salvation, to rise. About two thousand rose, at least one thousand of whom were in the ticketed seats. A further call for all who wished to become Christians and who wished the prayers of God's people brought fully two thousand more to their feet, the total number standing including nearly all of those in the reserved space and half of the entire congregation. It need scarcely be added that the inquiry-rooms were thronged." This series of meetings closed last evening, the 19th, and Mr. Moody is expected to go immediately to Florida, where his wife is already gone with a sick son.

Chicago aims at equal celebrity in great fires and hot elections. The great meeting in Farwell Hall against the Hesing mob last fall has been suplimented by another lately in the same place against the defrauding tax officers. The latter was full of deep indignation and seemed only to need a leader to start out with ropes for hanging. In the election which followed the ballot-boxes were robbed, and the yet more enraged citizens met, two score thousand, in the vast Exposition building. They put their resolutions into the hands of committees for execution, and have the satisfaction of knowing that their efforts have been successful in ejecting in a quiet and lawful manner the doggery-keepers and thieves who lately declared themselves elected. Such work is needed in the whole municipal government from the Mayor down, for Chicago has felt to the full the proverb, "When the wicked bear rule the people mourn."

"His money couldn't save him," was the remark heard on the news of the death of A. T. Stewart last week. At the head of American merchants, his success in building up an enormous ausiness had given him a world-wide fame, and vast wealth on which popular report had placed its usual fictitious value. His twenty-five or fifty millions are left to a childless widow, nor does it appear that many "good works" will "follow him." Two enterprises of a benevolent character and on a munficent scale were partially completed, a Working Woman's Hotel and a village for working men and their families. He also remembered in a creditable manner servants and clerks who had served faithfully for years. But he seems to have made nearly an utter failure of attaining that supreme satisfaction of personally dispensing the vast wealth in the extension of his kingdom of Christ.

Centennial Hymn of Peace, 1876.

Angel of Peace, thou hast wandered too long!
Spread thy white wings to the sunshine of love!
Come while our voices are blended in song,
Fly to our ark like the storm-beaten dove!

Fly to our ark on the wings of a dove,
Speed o'er the far-sounding billows of song,
Crowned with thine olive-leaf garland of love,
Angel of Peace, thou hast waited too long!

Brothers, we meet on this altar of thine,
Mingling the gifts we have gathered for thee,
Sweet with the odors of myrtle and pine,
Sweeter the incense we offer to thee,
Brothers, once more round this altar of thine!

Angels of Bethlehem, answer the strain!
Hark! a new birth-song is filling the sky!
Loud as the storm-wind that tumbles the main
Bid the full breath of the organ reply.

Let the loud tempest of voices reply,
Roll its long surge like the earth-shaking main!
Swell the vast song till it mounts to the sky!
Angels of Bethlehem, echo the strain!

Anti-masonry in Eastern New York Forty-five Years ago.

BY REV. STEPHEN WRIGHT.

While western New York rocked and reeled with the "excitement" consequent upon the abduction of Capt. Wm. Morgan from 1826 to 1830, the wave rode high in the eastern part of the State also, and swept away the levees of sand erected by the Masonic order to withstand its force. Both church and state shared in the sweep of this tremendous wave, and society felt its power for years in all the region.

As early as 1830 local papers took ground for this reform, or new ones were established to promote the fullest discussion of the character and claims of "speculative Freemasonry," as it was then called, so that almost every county in the State had an Anti-masonic press and paper of its own. Freedom of thought and of speech prevailed on this subject, and the people everywhere would read and discuss, and the supply became equal to the demand for an Anti-masonic literature, which prevailed extensively in all the land.

When the Daily Evening Journal at Albany was established, as the advocate of this great reform, in its first issue, dated March 22d, 1830, it rehearsed the names of no less than seventy papers which were committed to this reform in ten States of the Union, from New Hampshire to Alabama, and of this number, no less than thirty were in the State of New York, including the Journal itself. One of these, the Anti-masonic Review was in New York city, and two in Albany, The National Observer, edited by that old war-horse, Solomon Southwick, and the Evening Journal, with young Thurlow Weed as its editor, encouraged by the endorsement of thirty members of the Legislature of the State, that winter, whose names are given in your issue of the 14th of last October.

Anti-masonry had then become a power in politics, because in the trials in western N. Y. to convict the abductors of Morgan, it had been found that the system of secretism with its oaths and grips and signs could defy the courts of law and prevent witnesses, and even juries, from answering the proper ends of their convocation in the halls of justice; and that a large majority of the more important offices were held by Masons, who scrupled not to screen their guilty brotherhood in their time of trial. Hence the war with this giant foe to good order and impartial justice had been carried into politics to secure a magistracy and such an administration of law as would protect the innocent and punish the guilty.

According to the reports of the April town meetings in the Albany Evening Journal of that spring of 1830, many towns were carried by the Anti-masons, of which I may give the following specimens: "In Nassau, Rensselaer county, and New Labanon, Columbia county, the entire Anti-masonic tickets were elected." "In Barre 394 majority for the Anti-masonic supervisor. The last fall, only 292, etc." And the Orleans Telegraph is quoted as saying: "At the town meeting here yesterday, (at Albion probably) the regular Anti-masonic ticket succeeded by an overwhelming majority. Our tickets have also succeeded by large majorities in Gaines and Clarendon, which are the towns we have heard from." (Evening Journal of April 12th and 13th.) These are examples of the political enthusiasm of that period. Wm. H. Seward was soon after sent to the New York Senate as an Anti-mason, and others of similar spirit, in various parts of the Empire State were elected by the people to honored and responsible positions, and a very great change was wrought in the political world in a few years, so that we fain hoped the monster foe had been conquered in the land.

But while the citizens of the State were thus combating the enemy with the ballot, the constituency of many churches of various denominations were bringing to bear their testimonies through the pulpit, enlightening the mind and quickening the consciences of God's people, and in the exercise of a straightforward Gospel discipline against this moral evil, and the bane of the churches of Christ; and this, too, very extensively throughout the State and the whole land.

But I have wandered too long from my proper theme, as I intended to speak chiefly of the religious aspect of the reform in eastern New York. I have not the data at hand to certify the action of the various denominations in that section, but I know from my own recollections of the period referred to, that a wide-spread movement prevailed in various churches against this pretentious and guilty order. The Scotch Presbyterians of Washington county, both of the Burgher and anti-Burgher name, as then called, gave their testimony decidedly as nearly as I remember, and disfellowshiped their members who had united with the lodge, and required a renunciation of its obligations from all such. And to this day there must be a strong sentiment in that county among these worthy Christians, adverse to the lodge power, which only needs to be developed by reading the Cynosure, and other publications on the subject, to make itself felt with power in that section. But my connection was with the regular Baptists, in 1831, and I propose, in another article to consider their action in eastern New York.

CHESHIRE, Mass.

The Quarrel of Catholicism with the Lodge.

The Freemasons have just appeared in a new role, as guardians of society against the instrusion of mischievous members. A letter from an American resident of Costa Rica, states that in July a number of Jesuits who had been expelled from Guatemala arrived in Costa Rica, but were ordered when within ten miles of the capital to stop. Congress met the same day, and two thousand Masons appeared in the hall of Congress in a body and petitioned for the expulsion of the Jesuits, on the ground that they were "mischievous members of society." The President who is a Mason and several prominent members, spoke against the Jesuits, and the result was that the Congress voted $1,500 for their immediate wants and ordered them to leave the country.

Many legislatures have done wisely in expelling the Jesuits, but that it should be done at the demand of the Freemasons will strike many minds as singular. We had not observed, heretofore that, as to their other functions, they had added that of general censorship of the "members of society" with a view to secure the exclusion of those who, in their judgment, are "mischievous." Besides it is not likely that any intelligent and candid Mason, will deny that openly profane men, Sabbath-breakers, or drunkards, may be and are received and continued in good standing in Masonic lodges. Here at least, the Masonic order does not, as an ordre, join in the struggle with vice, nor have we ever seen them moving against even the worst of men as "mischievous members of society." If asked to do so, they would doubtless, and properly, reply that such efforts did not lie within the design of the society.

Moreover, nothing in Masonic law or usage would forbid the initiation of a papist or a Jesuit, if he were to apply for admission to the lodge. The whole quarrel of Masons with the Roman Catholic church is because the church will not tolerate Masonry, and excommunicates her members for adhering to it. Per contra, the quarrel of popery with the lodge is not because she condemns its principles but because she cannot control it. It is a pretty quarrel, with neither side of which have we any sympathy; but we must be allowed to say that it stirs our blood a little to find that whoever condemns Masonry becomes in the estimation of the order a "mischievous member of society.—Christian Statesman.

Outside the Lodge for Me.

BY GEORGE F. MORRIS.

To the recently inaugurated farmer swindle, "the grange," I regret to say I became a captive.

Shrewd, designing men, its "framers," have so cunningly spun the web, that to the unwary, well-designing farmer, it seems proper, captivating, and perfectly harmless, as you are going in.

I always was convinced, since I had a mind capable of reason, that "secretism" was not needed in laudable, legitimate pursuits of life, and now I am doubly convinced of it. When a man sees his good religious neighbors, those to whom he has been looking up to in life, embracing a thing, it becomes to be enchanting to him, and unless he is fixed and set for himself he is almost sure to be taken by the charm. Thus the grange revelation acted upon me, until I was led into the trap and was becoming entwined somewhat with its "silken thread," when a deep, gentle voice, or whisper of lovely warning broke in upon my soul about thus:—Thy God or the Grange. Immediately the spell was broken, and I was permitted to see where I was; that I was in the wrong place.

But I would try to stifle this by reasoning that I was in the midst of brethren and friends, those much better than myself, most of whom seemed to be enjoying it, and that I was out of place was absurd and simple. "All great things are simple things," set this reasoning again at rest, and then the intrusion of the same little voice, confirmed me that I must quit and get out, not by suspension for non-payment of dues, thus quietly smothering honest sentiment to death, but by committing myself, and by giving my reasons fully and clearly to the members of the lodge, which thing I was blessed and emboldened fully to consummate.

It is clear that the lodge is founded, not upon a benevolent but a strictly selfish basis. Of course the grange is a very mild form of "secrecy," but the history of it will show you that Masons and other secret-order men were its chief framers, compounded of "splinters from the shin bones" of other secret societies, and consequently partakes largely of the same subtle nature, though of course very much changed and sweetened up.

I am convinced that "lodgism" is inimical to good government; that if it ever was a necessity, the day has past. If some of us feel imposed upon by corrupt systems, let us not play "snake in the grass" in order to get redress, but fight for it openly. All reforms of importance come only by virtue of open action. If you hide in order to bring about an open good, on the principle that "no fountain rises higher than its source," the good produced must be like its producer—a sneaking, secret, selfish thing. I know of many fine people who went into the grange, having honest sentiments against secrecy. Having taken this mild form they feel their mouths are shut. So long as they stay in it they must see, that they tacitly agree and sympathize with, and are dumbfounded on the whole system of lodgism.

I have heard in the lodge the earnest, heartfelt sigh to be "outside again,' and words despairing of forgiveness for certain inside performances; yet such sighs and spiritual impressions were repressed, or still haunt, as such an one still hangs on. An extensive, shrewd, though senseless and unmeaning ritualism that amounts to nothing good is the great charm and blind of the grange, and from your expositions of other orders which I have reason to hink true, it must be the same with them.. A bold, open renouncing of lodgeism, as unto God first, and as unto reason next, despite what others may think or say. I judge to be wisdom with those who feel its trammels. Men of superior judgment to yours may be in, side by side with you, loudly supporting and preaching the good of the lodge, yet, even in such circumstances as these it would be well to recollect that we are on our own footing under the eye of God, and will be judged on it separate and apart; and should we feel it proper to "come out from among them," let us not "confer with flesh and blood," but uncompromisingly do it. Principle, reason, and sense of economy led me out, and I will stay out.

Gilt.

I am opposed to secret societies, that is, in my principles. My practice has been mightily against them, I believe; but I intend to be wise, and not be such a fanatic that secretists will mock me. I intend to be as harmless, and as powerless too, as a dove. My principles, from my practice, have been questioned; but people will talk. True, sometimes where there is smoke there is fire; but the fire in me against secret societies is not the smoking sort, though of course it is not "fox-fire."

Now I am wholly opposed to secret societies, in spirit, soul, and body; but it would be folly to suppose that I am always talking against them, for I never say anything against them,—that is, vehemently,—though I am wholly opposed, tongue, emotions, and all.

The good book is against secretism, and I believe in the Bible theoretically and practically, too, so far as it agrees with common sense, according to my measure. The voice of the people (especially the rich) is the voice of God; and plenty of people say that secret societies are right; and have I any right to contradict the people? And, too, big preachers say they are right; therefore they are not bad, though the Bible does condemn them. Now when I find a Bible principle opposed to sentiment in the book of public opinion, as the Bible has waxed old, I cut the garment over according to the new pattern. Now my principles are good; why, then, are my practices derided?

I believe in a vast deal of moderation; yet by no means would I have men entirely silent on secret societies, but just meek and quiet enough not to hurt them. That is the glorious way in which slavery was crushed. Do not ride hobbies. It is like bringing the rays of the sun to a focus. It will burn; and we should not burn secret societies, but thaw them out with cold milk and water. Freeze them to death—that is it. They will first sleep, then die! Luther could have had better success had he let the Romish church alone.

In my gentle sort of opposition, this grinds me: I must more strenuously oppose anti-secret workers and denominations—my own, too,—than they oppose the lodge. This is my practice, not my principles; for I have said ever so many times that my principles are all opposed to secretism, and therefore they are.

I am opposed to secret societies, but that is not saying that I am opposed to all. Little secret societies are not of age yet, and some say they have no poisonous fangs. Big secret societies ought to be opposed powerfully, but I scarcely know why; not because of secretism, nor the character of their penalties, nor their needlessness, nor of anything else in particular that I know of, yet I am bitterly opposed to them! Big secretism is an evil, but its devotees should not be refused churchmembership, for their professions are good. Many polygamists, Universalists, Unitarians, and Antinomians profess good, and should be received. Dare I refuse "God-speed" to those who, with great, swelling words profess good? The devil has transformed himself into an angel of light, and we should therefore receive him. He is glib; give him the right hand of fellowship. What is the use of being cramped in creed?

I am loyal. Look at my record for proof. I knew a young man who intended joining an overgrown secret society, but I gently persuaded him to join two little secret societies instead. Now you see my policy is advantageous. It helps a man to take the same dose with two little spoons, which will not hurt half so bad. And, too, when there were no secretists near, and the sentiment was against secret societies, I have ventured to speak—some say ambiguously—against them. Indeed, in such circumstances

I have often seriously advised old, gray-haired men and women not to join them. Is not this enough? And yet some persist in saying that I am doing more for secretism than those openly favoring it; that I am on the fence, double-faced, etc. "Give me liberty, or give me death."—Janus in the Telescope.

The Work of the Ministry.

BY MRS. J. E. HAYDEN.

The work of the ministry is compared to the raising of grain. First, there is the plowing of human hearts to be done. God says in Jer. iv. 7, "Break up your fallow ground and sow not among thorns." Again it is written in 1 Cor. i. 10. "He that ploweth should plow in hope." In order to till the soil in all parts of the world, the farmer uses two kinds of plows; the breaking plow, and the common or lighter plow. Just so the ministry uses two kinds of Gospel plows. The doctrine of everlasting damnation, is the old fashioned Gospel breaking-plow. With it the hearts of hardened sinners may be crushed and broken in pieces. Jesus says in Matt. xxv. 46, "And these shall go away into everlasting (eternal in the original) punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." When men fail to preach the terrors of the law, is it any wonder that they sow among thorns? The love and mercy of God are the lighter plow of the Gospel. Jude xxii. 23, "And of some have compassion making a difference; and others save with fear pulling them out of the fire."

The second work of the ministry is to sow the good seed of truth. The Lord says in Prov. xi. 18, "To him that soweth righteousness shall be a sure reward." Again in Eccl. xi. 6, he gives the command, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand."

The third division of our work is reaping. It is written in Ps. xxvi. 6, "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

Our fourth and last work is spoken of by St. Paul, in addressing the elders at Ephesus: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost made you overseers, to feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." Acts xx. 28.

Sometimes we fail to understand the plan and order of the work that we are engaged in, and we become discouraged and disheartened, and the work is impeded thereby. When Joshua was about to lead the people over Jordan, God said to him three times: "Be strong and of good courage." Our Heavenly Father can do little with a discouraged ministry. On this point, I would like to tell an item of my own experience. Some time ago I was sent for to assist Rev. H. T. Besse in a protracted meeting. While on my way the Lord blessed me beyond measure. The great waves of the power and glory of God dashed over my soul. In spirit I was lifted almost to the third heaven. I took this wondrous manifestation of the Divine presence as an indication that we were going to have a very great revival. We labored with all the power that God gave us. The result was only seven came forward. As I left for home none but God knew my depressed state of heart and mind. I took all the blame of the seeming failure to myself, and I felt completely discouraged. With such a settled sadness resting on my soul, it seemed that I could never fill my next regular appointment in the village of De Kalb. However, I went to Jesus for a text and he gave me this: John iv. 37, 38. "And herein is that saying true, One soweth and another reapeth. I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor; other men labored and ye are entered into their labors." I saw at a glance that the text was designed for my special benefit. The Lord showed me that some ministers were sowers, other were reapers, and still others were shepherds, the while others were appointed to do some of all kinds of work. He showed me that he had given me a handful of the good seed of truth; that I must sow them broadcast in the hearts of sinners and leave the result with him. When he saw fit to hand me the sickle I could reap, but at no other time. We shall always do our appointed work, when we get our messages directly from the court of heaven.

Brother, sister, have you often felt discouraged because many souls were not gathered into the garner of the Lord? Remember the time of plowing, sowing, watering the seeds with our tears, and waiting for them to take root in human hearts is long, while the reaping time is very brief and the work done rapidly. Two things we should know: that we are sent of God, and that we are doing all we can to advance his cause. Then we should rest in Jesus and be happy in our work.

I have known great revivalists to utterly fail in some places simply because there was no reaping to be done. They had followed the wishes of the people instead of the voice of the Spirit. God tells us in his word we should "In honor prefer one another." But see how both saint and sinner join in lauding that reaper (revivalist is a modern word not found in the Bible) while the sowers and the shepherds are all cast into the shade. Now the Lord does not so regard our work. He says in John iv. 36, "And he that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that reapeth and he that soweth may rejoice together." If any one deserves to be honored by the church it is that man who plows and sows in April's cold blast, and is never permitted in this world to know how much he has accomplished. Mr. Moody is a reaper. Mrs. Van Cott is a reaper. Mr. and Mrs. D. T. Shepardson have been reaping mostly for a number of years.

Some say if a church exercises faith we shall have a revival. A revival will occur when a field is ready for reaping. If my faith could save sinners independent of their own wills, I would believe all the world into the kingdom of our Lord in a very short time. To say that the lack of a revival is caused by a lack of faith in God's little ones, is to discourage and dishearten many of the Lord's most faithful children. The prophet Amos tells us of a time when the work of the Lord will be done up with great rapidity. Amos ix. 13. "Behold the days come saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed, and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all the hill shall melt." May the Lord hasten the day.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker, of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick, of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

Purification of Parties.

When I allude to this growing corruption of parties in our Republic, I do not indulge any purpose to inveigh against them as the cause of all this degeneracy. In every country where free institutions are established, the will of the majority governs, differences of opinion on important questions are inevitable among honest and independent thinkers. Action can only be directed by the will of the greater number, who unite in sentiment so far as to effect that result. The selection of agents follows the same rule. Thus it is plain that the necessity of association, to arrive at practical results, is imperative. Hence it follows that so long as opinions conflict with each other, the right of control must be invested in one of two aggregations of individual voices, and, finally, in that one concentrating the greatest number. I likewise concur in the proposition that it is not only a right but also a duty of every citizen to attach himself to one of these associations to the extent that he may deem his own views of the general good promoted thereby. Purely solitary voting is in its utility much like the act of a soldier who should fire his piece to bring down the sun.

All this reasoning, however, must be predicated on the fact that the opposing forces are free from all but legitimate the influences, contributing to attainment of honest ends. The very instant evidence is given justifying a conviction of the supremacy of corrupt counsels, guided by venal agents, for selfish aims, then the duty to secede from all participation in such results becomes absolute and paramount. If ever the time should arrive when the vermin swarming in official hot-beds become sufficiently numerous to spread completely over the net-work of a party organization then will a contingency arise demanding from those determened to maintain the political purity of the country, the organization of a distinctive policy, and the advance of a different order of men to guide it.

And here I come to the pinch of the question. I look around me to discover where a class of men to lead in such occasions is to come from. They must be persons more or less thoroughly trained for the arduous responsibility of the position. Standing on the solid foundation of philosophy in its purest ethical form, well versed in the history of the past, ancient as well as modern, conversant with law in its highest and broadest sense, they should be at the same time equally armed with the sharpest weapons of controversy, and those graces in speaking and writing which fasten to them the attention and confidence of multitudes in all free communities. Above all they must be keenly observant of the characteristics of the people among whom they live. Lastly, they must labor to fortify the heroic element in their nature, at least so far as, whilst never needlessly provoking popular indignation, to be able to rise on an emergency above all dread of personal danger while upholding the right and the true, however unwelcome to the popular agitation of the moment.

We do not want a class of men greedy for the small prizes, or liable to be melted, likewax, by a transient ray of popular admiration. We do want men thoroughly skilled in the use of their weapons, armed to the teeth in the steel of moral analysis, trenchant of sophistry under whatever guise, and yet, on the other hand, equally strong to uphold truth, and honor, and justice, even though at the peril of occasional obloquy. Such should be the product of this age of advancing civilization. Just such men should our colleges strive to send forth from their portals to take responsible posts in all momentous struggles of the times. Neither let it be imagined that these struggles are so severe, the triumph so rare, or the rewards so mean in a career like this, as to deter even the timid from taking an active part. Great as the sacrifice may occasionally happen to be, the victory, when it comes is often more than a commensurate reward. A skilful director of the minds of multitudes, in all civilized nations enjoying a reasonable portion of freedom through the medium of the press, may be far more potent than many a sovereign; and however much of tribulation he may occasionally endure, he can hardly fail, if he be equal to his task, to be ranked, should he be ambitious of fame and fortune, ultimately among the true magnates of his age.
—Hon. Charles Francis Adams.

The Indiana State Political Convention will meet in Muncie, Delaware Co., on the 23rd day of May at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of putting in nomination candidates to be voted for, for State officers at the October election, and to select electors for President and Vice-president, and for transacting any other business coming properly before the convention.

Cedar Valley, Iowa.

Mr. Editor:—There are some of the friends of the Cynosure who seem to fear that to vote for our nominees might weaken the Republican party and give victory to the Democrats. It is my belief that an honorable defeat is better than a dishonorable victory. We must ever dare to do right if the heavens fall, or even the Republicans suffer a defeat, for they may then learn the propriety of placing in nomination straight-forward, upright and honest men, who are not cursed with secretism and base intemperance, and who have intelligence enough not to use the filthy weed. I have been a Republican for many years, but I am under no obligation to vote for a man simply because he is the regular nominee, when I see dishonesty in all his past history. I will vote for no Freemason under any considerations, because I cannot trust the craft. I think our duty as Republicans would be, if the Republican party should put in nomination Charles Francis Adams or any other man of like ability not having the mark of the lodge, we could afford to lay our nominations by for the good of all. B. Chalfant.

Among the prominent candidates for nomination by the Republican party for Governor of Illinois is Hon. E. B. Washburn, now minister to France. For integrity of character and executive ability he seems to be regarded as far ahead of Beveridge or Cullom, who are working for the nomination. Yet the New York Sun, in the following item throws a shadow over his management at Paris. Mr. Washburn may not be directly responsible for his son's acts, but the character of the administration has favored the like immensely:

The St. Louis Republican calls attention to the following curious advertisement which appeared in the Clipper, the well-known sporting paper of this city, on October 30th, last:

"Wanted—For J. W. Myer's Great American Circus, Paris, France, the palace circus of the world, containing eighty-two luxuriously furnished private boxes, and a seating capacity of 7,500—A FIRST CLASS BAREBACK MALE AND FEMALE RIDER.

"Address, stating lowest terms and business. "Gratiot Washburne,"

"No. 14 East Fifteenth street, New York, Up to November 25."

This Gratiot Washburn is the son of the Minister of the United States in Paris, and has just been appointed Secretary of Legation at St. Petersburg, with a salary of $4,000 a year in gold. The Republican states that when he came home in October for the purpose announced in the above advertisement, he had a leave of absence from his father, and drew at the same time his salary from the Government as Second Secretary of Legation in Paris, and another salary as the agent of the Great American Circus—all of which is according to the principles of Grantism.—Sun.

Temperance.

Last Tuesday, the election day for Aldermen in Chicago, was observed by the Chicago Woman's Temperance Union as a day of fasting and prayer.

The regular monthly business meeting of the Chicago W. C. T. W., occurs Friday, 10 o'clock A. M., at 148 E. Madison St.

The Union in Chicago is conducting meetings at Farwell Hall, and the Bethel Home, the Newsboy's Home, Burr Mission, Halsted St. mission-church, First M. E. church, and in other places as the way opens.

Chewing.

The habit of tobacco chewing has been condemned by one of the Hippodrome revivalists. It is an unclean and unwholesome habit, injurious to the mouth, the stomach, the lungs, the blood, and the nervous system. It has decreased in the eastern and central portions of this country within the present generation, through the progress of good taste, refinement, and elegant manners. It still prevails widely in many parts of the West and South, especially in those dull places where the enjoyments of life are few, and men feel a constant desire for some sort of stimulus. There are men out there who do not scruple to chew and spit in presence of their families, or in the society of the softer sex. There are some of them who chew before breakfast, and never take the quid out of their mouths, except when devouring their victuals. There are some of them who even chew at church, and you will find many churches which have what Thackeray used to call an expectoratoon in every pew, for the use of all the males who sit in it. There are clergymen who chew in the pulpit, judges who chew on the bench, doctors who chew while going their rounds, and editors who chew while composing their articles. So strong is the appetite for chewing, in some cases, that men have been known to indulge in it while on their way to the gallows, and prisoners regard the deprivation of tobacco as the most unbearable of punishments. We have heard of female chewers, but we must suppose that they are rare in any part of the country, though snuff dipping among certain classes of women is not unknown in some portions of the South. There are members of Congress who chew as they sit in the House or Senate, though we feel sure that the proportion of members who there indulge in the habit is less than it was a generation ago. Tobacco chewing is an excellent practice to give up. or refrain from.—N. Y. Sun.

Questional Indulgences.

I could not feel that I was fully discharging my duty without calling attention to other useless if not harmful indulgences, costing, it is believed, a far greater outlay by the church every year than she pays into the missionary treasury; an expense which caters, it is true, to the appetite; which is about all that can be said, if even this can, in its favor. I refer to the very common habit of using tea or coffee—or, more likely, tea and coffee. While it seems susceptible of proof that he who drinks neither is in fact more healthy than the one who does, will the circumstance of pleasant taste be a sufficient excuse to offset the harm to health and the immense outlay of money it occasions, when that money is so urgently needed to send the Gospel to perishing millions? I am sometimes told that digestion is aided by a warm potion such as tea or coffee. Physiologists seem to agree in the statement that the use of liquids of any kind during meals is detrimental to health; and they give very good reasons for their conclusions. They tell us that our Creator has provided a sufficiency of saliva to moisten our food, and this will always be amply supplied while eating—unless, indeed, it has been unnaturally excited and cast out of the mouth between meals, occasioned by the use of tobacco; or the ducts secreting this fluid may be, and too often are, weakened or paralyzed by misuse, when, instead of allowing them their proper work in supplying a sufficient amount of saliva to moisten the food we eat, this moistening is done more rapidly by means of some drink chosen as a substitute; and as a result the food is swallowed too rapidly, and enfeebled health ensues. I close by submitting the question whether it were not far wiser to adopt our Maker's plan—allow the saliva its proper function, dispensing with table drinks, which only aid in bolting down, not digesting, our food. And especially shall we not abandon such drinks at the table as incur the expense of money needed so imperatively in pushing forward the victories of the cross? For Christ's sake, shall we not deny ourselves?—C. W. Swartz, in N. W. Chris. Adv.

Barley.

To the Editor:

Dear Sir:—What is your opinion on growing barley? Some of the temperance men advocate that it is no worse than growing wheat, for if there is not enough barley grown they will use wheat for beer, and that barley is not as bad for the land.

REPLY.

We do not know how far we shall be called upon to answer the above question, but we have already said more than once that barley may be and should be used for good purposes to a very much greater extent than it is. It makes capital feed for animals, and when made into pot or pearl barley makes first-rate puddings and is a capital ingredient in soup broth or Scotch Kail. To raise barley with a view to supplying breweries or distilleries, or to sell it knowingly to them, would be utterly inconsistent in any temperance man, but to raise it and sell it in open market may be regarded as on a par with the use of meat offered to idols asking no questions for conscience sake. Still, so long as the greater part of barley raised is used by brewers, a temperance man had better, we think, raise other crops, of which there is a great variety, except in so far as he can use the barley for feeding purposes.—N. Y. Witness.

By order of Rev. John Black of Upper Lake, Lake Co., Cal., Chairman of committee of organization, a convention of the committee and all friends of the National Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will meet in the basement of the Congregational church in Sacramento, Sixth street, between I and J streets, on the 25th of May next, at 1 o'clock P. M. The meeting is for men and women, all persons friendly to the cause.

1. To consider the nature of the secret orders now widely operating in this country, and their bearing on the cause of Christ and our civil institutions.

2. To arrange for the labors of Pres. J. Blanchard of Wheaton College, Ill., during five consecutive weeks beginning on Sabbath, July 9th next.

All friends of Jesus Christ, who is superceded and set aside by the lodge; and all friends of open, free and equal popular government, and opposed to taking secret advantage of our fellowmen, are invited to meet in council at the above time and place. All who wish to avail themselves of the labors of Pres. Blanchard it is hoped will take prompt measures to hold meetings, one or more, in their respective localities, and be present to arrange appointments for the same. By order of

JOHN BLACK, Chairman,
PHIL BECK, Sec'y.

Anniversary of Iowa Anti-secrecy Association.

There will be a convention of the friends of anti-secretism at Western, Linn Co., Iowa, commencing at 7:30 P. M. Tuesday, April 25th, 1876, and to continue in session until Thursday, 27th. A cordial invitation is tendered to all the friends of the cause, in Iowa especially, and to all others who may choose to be present. Hon. J. B. Walker of Illinois, and other able speakers will be present. Let the auxiliary associations, churches and neighborhoods favoring the objects of the convention see that delegates be chosen to represent them, and all unite in defraying expenses of delegates.

Systematic and sworn secrecy is an enemy to the church, state, and the social compact, and must be defeated by the force of truth and the grace of Him who in secret said nothing. Let prayer be offered that the convention be blessed with abundant success.

Delegates from the south and north will stop at Ely Station, which is three miles east of Western, on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids, and Minnesota R. R. Those from the east and west will come to Cedar Rapids, and then to Ely Station, where conveyance will be furnished to Western.

M. S. DRURY, President.

Let the county associations be represented, and also the different churches of the State.

PETER RICH,
Chairman Ex. Committee.

To the Friends of our Cause in Wisconsin.

I now take my leave of you, at least for a time. Seed time approaches; and I am admonished that I must do something more for the support of my family, than has been done in the recent past. As in mind I pass over your State and think of the many warm personal friends, and our short but pleasant associations, and Christian warfare, and triumphs over our common enemy, I am constrained to thank God for what has been accomplished. There is no cause for discouragement. Truth is more mighty than error, and there are many that are anxious for the truth on the subject of secretism. The grange is not so popular as it was—is decidedly on the wave. Good Templarism also has gone down in many places, but they have left behind the evidences of their demoralizing nature and tendency. As the result of labors performed, some have acknowledged the truth, and left the lodges to return to them no more, while many have been saved and kept from ever entering them.

But our friends in Wisconsin sadly lack in organization; our foes are not only secret, but are compactly organized, and herein lies their strength, and it is to be seen in its practical results in both church and state, in social and legal matters everywhere.

It is to be hoped that the friends will organize, and be prepared for the fall election. Our candidates ought to receive a goodly number of votes next fall, and will if the friends do their duty. Since commencing to lecture in the State, something more than two years since, I have labored in nine counties, and given 182 lectures, and in the fall, if the Lord will, may enter the field of conflict again, and labor for the triumph of truth.

For the war, P. ELZEA.

School-house Discussion at Delphi, Ind.

PITTSBURGH, Ind.

I received a notice lately from a gentleman from Delphi, of a desire to discuss the subject of secret societies in our school house. The question stated was: "Are secret societies wrong?"—and on Friday evening, March 10th, we had the discussion. Though the roads were very muddy, we had a full house and good order. Your humble servant took the affirmative. My opponent is both an Odd-fellow and granger, one of the prominent debaters of Delphi. I opened the subject and argued it from two general positions: 1st, that they, Masons, Odd-fellows, etc., are religious fraternities; 2d, that they are anti-Christian. For they had carefully excluded the name of Jesus from their prayers by the Grand Encampment of the United States; and I challenged him to show one single prayer in their written ceremonies, in which the name of Christ was mentioned; and as they received the Mohammedans, the Hindoos and Jews, they would give offense if they prayed in the name of Jesus. I also portrayed to the audience the claims of secret orders to benevolence, as being false and that they shut out the very ones most likely to be objects of charity. In the reply my opponent argued that the lodge was a religion good enough for him and that he was sure of heaven if he lived up to its teachings; and as for praying in the name of Jesus he would throw away Jesus and the New Testament both before he would Odd-fellowship. He also charged the Methodist church with being guilty of stealing two hundred dollars from him which the brethren of the fraternity had never been guilty of, for they had been a benefit to him. He closed his arguments with a denunciation of a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church at Delphi, because he would not license him some years ago to preach unless he would marry a girl whom he (the debater) believed to be of bad character. He said he was then studying for the ministry, and I believe he belongs to no church now but the I. O. O. F. The minister he denounced was Rev. Mr. Joyce. I thought, no wonder that he denounced the Methodist church for stealing two hundred dollars from him, as I believe it is ruled by Odd-fellows and Masons with whom he is associated.

After the debate the audience was called on to vote on the merits of the discussion, and was unanimously in favor of the affirmative. I received a note yesterday from the same gentleman to discuss the same subject again.

Justice Driven Out.

That oath-bound secret societies are a curse to our country is a fact that cannot be denied by any who have given the matter an impartial consideration. Why is it that our common courts of justice are so partial? Simply because most of our judges, lawyers and states attorneys belong to those abominable societies, and when a brother craft-men is caught in any criminal act they are under obligations to assist and if possible free him from the penalties of the law.

A circumstance occurred in our neighborhood about seven years ago, in which one J. Taylor shot and instantly killed a young man by the name of Shepler. He then went to the justice of the peace and gave himself up,—for well he knew that he would be cleared by his brother Masons. The trial came on and the jury found a verdict against him (Taylor) of murder in the first degree. The case was then laid by until the next term of court, and when the trial came on, they got a new set of jurymen impanneled, a majority of whom were Masons, and they struggled hard but could not clear him, for the case was a plain one. So they did not agree and it was laid aside again, and so they kept laying it aside from one term of court until another, until finally it was thrown out of court. Thus setting at liberty a scoundrel whom justice demanded should be hanged. After he was set free he swore he killed one man and wanted to kill two or three more before he left the country. This case cannot be denied.

But not only are those societies condaminating our courts of justice, but they are hindering the progress of Bible truth and religion. No wonder churches are becoming formal, and sin is raging in every quarter! No wonder there are so many who profess and do not possess religion! How can God bless a people that are constantly disobeying his commands? He says, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate." Again the apostle says, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."—Eph. v: 11. And again, "For ye were sometimes darkness but now are ye light in the Lord. Walk as children of the light.—Eph. v: 8.

It is only a mercy that God spares the lives of those pretended ministers of the Gospel who have suffered Satan to place the cable-tow around their necks and bound them with the most horrid of oaths, to forever conceal and never reveal the (so-called) secrets of the accursed order, thus obliging them to serve as stool-pigeons to trap others, for well he knows that each pastor is the leader of a flock, and if he can succeed in trapping the shepherd he will get the sheep. Oh, that God would speed the day when this curse shall be forever banished from our midst, and when freedom and liberty shall be enjoyed by every one! B. F. Taylor.

From Catteraugus County, N. Y.

Dear Bro. K.—I am in sympathy with the cause you are trying to promote, and your fellow coadjutors. It is worthy of all the financial, moral, and religious labor that we can possibly bestow upon it, for it is to shed light on the dark places of the earth. There is one thing which puzzles me, how any man who has sought and found the true light and life in Christ Jesus, can allow himself to be denuded, hood-winked, cable-towed, and led like a beast to the slaughter; and they are not allowed to take Jesus with them, but must go alone, leaving their manhood, their liberty, and their religion, and what do they get for it?

The craft is very crafty in this place since Bro. C. A. Blanchard lectured here about two years ago. They are trying to keep all Anti-masonic light from shining on this place, and those who profess to be Anti-masons are asleep. Talk to them about taking the Cynosure, or some of the Anti-masonic books and they are full of trouble and excuses, hard times, no money, but they can take low story papers—plenty of money for them. After all, they say, we had better let Masons alone; they are not meddling with us; just so the devil wants us to let him alone. But we must fight if we would reign.

The more I read the Cynosure the better I like it. It is a welcome weekly visitor to my family. I will try to labor for its circulation as far as I can in connection with my other duties. If any of our lecturers should pass through Randolph, N. Y., please give us a call. J. S. Amidon.

Does the Bible Curse Freemasonry?

It is recorded that Moses "charged the people" to obey God, and divided the tribes into two parties; six tribes were to bless "when ye are come over Jordan," and six tribes were to curse. The blessing was for obedience, the curses for disobedience; and the very first curse reads thus: "Cursed be the man that makes any graven or moulten image, an abomination to the Lord, the work of the hands of the craftsman, and putteth it in a secret place, and all the people shall answer and say, Amen." Deut. xxvii. 25.

If Freemasonry and its allies shall exclaim against applying the above to the work of the hands of their craftsman which are put in a secret place, I doubt not that some of your readers will at least recognize the family resemblance very distinctly if they hold it up to the mirror given us by inspired wisdom, in the comprehensive expression, "and such like," Gal. v. 21. What would be thought of any Bible reader who could attempt to justify pride or covetoueness, because these are not mentioned in this passage, as "works of the flesh," as well as "hatred or envyings"? Yet this seems to me the way and the only way for the craftsman's secret work to escape the Divine curse recorded on the sacred page against "such like" proceedings in Freemasonry, etc. T. H.

Profanity of Masonic and Mormon Lodges.

Champaign, Ill., March 29th, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I see that Past Master Ronayne is annoyed at answering the same question affirmatively so often, viz., Do ministers and other dignitaries have to conform to the same disgusting semi-nude condition, and take the same horrid self-imposed, profane oaths, that are required of all the other applicants, when joining the Masonic institution? Why should this be astounding? This whole system of secretism has a history entirely consistent with its character and dark purposes. It is copied largely from the heathen rites and ceremonies and the holy dramas of the dark and middle ages, and mysteries of ancient Greece, with all its dark history. Why will not the incredulous read the authentic history of secretism of later date, of the Jesuits and popery? Read Book of Martyrs, History of the Waldenses, and many others coroborating their truthfulness. Note the indescribable horrors, murders and indiscriminate slaughter that have eminated from and been perpetrated by these secret religious clans,—for they have ever been, and are still, religious secret clans; though in fact very far from being truly Christian. In all the history the hand of God is most manifest, ultimately is, against the workers of iniquity. Why not heed the practical lesson, that the same God still reigns, and that similar woes await us, if we cherish similar abominations? Why this culpable indifference to all the corruption, fraud and crime, that now prevails among the high as well as the low, both in the church and national officials? Now, most of the popular sins of our day find a ready welcome to the fellowship of most of our churches, while Christ's demands are, repentance and renunciation of all sin, and "a belief with the heart unto righteousness, have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." Oh, when will the time come, when Christians shall no longer be the chief accomplices in the dark works of iniquity!

Again, is this shameless semi-nudity more astounding or impious on the part of professing Christians or ministers than their most horrid profane oaths? voluntary oaths? self-imposed oaths? to protect and defend a brother Master Mason, right or wrong, murder and treason not excepted? Oh, why is it that the expose of Masonry by that truly godly man, C. G. Finney, is so seldom read or regarded? Solely because men love darkness more than light.

Let me also refer you to a late book (1870) by J. H. Beadle, (who is evidently a Mason), called "Mysteries and Crimes of Mormonism," which says that Jo Smith's new translation of the Old Testament is against Masonry, but that some years after, the Mormons all became Masons, but finally Jo Smith out-Masoned Solomon, by claiming that he (Smith) had higher revelations, and a great key word, &c., hence the grand lodge revoked their charter, but they continued to cling to their Masonry, from which (evidently) they derive many of their rites and ceremonies. They call it "Celestial Masonry." Hence two vast and magnificent structures to-day in Salt Lake City, viz: their Masonic Temple and their Mormon Temple, both used by the same people. The Mormon ceremonies and oaths and death penalties of secrecy, are much the same as the Masons, namely, to have the throat cut, their bowels slit across, etc. See above book, page 486. Then they only go a step further than Masonic semi-nudity. See page 492, where he gives us the Mormon authority, that in their initiating or endowment ceremonies, (they again out-mason Solomon), and require that both the women and men to be entirely naked. This Mormon authority further says that this is not now insisted on, because (note the reason) in many cases, we are not yet sufficiently pure minded; and our enemies would use it as a weapon against us." The author of said book was many years a resident of Salt Lake City, and editor of the Salt Lake Reporter. Such is then another religious secret clan, a religion of lust, poligamy and concubinage, and consequently of the most debasing crimes, and murders, even akin to the days of the Inquisition, (read "The Mountain Meadow Massacre), and like slavery, the half cannot be told. Yet our Government only winks at all this, because, like the whisky rings and clans, and others, they are a source of revenue. But enough for the present of this dark picture of facts. Let the few thoroughists (not radicals) take courage. "One with God is a majority," "when he shall again visit for these things, though sneers and scoffs and derision and persecution and death await us. "It is enough that the servant be as his lord." These have always and always will attend a life of opposition to popular sin and to a life of consecration to the true God and truth. He does hear and answer prayer. Let us cling to this as our only hope. "And shall he not avenge His own elect that cry day and night unto him, I tell you he will, avenge them speedily." Note his fullfilment in the prayers of the old abolitionists, and the slaves, long since gone to their heaven of rest, and reward before they saw the answers to their importunity. Oh, for a true faith, a true witnessing, a true repentance, and a consistent Christian life and character! Without these, the just judgments of Almighty God, will as surely overtake us with all our corruption and crimes, and turn us too, into hell, with the nations that forget God, as he has ever done in the past. Why I am an Anti-mason.

East Lynn, Ill.

Dear Cynosure:—I am an Anti-mason, and why? Because my father was a Mason. He died last June, in his 84th year. He joined the Masons when a young man. How many de grees he had taken I never learned, but in absence of their proper leader he said he had initiated members into the lodge. When he was not suffering severe pain he would request me to read aloud, and among the books I had selected to read was a book called "Light on Masonry" by Elder Bernard. He said but little until I read the horrible oath where they are bound to defend one another right or wrong. He then spoke and said that Masons were trying to dodge, and claimed that Masonry had changed of late on that point, "But," he said, "Masonry is to-day what it was fifty years ago, and I had to take that oath." He also affirmed that the book was true. He said that he had carefully read Capt. Morgan's book, and it was a correct expose so far as he went. I have often been asked the question, "Why are you an Anti-mason? Your father was a Mason." My answer is, Because my own father's evidence on his death bed was better for me than all other testimony on earth. What Mason can deny such testimony and be honest with himself, with his God, and with his fellow men. Now I am aware that Masons are ready to deny this statement, because when father attended the lodge he talked just as they all do. I have not written this article out of any disrespect to any Mason or any individual, but because I am persuaded that secrecy is wrong, and should be discountenanced by every true and loyal citizen. Strong in God.

El Paso, Ill.

Dear Friend:—Enclosed I send you six dollars to help secure the Carpenter donation. This amount, though small, is sent in the name of the friends of the cause in El Paso, some being unwilling their names should be published.

We feel weak in ourselves and in our ability to give, but strong in Him whom the Apostle says "hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty, and things that are not to bring to naught things that are," which is very significant and cheering to the humble and faithful laborer in Christ for the overthrow of secretism, which the craft thereof are in the habit of looking upon as the things that are mighty and that are; forgetting no doubt in their security what the blowing of a few ram's horns, under God, accomplished for God's Israel in the overthrow and destruction of idolatrous Jericho and her inhabitants. They felt perhaps just as strong and safe and mighty and secure behind the walls surrounding their city as the lodge members at the present day in the third story of some building with the curtains all down and properly tiled so that cowans may not ook in upon their Masonic Dagon, nor hear their oft repeated response "So mote it be" in the homage they pay to it.

Our prayer for you and others engaged in this noble reform is, that success under God may crown every effort and that soon every disciple of the Master will withdraw his fellowship from the various churches to which they severally belong who look with pleasure or approbation or complacency upon the mark of the beast placed in the forehead of any of her membership by the authority and doings of speculative Freemasonry. As ever yours for reform, Wm. A. Bartlett.

OUR MAIL.

Donald C. McLaren, Geneva, N. Y., sends $20 to the Publishing House fund and writes:

"I am far away from you but it comes from my old heart, from which I do not think it would come if it was not renewed. I have nearly finished an article for the Cynosure.

We will be glad to receive your article.

P. Bacon, Weatogue, Ct., writes:

"I rejoice in the evidence that I have that the Lord is helping our labors."

S. B. Allen, Morrison, Ill., writes:

"There are a few earnest Christians here praying for you and all who are engaged in the work."

"The effectual fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much."

Sam'l Guengerish, Amish, Ia., writes:

"I think it is high time for the nation and even professed or corrupt Christianity to be aroused from the slumber of sin and folly to the light of Gospel truth."

L. G. Wood, Brattleboro, Vt., writes:

"I think Freemasonry is some like an old apple tree all running to sprouts, and when the sprouts have drawn all the sap out of the old stock they must all perish together."

S. Simpson, Pilot Rock, Oreg., writes:

"The suggestion to have Ronayne at the Centennial is a good one; let our cause be represented and have a good supply of our literature on sale there. I will remit something for the tract fund soon. Regret that I cannot send a donation for the Carpenter building now. I like the platform and shall vote the ticket."

G. W. Kelly, McPherson, Kan., writes:

"We need lectures here. Much could be done. I am doing what I can. One brother who is a Sunday school superintendent is offering prizes in his school, and says he is going to give the Cynosure as one prize."

S. Jenkins, White Rock, Ill., writes:

"I am in a den of Masons. Nearly all in this whole neighborhood are Freemasons of the deepest dye. We ought to have a lecture here without fail. My heart and sympathies are with you."

I. H. Brown, Bethel, O., writes:

"I keep my paper going and it troubles the waters. I begin to think it will not be in vain."

Lorenzo D. Brown, Montmorenci, Ind., writes:

"The people here are loth to receive any light on the subject of Masonry, and prefer traveling the old smooth ruts of sin and perish for want of knowledge. It grieves my soul to see the alarming and cursed influence of secret societies. It's all around us and a man need only to make his sentiments known, if they are in opposition to secretism, to be hated, and hindered in worldly goods. I was an inventor of an improvement in wagons and patented the same. Freemasons said they would help me through with it if I would join them. I refused at once and forever, and so I failed of success in that for conscience' sake. It requires pluck and courage as well as a right heart to make the necessary sacrifice in proof of our principles."

J. B. Wells, DeRuyter, Wis., sends his renewal and writes:

"The cause to which you are devoted should in my opinion receive the support of every Christian man and woman and every philanthropist in the land. I am struggling with poverty it is true, but it would be a burning shame if you were obliged to suspend for want of support."

A personal interest in the welfare of the Cynosure is timely and needful, and expressions of such an interest encourage us.

Jno. A. Ramsey, Lincoln, Tenn., writes:

"The Cynosure has at least one friend in Tennesee who is anxiously watching the progress of the conflict it is waging against the powers of darkness. Tennesee shall give at least one vote for Hon. J. B. Walker. In due time I shall send for tickets with the hope of securing several votes."

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for Apr. 30.—The Lame Man Healed.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts iii. 1-11. Commit 1-7; Primary Verse, 6.

1 Now Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour.

2 And a certain man lame from his mother's womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple;

3 Who, seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple, asked an alms.

4 And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John, said, Look on us.

5 And he gave heed unto them expecting to receive something of them.

6 Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk.

7 And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up: and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength.

8 And he leaping up stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God.

9 And all the people saw him walking and praising God:

10 And they knew it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

11 And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomon's greatly wondering.

The Bible in the Sabbath-Schools.—Some one very sensibly says that whatever question there may be as to retaining the Bible in the common schools, there ought to be none as to continuing it in the Sabbath-schools. Papers and question books, and lesson leaves and catechisms, are good, but only so far as they help to understand the Bible. They must not take its place. Nothing should do that.

Farm and Garden.

Rotation not a necessity.—The idea of the importance of rotation of crops, so earnestly pressed upon the attention of farmers, has been of great service, both in its practical application and in the discussion evoked. It is being shown, however, that rotation is not a condition of success, except under certain circumstances. Happily those circumstances are not universal, and in many cases may be either greatly modified or entirely changed.

Formerly, in localities where stable manure was very scarce as compared with the land under cultivation; when from lack of capital or a disinclination to invest it, farmers depended for the most part upon the native energy of the soil, upon favorable seasons and good cultivations—a systematic rotation was of great importance, and still is essential to the best results. But in these days the conditions are changed; stable or no stable, there is potash and lime and phosphorus enough; rain or no rain, nitrogen is plenty. The soil is known to be a vigorous machine, capable of being unceasingly worked—not that feeble area that must be so carefully nursed in order to work at all. Hence he who still clings to the necessity of rotation, cherishes an extensive fallacy.

Numerous intelligent experimenters during the past twenty years have shown that by skillful use of chemical fertilizers and organic phosphates, which are most easily applied and very certain in their action, crops may be grown upon the same land for many successive years with unfailable profit. The field which for any reason is best suited to a certain crop, may thus be permanently retained for that specific purpose. Other parts of the farm will be assigned to those productions for which, as particular machines, they are best adapted. Also, the expense of cultivation will then be lessened, as any one can see.

Moreover, it appears that soils, if well fed, by constant cropping are somehow cleansed of their native crudeness, and rendered capable of producing much finer qualities of plants—notably of tobacco. Precisely why this is the case is not so apparent, but the truth cannot be doubted. Now, when quality in all farm products is the inexorable demand, this deserves especial notice.

Years ago, the theory of rotation came as a godsend to stay the starving process that had ruined so many farms. Men heeded it to some extent, and saved their acres. Agricultural science has since made great advances. It clearly shows that rotation is no a necessity, but in many instances a hindrance, to a perfect crop.—Country Gentleman.

The presence of lice on cattle is a sign that the animals have been neglected during the winter. If their coats are carded once a week with a card dipped in kerosene oil, not a louse will come near them. Along the shoulders and back bone is the spot where lice first and mostly gather. This part should be well carded or rubbed with the oil. There is no more thorough preventive than this. To cure, take four ounces of lard, a teaspoonful of kerosene oil, and half an ounce sulphur in powder. Grind these on a plate with the blade of a knife until well mixed, and rub the ointment every day along the backbone from the head to the tail. Give a teaspoonful of the sulphur in salt every day for a week for the animal to lick. By the end of that time the lice will have disappeared. Reduce the above quantity to one-half for calves.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1876.

Day of Fasting and Prayea.

The committee to whom was referred the question of appointing a day of fasting and prayer have designated SATURDAY, JUNE 3D, as the day recommended to be set apart for this purpose. Pastors are desired to give notice of this appointment on the Sabbath preceding, and a'so to preach on the reform on the Lord's Day immediately following. And let every Christian remember this day for the sake of his family, his country and the kingdom of his Redeemer, at all of which the lodge aims a vital blow.

WHY MASONS DON'T READ.

The plaint of the prolific Mackey, over the demise of the New England Freemason, is a repetition intensified of the lamentation for Reynold's Trowel, Gouley's Freemason, the Landmark of New York, and Mackey's own National Freemason of Washington, which have all passed out of existence within three or four years. Dr. Mackey is more scholarly and gentle in his treatment of the case than lodge writers generally, and his words have a prophetic tone which every opponent of the lodge should hail. Not that we wish the honest personal interests of any member of any lodge to be impaired—far from it; but it is auspicious of the downfall of the system itself, a blessing we believe to the world, but more than all to Masons themselves,

There are a few obvious reasons why Masonic literature is stale in the reading market.

It has been largely made up of traditions, and preposterous stories occasionally revamped and palmed off for fact. The founders of of Freemasonry so plastered this mask upon their golden calf, that the efforts of their modern students to tear it off, made nervous and reckless by the opposition to their worship, is likely to spoil the image itself. The breaking up of this grand deception which has so long furnished the facts for Masonic faith, of course makes Masonic infidels, who turn away from fountains of literature turned bitter.

Homilies on a few moral principles, too, from which the soul and authority is wanting, soon become "flat, stale and unprofitable." Morality, as taught by the lodge, so far as it goes, is in a sense commendable; but it is narrow in its ends, and has absolutely no authority at all for support; lacking that which enforces morality, the authority of the all-wise and ever-living God in Christ, it has no force upon the conscience. Having this Christian, morality is ever new and vital, though presented in the same forms of speech day after day.

There are two large and increasing classes in the lodge who have no interest in supporting its literature. They are, first, men of intelligence and sense, who have consented to enter through deception, and who sicken at the nonsense and shame to which they are subjected. Yet though long separated from the folly and idolatry of the lodge, they have not moral courage to abandon it. Then there is the very large classe of lodge speculators and wire-pullers who care not for any principle here or there, but are ambitious only to get water on their particular wheel in business or politics.

These features of Masonic dissolution apply in a degree to the Odd-fellow order, whose leaders have often been called to put on mourning over the failure of their journals. On this subject the Western Patriarch a while since said: "It has been said, frequently said, and that with a good deal of assuranbe, that an Odd-fellow literature cannot be sustained, because Odd-fellows, as a community, are not a reading people. This is a grave conclusion, and the argument, if true, not only grave but humiliating. * * While we repel the charge that Odd-fellows are not a reading people, we are nevertheless persuaded that the attention of our fraternity is not attracted to its own literature as much as it should be."

The Heart and Hand quoting this article and commenting on the disagreeable fact that members of the order neglected its organs says further: "Those that read the publications of our order are the 'workers' who are recognized as leaders in subordinate and grand bodies—those who are looked at as the 'posted' brethren—those who, when it is necessary to select officers for positions requiring knowledge and ability are the only ones fitted for it."

From the decay of their literature let these lodge "leaders" learn that, their work and influence must with it perish as the church of Christ is strengthened in the earth and his kingdom conquers among the nations,

CENTENNIAL TRACT DISTRIBUTION.—Our publishers have found room in the book department of the Centennial Exposition,—and have engaged a space for he display of publications against the lodge. Tracts may be had free at this stand by any who will take them, books may be sold and subscriptions taken for the paper, if done quietly. By this means millions of pages of tracts may be freely scattered. A fund for this good work must be raised immediately. Send in your contributions.

—The Independent and Christian Union are making desperate efforts to bolster up their respective champions in the scandal case. The latter through the agency of the publishing house of Barnes & Co., broadcasting its circulars on the Beecher council; is reported to be greatly reduced in circulation, which does not speak well of its character as a personal organ of Mr. Beecher.

—A late number of Pomeroy's Democrat has an editorial of a column and a half in defence of Masonry against Elder Baird's tract. The tract is published entire, and in the reply the editor says he has worked himself up to the 32d degree, and has found that "the man who is a good Mason is as good a Christian as was John the Evangelist."

Report of Directors Meeting, N. C. A. Apr. 5th, 1876.

At the call of the chairman the Directors of the National Christian Association met in the Cynosure office at 10 A. M. Present, Messrs. Carpenter, J. Blanchard, H. L. Kellogg, O. F. Lumry, C. A. The action of the committee on Anniversary in relation to expenses of speakers was approved.

Voted that Farwell Hall be engaged for the Anniversary Convention; and that Mr. Ronayne be invited to deliver an address on Masonry during one of the day sessions of the Convention.

The following was adopted:

Resolved, that we, the Directors of the National Christian Association, respectfully request the pastors of the various churches of Chicago, before and in view of the assembling of its Eighth Anniversary in this city, June 20th to 23d, either to present the subject of organized secretism to their congregations themselves; or, that they or the appropriate church officers permit the N. C. A. to provide some one else to address their respective congregations on that subject.

A committee of three; J. P. Stoddard, C. R. Hagerty, and J. M. Wallace, was appointed to arrange for a reduction of railroad fare to the Convention.

The Treasurer reported on the state of the funds and the status of the Publishing House was discussed. Mr. Carpenter agreed to give immediate possession of the Carpenter building.

Voted to retain the present lessee of the main floor of the building at $1,000 per annum, and the lease run to the Treasurer of the Association.

Voted that the Illinois Agent be instructed to charge for Sabbath labor, and be allowed a two week's vacation to be taken at his discretion.

Mr. Ronayne'susuggestion for a season of special prayer and fasting was approved, and the time was referred to the Committee on Carpenter building.

The Treasurer was instructed to sell for cash the bonds of the Northern Pacific R. R. now in his hands at the best advantage.

Adjourned after prayer by Prof. Lumry.

—Although a large extra edition was printed two weeks ago to fill the orders for "Freemasonry at a Glance," yet some hundreds have yet to be turned away. Our publishers intend printing this popular exhibition of the lodge again in June just before the Anniversary convention. Send orders in time.

MARRIED.—On April 3d inst. at the Briggs House, Chicago, by Rev. Joseph E. Roy, D. D., Hon. James B. Walker and Mrs. Mary A. Weamer.

The many friends of our honored standard-bearer of the American party will read this notice with interest. Mrs. Weamer is an amiable and estimable lady, who has for some years been a member of Mr. Walker's family.

DIED.—At her home in Wheaton, Ill., April 8th, Mrs. Cynthia Ann Bent, wife of Rev. J. A. Bent, late professor in Wheaton College. While in apparent usual health Mrs. Bent was suddenly taken by an apoplectic stroke from a large circle of friends to whom she was greatly endeared by many excellences of mind and heart.

Died in North Chatham, N. Y., April 11th, 1876, John I. Budd, aged 88 years 10 months and 16 days. He died in the "full light; having perfect victory through the blood of the Lamb."

DIED.—April 1st, at her residence in Milton, Dodge county, Minnesota, Mrs. Clarissa Hillman, of punemonia, after a brief illness.

Deceased was born March 12th, 1816, in the town of Half Moon, Saratoga Co., N. Y., being the sixth daughter of David and Phebe Ash. At the age of five years her mother died, and at twelve she became a member of the family of Rev. Elisha Hubbell, the resident pastor, under whose Christian instruction she commenced her useful Christian life. At the age of sixteen, by persistent study, although of a delicate constitution, she became sufficiently qualified to teach district school. She connected herself with the Baptist church of her native town, and was ever a consistent Christian worker.

She became at an early age, self-reliant, accepting of no rule of faith or practice but what had a "thus saith the Lord" for it, and whatever had no Bible ground for its support was rejected. On March 22d, 1843, she was married to Silas Hillman, of Broadalbin, Fulton Co', N. Y., the present bereaved husband. In Oct. 1853, they moved to Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, and in the year 1872, came to Milton, Minn. By her consistent Christian course she ever gained the confidence and respect of all with whom she came in contact. In full accord with her husband, she was ever radically opposed to all secret societies, especially Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship; believing with him that many of the unpunished crimes of our day, are due to the secret oath-bound combinations spread all over the land, as well as the crippled condition of many of our churches, and the apparent inefficiency of the Christian religion to evangalize the world. She always maintained that it was never safe for any woman to marry a man that went to places or held secrets that he could not impart to his wife, and ever believed that if girls would in every case reject all such, it would tend mightily to overthrow the evil of organized secretism.

—The Indian Commission of the Protestant Episcopal church has issued an appeal for funds. The schools are full and the religious services well attended. The school at the Spotted Tail Agency has 170 pupils. Unless subscriptions are sent in, the embarrassments of the commission will render the withdrawal of its missionaries and teachers necessary.

—Since the President in his last message proposed the policy of taxing church property, the first case of a bill proposing such taxation that has been brought to a vote has been in the Massachusetts Legislature. In the Massachusetts House the bill proposing church property taxation has been defeated by a vote of 64 to 116.

—A conference of Christian workers of Chicago and vicinity will be held in Farwell Hall April 21st to 23d. The programme will be similar to the meetings held in London, Philadelphia, and New York, which proved so profitable to all present.

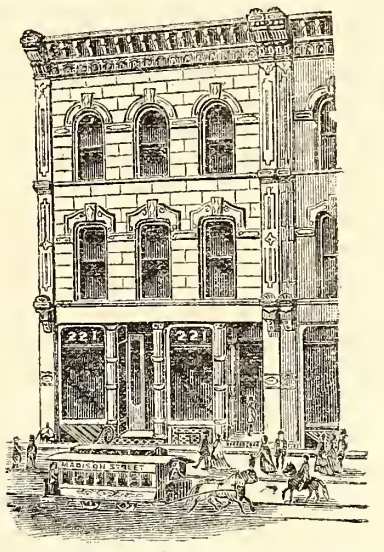
News of the Week.

—The bill to prevent the running of excursion trains through the State on Sundays has passed the New Jersey House of Representatives. It permits one train each way on each road, on which full passenger rates must be charged.

—By order of Secretary of War Taft, the headquarters of the army are re-established at Washington City, and hereafter all orders and instructions issued by the President through the Secretary of War, will be promulgated by the General of the Army.

—The Senate Committee on Territories has agreed to report a bill to establish the Territory of Pembina. The proposed new territory is to consist of that portion of the present Territory of Dakota which lies north of the forty-sixth parallel.

Four powder magazines, near Salt Lake City, exploded April 6th, causing great excitement and terror. Windows and doors were blown in, chimneys thrown down, boulders fell crashing through the city, some falling a mile distant. Four persons were killed and one woman died of fright. The damage to glass alone will amount to $50,000.



—The colored National Convention organized in Nashville on the 6th. Frederick Douglas and other signers to the card against calling the convention at Nashville were severely criticised. The speakers declared they were for the party that promised them the most rights and fulfilled their promises.

—Advices from Constantinople say that the plague is increasing at Bagdad, where on the 26th of March thirty new cases and ten deaths were reported.

BERLIN, April 14th.—The journals of the Czech party in Austria assert that Russia has plainly informed the Servians that she will protect them from Austrian coercion in the event of Servia declaring war against Turkey.

The Coming Opening of the Centennial.

The programme for the opening of the Philadelphia Exposition has been decided on and announced. About 10:30 o'clock A. M., on Wednesday, May 10th, the persons invited having been conducted to their places, the orchestra of 150, conducted by Theodore Thomas, will play the national airs of all nations. The following programme will then be carried out: "The Grand March," written for the occasion by Richard Wagner, for which Mr. Thomas paid $5,000 in gold; Invocation of the Divine Blessing; original hymn by J. G. Whittier; Original Cantata—words by Sidney Lanier, of Georgia; music by Dudley Buck, of Connecticut. Brief presentation by General Hawley, the President of the Centennial Commission, reporting the exhibition to the President of the United States. An address by the President of the United States, which he will close by declaring the Exhibition open. Immediately the flags will be unfurled, the artillery will fire a salute, the chimes of the tower and other great bells on the ground will ring, and the chorus of 600 will render Handel's "Hallelujah." The foreign commissioners will move to their respective assignments in the main building. The President of the United States, escorted by the commission and board of finance, and the invited guests, will enter the north doors of the main building and move, accompanied by the music of the great organs, along the great avenue in such manner as to pass by each national commission. The procession will then cross the Machinery hall and walk down the main avenue to the center. Then, at a signal from the President of the United States, the enormous engine and its thirteen acres of machinery will be put in motion and the Exhibition will be open to the world. There may follow more or less formal receptions in the Judges' hall.

Prayer.

When prayer delights the least, then learn to say,
Soul, now is greatest need that thou should'st pray.

Crooked and warped I am, and I would fain
Straighten myself by thy right line again.

Oh, come, warm sun, and ripen my late fruits.
Pierce, genial showers, down to my parched roots.

My well is bitter; cast therein the tree,
That sweet henceforth its brackish waves may be.

Say, what is prayer, when it is prayer indeed?
The mighty utterance of a mighty need.

The man is praying who doth press with might
Out of his darkness into God's own light.

White heat the iron in the furnace won,
Withdrawn from thence, 'twas cold and hard anon.

Flowers from their stalk divided, presently
Droop, fall and wither in the gazer's eye.

The greenest leaf, divided from its stem,
To speedy withering doth itself condemn.

The largest river, from its fountain-head
Cut off, leaves soon a parched and dusty bed.

All things that live from God their sustenance wait,
And sun and moon are beggars at his gate.

All skirts extended of thy mantle hold
When angel hands from heaven are scattering gold.

Praying to the Point.

A new church in the West was recently dedicated. After the beautiful temple had been formally set apart the pastor supplemented the service with a consecration meeting—a meeting for the promotion of holiness. At this meeting a good sister presented herself at the altar, and being called on to pray, supplicated as follows:

"Oh, Lord, we have been taught at this meeting that we must ask for just what we really need. Now, Lord, thou knowest if I should ask for just such things as I want, the congregation would be astonished.

"Oh, Lord, I want thee to help Bro. S—— to quit selling tobacco. Thou knowest that it is a filthy weed, that it is polluting the house of God in a most insulting manner. I do want thee to give him grace to abandon the traffic.

"Oh, Lord, my husband uses tobacco. Thou knowest that I love him and respect him above all other men, but I hate this filthy habit. Thou knowest if he had saved the money he has wasted for tobacco in the past year, he could have paid twenty-five dollars more on this new church. Oh, Lord, help him to quit the use of tobacco.

"There is another thing, Lord, which I desire greatly—some of our church members attend circus shows. Now, Lord, thou knowest that it is wrong for a Christian to go to these circuses. Thou knowest that I never attended but one of these miserable places in my life, and then I came near fainting. And thou knowest it was not altogether from the heat; my conscience oppressed me more than the heat. Lord, help these church members to keep away from these shows.

"Now, Lord, I want thee to bless and save my boys. I have prayed and wept over them in secret for years, and still they resist the Spirit. O, Lord, if there is mercy for them, save them speedily.

"And now, Oh, Lord, remember me. I am not as good as I want to be. I feel that there is some filthiness still remaining, Lord, if thou canst do anything more for me then thou hast done, I pray thee to do it. Thou knowest I want to be all that thou wouldst have me to be. Now, Lord, I have told thee just what I want. Grant me all for Jesus' sake. Amen."

At the close of the prayer, Bro. S—— arose and told us that he had, the day previous, convictions on the subject of selling tobacco, and had resolved to sell no more after disposing of his present stock. Bro. S—— was converted three years ago, two years since he embraced holiness, and has borne a clear and unwavering testimony to the all-cleansing blood from the moment he entered the valley of blessing till now. He bears pruning and dissecting with perfect composure. I trust the good results of this meeting will be seen many days hence.—Christian Standard.

Their Responsibility.

The responsibility that rests upon all Christians, whether they occupy public or private stations, is obvious and great. They must preach the Gospel from pulpit or pew, from the bench, in the Sabbath-school, from the fireside, from the daily business resort. They must live the Gospel, that a caviling world may take knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus.

There is, however, a responsibility hat rests upon another class of men—a responsibility that they too often evade or ignore. Impenitent men have a most weighty responsibility resting upon them, and it is quite irrespective of the way in which Christian people discharge their obligation.

It will not avail for you, reader, if you are lost, to say that Christians were not as faithful in their dealings with you as they ought to have been; that they did not hold up before you the light of such shining examples as they ought to have done. Their failure at any point, or at all, will not atone for your guilt. "Every man must give account of himself to God."

We charge you, impenitent friends, that knowing enough for salvation, you refuse it. We charge that in this land of light and knowledge, of Sabbaths and sanctuaries, you yet deliberately choose darkness. We charge that knowing your Lord's will, knowing that there is no salvation out of Christ, knowing that pardon is free to every one that will take it, you yet reject Christ. We charge that in spite of the voice of instruction and warning from the pulpit, in spite of the monitions of conscience, in spite even of the strivings of the divine Spirit with your guilty soul, you remain deliberately in in your impenitency. We charge that you shut your eyes and stop your ears and harden your heart, and go deliberately toward eternal death.

The responsibility is yours, yours only. If you should never hear another word of Christian exhortation, if the Gospel message could never again be sounded in your ears, if the Bible should be henceforth to you a sealed book, if God's law of the Sabbath should become to you a dead letter—nevertheless you and you only would be responsible for the loss of your soul.

How much more, when all these means of grace are continued to you, are you responsible for your own soul! Face this most solemn responsibility now, we beg you, before it is too late.

Sing More.

Cultivate singing in the family. Begin when the child is not yet three years old. The songs and hymns your mother sang, bring them all back to your memory and teach them to your little ones; mix them all together to meet the similar moods, as in after life they come over us so mysteriously sometimes. Many a time and oft, in the very whirl of business; in the sunshine and gayety of fashionable life, some little thing wakes up the memories of early youth—the old mill; the cool spring; the shady tree by the little school-house—and the next instant we almost see again the ruddy cheeks, the smiling faces, and the merry eyes of schoolmates, some grayheaded now, most "mouldering in the grave." And anon "the song my mother sang," springs unbidden to the lips, and soothes and sweetens all these memories.

At other times, amid the crushing mishaps of business, a merry ditty of the olden time pops up its little head, breaks in upon the ugly train of thought, throws the mind into another channel; light breaks in from behind the cloud in the sky, and a new courage is given to us. The man goes singing to his work; and when the day's labor is done, his tools laid aside, and he is on his way home, where wife and child and tidy table and cheery fireside await him, he cannot help but whistle or sing.

The burglar never sings. Moody silence, not the merry song, weighs down the dishonest tradesman, the perfidious clerk, the unfaithful servant, the perjured partner.—Hall's Journal.

Iron more Useful than Gold.

I have in my hand a gold watch, which combines embellishment and utility in happy proportion, and is often considered a very valuable appendage to the person of a gentleman. Its hands, face, chain and case are of chased and burnished gold. Its gold seals sparkle with the ruby, topaz, sapphire, emerald. I open it, and find that the works, without which this elegantly furnished case would be a mere shell—those hands motionless, and those figures without meaning, are made of brass, investigate further, and ask, what is the spring, by which all these are put in motion, made of? I am told it is made of steel! I ask, what is steel? The reply is that it is iron which has undergone a certain process. So, then, I find the main-spring, without which the watch would always be motionless, and its hands, figures, and embellishments but toys, is not of gold—that is not sufficiently good; nor of brass—that would not do—but of iron. Iron, therefore, is the only precious metal! and this watch an emblem of society. Its hands and figures, which tell the hour, resembled the master spirits of the age, to whose movements every eye is directed. Its useless but sparkling seals, sapphires, topazes and embellishments are the aristocracy. Its works of brass are the middle class, by the increasing intelligence and power of which the master-spirits of the age are moved; and its iron mainspring, shut up in a box, always at work, but never thought of, except when it is disorderly, broken, or wants winding up, symbolizes the laboring class, which, like the mainspring, we wind up by the payment of wages, and which classes are shut up in obscurity, and absolutely neccessary to the movements of society, as the iron mainspring is to the gold watch, are never thought of except when they require their wages, or are in some want or disorder of some kind or other.

Sir Bartle Frere's Testimony.

Sir Bartle Frere, in the course of his visit to the East Coast of Africa, saw much, not only of the natives and the pernicious influence everywhere at work on them, but also of the one redeeming feature in that dark shadow, the one salutary and successful work in progress. He became satisfied from what he saw that the teaching of the Gospel, as he saw it taught, does succeed, and is the only thing that succeeds in that unpropitious region. No diplomacy, fleets and armies, no schemes for civilization, nothing whatever that has been done or imagined for the negro can answer as the few simple truths that appeal to all natures and understandings, from the highest to the lowest in the scale. He was, he says, wholly unprepared for what had been done in Madagascar, at least in the part that he touched at, and only discovered on the proof of his senses that there were spacious churches, Christian congregations, and a ruling race—the race of the Hovas—under the direction of the Queen of Madagascar, united in Christian worship, and acting upon Christian principles in all the ordinary dealings of life. What he was surprised to see, it is only too natural that we should all be surprised to hear, on his testimony. It unavoidably comes to pass that Christianity with us is a concrete idea; we realize it as we see it, and that, of course, in the garb and the circumstance of civilization, and that civilization our own. But the real difficulty is not that of making a savage a Christian, but that of making him an Englishman, which, perhaps, he never can be made. Sir Bartle Frere's testimony on this point is all the more valuable, in that he delivers it with not only Africa and the negro races in his eye, but Asia, too, with its enormous masses of population, its thousand races, its ancient castes, its systems of philosophy or superstition.

The London Times gives this as Sir Bartle Fretre's testimony, and adds his remark, "that without any qualification, the only successful way of dealing with all races of mankind, is to teach them the Gospel in the simplest possible fashion."—Ex.

Little Folks Dropping Kind Words

"Scatter seed!
Small may be thy spirit-field,
But a goodly crop 'twill yield;
Sow the kindly word and deed,
Scatter seed!"

Little folks drop kind words—sow good seed? Yes, they do—here, there, all about—"Apples of gold in pictures of silver." Every little boy and girl born from above, interested deeply and heartily in the love of Jesus, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, as all little folks should be, will drop kind words, they can't help it. And what more beautiful, praise-worthy? Look at an example.

Here is a good little boy dropping kind words—that

"Scatters the gems of the Beautiful
In the depths of the humble soul:
They shall bud and blossom and bear the fruit
While the endless ages roll."

He drops a kind word wherever he is, wherever he goes, at home or abroad, from house to house, in all his visitations and distributions. Wherever there is an opportunity to squeeze in something good, kind, loving, consolatory, heart-cheering, elevating or purifying, he is sure to do it; no opportunity is lost. This dropping kind words or good things is his regular, systematic, constant business; wherever he is, in the morning, at noonday, or at eventide, he is sure to be dropping kind words, words that tell on the heart and conscience for time, for eternity. His heart is full of this dropping—overflowingly. His whole soul is in it. It seems just as easy to drop a kind, gracious, loving word here, there, all about, as to breathe. "Out of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh." Is he in the merchant's office, behind the counter, in the school-room, in the street, by the wayside, in the house, in the kitchen, the parlor, the dining-room, up stairs, down stairs, lying down, rising up, going out, coming in—all the same—out drops a kind word, fresh from a heart of love, soul-kindling. Does he meet a little boy, or a sweet, smiling little girl, a kind word is dropped, invariably. Are the little folks in trouble, tearfully—he is sure to bind up the broken heart by dropping in a kind, cheering, comforting word of grace and consolation.

This perpetual dropping of good things is his meat and his drink. He appears to be made up almost entirely of these blessed, comforting, edifying, heart cheering droppings. They descend like the dew of heaven, or as the rain upon the mown grass. Wherever he visits or goes in the lanes or alleys, in the hovel or in the mansion, among, the rich or the poor, the bond or the free, he is sure to light up every countenance joyfully, by these heavenly droppings. "The widow's heart is also made to sing with joy!" Blessed boy! happy boy!

Oh for a world of these droppings! how soon would it blossom as the rose! Angels would tune their golden harps afresh—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will to men."

"O'er the head of listening children
Christ his sweetest blessing gave,
Little hands may aid his mission
A dying world to save." D. F. N.

The Wonderful Bridge.

One bright morning in June, grandma was standing by the south window of the sitting-room, looking at the great apple tree in neighbor Evans' garden. The green leaves were rustling in the morning breeze, but it was not the leaves at which she was looking just then. The children wanted to know what it was that she saw, and she pointed to a slender thread that stretched from the ground up, up, through the golden sunshine to one of the leafy boughs far up on the big tree, and glistening like a line of silver as it waved in the breeze.

"What is it?" cried the children in a chorus.

"Such a long, long spider's web," said grandma.

"A wonderful bridge," said papa.

"Little Madam Arachnid was up in the tree there, and wanted to get down to the ground, so instead of jumping down and getting bruised, or going away round and climbing down the trunk of the tree, she made that pretty bridge."

"How could she make it?" asked the children.

"Well," says papa, "she always carries with her a little factory—ever so many little spinnerets close together—and when she wants a bridge, a little thread, so fine you could not see it, starts from each spinneret. She puts perhaps a thousand of the gossamer threads together, and then makes the beginning of a rope, like that you see yonder. Then she glues the end of the rope to the limb of the tree, and jumps off into the air and swings down toward the ground, the spinners working as fast as they can, and the shining rope growing longer and longer, and the breeze blowing her gently away from the tree. When she reaches the ground, she breaks off the rope close to the little factory, and fastens it to some stick or spear of grass. All this she does as quick as we can tell of it. When she wants to go into the tree again, she runs up the rope as easily as you go up stairs; and if she wants to prevent any other spider using her bridge, she unfastens the lower end and carries it with her, folding up the bridge as she goes over it.

"Sometimes, when the wind is blowing, Madam Arachnid will fasten an end of her rope to a twig, and jumping off into the air, will let the wind blow her like a kite across to another tree, and then she will have a bridge more wonderful than any suspension bridge that man ever made. Mrs. Spider and Mr. Spider and all the little Spiders, can run backward and forward on this bridge as easily as you can run from one tree to another on the garden walk; but if an unfortunate little fly should try to walk on that same bridge, his feet would stick to it; he could not walk on it at all, and he would have lots of trouble in getting away, and perhaps would stick there till the spiders came out and ate him up."

"Do they make anything besides bridges out of those bright threads?" asked Willie.

"Yes," said papa, "they make a great variety of trains and snares to catch flies, and bugs, and other little creatures. Did you never see cobwebs on the bushes or in the corners of a room?"

"Yes sir. Are they made the same way this is, and are all webs traps?

"Yes, my boy; they are made of the same silky threads as this bridge, tied together so as to make a snare or trap, for the spiders are great hunters and trappers. In hot countries, where the very large poisonous spiders live, they sometimes build their web strong enough to catch birds and small snakes. Sometimes you will see a thick web made in the shape of a round tube. Then it is not a trap but is the spider's house."

"Do people use spider webs for anything?"

"A hundred years ago a Frenchman made a pair of gloves and a pair of stockings of the silk from a spider; and the silk is sometimes used in very delicate scientific instruments, such as surveyor's telescope. Cobwebs made by house spiders are sometimes used in medicine, and are useful to stop bleeding from cuts, etc."—Congregationalist.

Home and Health Hints.

Thermal Architecture.—No. 3.

My wife had some geraniums and other plants she was anxious to keep over winter. I made a tight box of pine boards, large enough to put the pots with the plants into, and my wife pasted several thicknesses of newspaper inside of the box, so as to make it almost a perfect non-conductor of heat. At night she would heat some half-dozen bricks, so as to be rather hot to hold in your hand. These she put into the box with the pots and plants, and wrapped up the whole tight and close with several blankets, and in this way she saved her plants, which are now blooming, although some nights water standing only a few feet from the plants, in a pail, froze over an inch thick with ice.—Fruit Recorder.

The enclosed paragraph has been going the round of the papers during the past winter, and has probably done much good in the way of preserving many valuable house plants. And I wish to state to those who have tried it that it is much better to fix the whole house in a similar manner, and save not only the plants but everything else in the house from freezing.

If all our dwellings were constructed like this box, not only house plants would be saved from destruction by frost, but many a valuable house and many a valuable life would be saved from destruction by fire. A valuable house in this county was burned a few weeks ago in consequence of the explosion of a base-burner in the dead hour of night. Happily no lives were lost; but enough property was destroyed to fix a hundred houses so that a base-burner would be of no more use than the fifth wheel of a wagon.

I have no expectation by anything that I can say of depriving those who have base-burners of the pleasure of burning up their surplus revenue in that fashionable manner. But I wish to hint to those who have them not, that they can fix their houses for less money than they will cost, so that they will have no need of them. You can then extinguish all your fires at bed-time, and sleep in peace without any fear of frost or fire or suffocation by coal gas.

I know of more than twenty houses that are more or less constructed in this way; and I find that those who have expended the most on their houses are the best pleased with their investment. I have lately asked many of them if they would give up the improvement for ten times what it cost. The uniform answer has been that it would be no temptation.

How to Paper Walls:—In papering walls, be sure to remove all old paper and paste, and scrape them perfectly smooth. Dampen the old paper with cloths wet in saleratus water, and it will come off easily; fill up the cracks with plaster of Paris, and if there are any traces of bugs, wash the wall over with a weak solution of carbolic acid and water; this will purify the wall and destroy all mold and vermin. The best paste is made out of rye flour, with two ounces of glue added to each quart of paste; half an ounce will make the paste better. People do not understand how dangerous it is to paste new paper over old paper and paste. Many deaths have ensued from this cause; the air of many sleeping rooms has thus been poisoned. In some old houses several layers of paper have been found on the walls of rooms, and their inmates have died and none could tell whence came the disease.

THE NEW BERLIN TRIALS,

April 13th and 14th 1831,

Attempt by Masons to prevent Public Initiations like Ronayne's.

All who are not Freemasons, and many who are, will read the report of the New Berlin Trial with unfeigned astonishment, surprise and wonder. The people will now understand, beyond the possibility of any mistake, the nature, the awful nature of the Masonic obligations as judicially established in the county of Chenango, N. Y. The shock which this developement has already made in the public mind, so far as the facts have become known, is powerful beyond all parallel. A sensation has been created in this community, too deep to be forgotten, too all-pervading ever to be allayed, too strong ever to be resisted. Much as we have seen and heard of Freemasonry; much as we have read of judicial investigations abroad on the same subject, we are, indeed, ourselves struck with amazement at these developements here at home. All doubts will now be dissipated; all grounds for cavil and dispute entirely done away.

In our last paper we briefly stated to our readers, that Mr. H. C. Witherell had been prosecuted for exhibiting Freemasonry at South New Berlin, and that the trial would take place on Wednesday. Feeling a great anxiety to place before the public the facts which we supposed would be elicited on the trial, one of the editors of this paper attended it, and took notes of the testimony and proceedings. The trial was called on, in the village of New Berlin, at half past one o'clock, P. M.; and with the exception of two or three short intermissions, it occupied the attention of the court until about sunrise on Thursday morning. The greatest and most intense anxiety was manifested by the people for miles around, to see and hear for themselves. We have no doubt that four hundred persons were present, a considerable part of the time; and a large number remained in the court during the whole night. Two adjournments were made to get into a room large enough to hold the assembled throng of anxious spectators.

The cause was ably managed on both sides. The counsel for the defendant, in the course of the trial, went into a full and thorough examination of the oaths, principles, and tendency of Freemasonry; they entered the very sanctum sanctorum of the fraternity, and exposed their secrets in all their naked deformity. It was such an investigation as the society of Freemasons in this part of the world will long, long have cause to remember. In the anguish of their souls and the bitterness of their reflections at their rashness and folly in provoking that investigation, neither we, nor Anti-masons, in no wise participate. And it is to us a matter of congratulation, that we and our friends have only acted on the defensive in this whole proceeding. Well may we exclaim, in the language of one in former times, "they would have it so,"

Mr. Justice Medbury, although a royal arch Mason, is deserving of public credit for the impartial manner in which he discharged the duties that devolved upon him. Sheriff Welch who is also an adhering royal arch Mason, it is but an act of justice for us to say, testified promptly, and without any sort of "mental reservation, or self-evasion of mind whatever." The other two royal arch witnesses, (Messrs. Pike and Clark), testified somewhat reluctantly, and in some instances, at first, objected decidedly to answering the questions put to them though they finally yielded to the requirements of the law.

But what shall we say of the nature, the alarming nature of the testimony elicited on that trial? We have no language at our command to express the feelings with which we heard a part of that testimony given by the witnesses on the stand. To the fraternity, it was as astounding as would have been a thunderbolt from heaven, from a clear and a cloudless sky; it completely unmanned them, entirely destroyed their self-possession, and they seemed to give up all to despair. Look at the the facts! Here we have three citizens—personally reputable and respectable in society—as much so, for aught we know, as any others—men of intelligence and influence—one, the sheriff of our county, and another holding the responsible office of a justice of the peace—all adhering members of the fraternity—roal arch Masons—men who have never yet been denounced by the Order as "perjured villains," and whom no man dare denounce as such—men, also who are in full political communion with the Masonic party—here, we repeat, we find three such men testifying in open court, and under the solemnities of an oath, that the unearthly obligation to keep "a companion royal arch Mason's secrets, Murder and Treason not excepted." has been administered to them within the walls of a lodge room! We speak none of these things for the purpose of aggravating or injuring the feelings of the the witnesses. We cast no reflections upon them, we mean to cast none. It is the soul-debasing and outrageous nature of the Institution that imposes upon its members such awful oaths, to which we ask public attention, and down upon which we call for the execration of every honest and honorable man in community.

In reporting the trial, we have aimed to to be scrupulously exact—"extenuating nothing and setting down aught in malice." Many things, however, of minor consequence, have been omitted: great care has been taken to give the fraternity the benefit of every explanatory circumstance in their favor.

A second trial was had on Friday which resulted the conviction of the defendant, who is fined $25.00. This matter will not rest here; it will be carried into the county court.

JUSTICE'S COURT—APRIL 13th and 14th.

Marshall Dowing, and Jewett Sage, Overseers of the Poor of the town of New Berlin. vs. Harlow C. Witherell. } CHARLES MEDBURY Esq. presiding.

Counsel for Plaintiffs—Nathan Beardslee, John Hyde, and Lyman J. Daniels, Esqrs.

Counsel for Defendant.—Noah Ely, Chas A. Thorpe, and Jno. C. Morris, Esqrs.

PLAINTIFF'S DECLARATION.

The plaintiffs in this suit, being overseers of the poor of the town of New Berlin, complain against the defendant, for that whereas, the said defendant on the 7th day of April, in the year, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-one, at the house of Lodowick Crandall, in the said town of New Berlin, did exhibit or perform for gain or profit certain idle shows, acts, or feats, called a practical demonstration of the first seven degrees of Freemasonry, viz.: Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, Master Mason, Mark Master, Past Master, Most Excellent Master, and Royal Arch. By reason whereof and by force of the statute in such case made and provided, an action hath accrued to the said plaintiffs as overseers aforesaid, to demand and to have of the said defendant the sum of twenty-five dollars.

And whereas also, the said defendant, afterwards, to wit: on the day and year aforesaid, did exhibit for gain or profit, certain paintings of artificial curiosity called a practical demonstration of the first seven degrees of Freemasonry, without having first obtained permission in writing for that purpose signed by two justices of the peace of the said town, and against the statute in such case made and provided, an action hath accrued to the said plaintiffs as overseers of the poor as aforesaid, to demand and have of the said defendant the sum of twenty-five dollars. Yet the said defendant, although often requested, hath not yet paid the said plaintiffs as overseers of the poor aforesaid, the said several sums of money or any part thereof, but to pay the same, or any part thereof, hath hitherto wholly refused, to the damages of the said plaintiffs as overseers of the poor as aforesaid fifty dollars.

Defendant's counsel called for a jury. A venire was issued, and jury summoned by John L. Simonds, a constable and a Master Mason. Counsel for the defendant challenged the array on the ground that constable is a Mason, some of the jurors summoned are Masons, as is also one of the plaintiffs. Plaintiff's counsel declined to argue the question; counsel for defendant read from the statute to show that if a constable be any way interested against or in favor of either party, it is good cause of challenge. Counsel for plaintiffs replied, and denied the cause of challenge; counsel for defendant rejoined, and made a specific offer to prove that the Masonic obligations are of such a nature as to disqualify its members from acting impartially in a case of this kind. Court decided that witnesses might be called to prove the interest existing between the constable and the Masonic plaintiff, and the nature of the Masonic obligations.

Edward C. Williams, called and sworn. Witness is a Freemason of three degrees; knows Downing and Simonds to be Masons, from report.

John Pike, sworn. Witness is a Mason; knows Simonds is a Mason of three degrees, and Downing a Mason of the degree of Royal Arch.

William Greenleaf, sworn. Witness has been a Freemason of three degrees, has taken substantially the oath of a Master Mason as it is in Bernard's Light on Masonry; has heard the same obligation, in substance, found in that book, administered a number of times in lodges; was agitated when he was initiated; had reflected deeply on the nature of the oath; it was the nature and tendency of the oath of a Master Mason that led him to that reflection; thought the oath improper; could go no farther. First and second degrees substantially the same as in Bernard's book.

Cross-examined. Witness is opposed to Masonry; is an anti-Mason in principle; was so before the abduction of Morgan; the oath binds a Mason to keep certain secrets; believed the Masonic obligation would conflict with the laws of his country, and the duty he owed to these laws; the penalty of Master Mason's degree is to have his body severed in two, &c., and his life taken, should he reveal the secrets of Masonry; was told, before his initiation, that there were great privileges in Masonry; led on step by step; knew not the penalty until the last; was blindfolded, &c., when he was initiated; a Master Mason swears not to violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter, knowing them to be such; witness thinks this obligation a privilege elsewhere; joined the lodge he thinks, in 1815 or 16; the lectures inculcate morality; separated from the oaths they are good.

Direct examination, resumed. The oaths and penalties were not explained away to him in the lectures, or in the lodge.

Question by the plaintiffs' counsel—"Where did you get your Masonry?—in the Anti-masonic almanac, in the papers, or in Bernard's book?" Witness answered, "In a just and lawfully constituted lodge."

Here the the counsel for defendant called another witness, but plaintiffs' counsel expressed a wish not to go further into the question, when the array was quashed by the court, a new venire issued, and given to a constable (not a Mason,) who summoned a new jury. The names of the jurors drawn to try the issue, are, Orrin Tayler, Dexter Angel, Samuel White, Nathaniel Foote, Charles Rounds, and Gamaliel Scribner, none of them Masons. Plaintiffs' counsel opened the case, by stating to the jury the nature of the prosecution, and the grounds on which a verdict was claimed. Said Witherell's exhibition was an "idle show," and came under that provision in the statute which prohibits the exhibition of "idle shows, such as common showmen, mountebanks or jugglers" usually exhibit. Said, also, that Masonry was a "distinct society," and "unlike other societies."

Asa M. Calkins, called by the plaintiffs' counsel and sworn. Witness was present at Crandall's on the 7th and saw the exhibition of Witherell as advertised in handbill.

Examined by counsel for defendant.—Asked whether Witherell stated that what he exhibted was true Freemasonry? Objected to by the plaintiffs' counsel and argued on both sides. Objection sustained by court. Witness had seen several performances, but never saw "common showwen, mountebanks, or jugglers," give such an exhibition.

Jeremiah Phillips, called by plaintiffs' counsel, and sworn. Witness saw Witherell's exhibition; a man was blindfolded, brought into the room, with drawers and slippers on, shirt partly on; rope round his neck, led round the room a number of times; knelt down.

Examined by counsel for defendant.—Point of compass pressed to his naked left breast; man had an apron on; oath administered; prayers repeated, when candidate was brought to light, master of the lodge exclaimed—"And God said, Let there be light and there was light," at the same time bandage was jerked off the eyes of the candidate, and men clapped hands and stamped together on the floor, &e. Witness gave a detailed account of the leading points in the ceremonies up to the royal arch degree which we omit.

Here the counsel for the proscution rested their cause.

In opening the defence, counsel for defendant denied that Witherell's exhibition eame under the clause in the statute which prohibits the exhibitions of "common showmen, mountebanks or jugglers," and stated that it was a true and genuine exhibition of Freemasonry, and relied upon the proof of this fact to acquit the defendant.

Asa M. Calkins, recalled. Witness testified substantially to the same as Mr. Phillips, and entered minutely into the particulars of the exhibit on.

William Greenleaf sworn in chief.—[Here an objection was raised by plaintiffs' counsel against calling on Masons to prove their secrets and ceremonies; argued on both sides, overruled by court.] Witness says the exhibition of the first three degrees as described by Phillps and Calkins, is generally correct, the same in substance as he has seen in the lodges at different times.

Cross examined. Witness could have described what Masonry was if he had not seen Bernard's book, or any other publication on the subject; has been told by Masons that Jachin and Boaz was Masonry; knows that alterations have been made in that work; was initiated in Homer lodge; Sewell B. Fletcher proposed him to lodge for initiation; has attended lodge in New Berlin village; thought Masonic ceremonies a "solemn mockery," as the Bible was used in the lodge, &c.

Gen. Augustus C. Welch, (sheriff of the county,) sworn. Witness is a Royal Arch Mason; door of the lodge is tyled by a man with a drawn sword to keep off eowans and eavesdroppers; candidate is divested of his clothing, or nearly so; has drawers on; neck naked, cable-tow round it; bandage over candidate's eyes; candidate led round the room; kneels at the altar and takes the oath. Witness don't rocollect whether in the Master Mason's degree, the oath requires the candidate not to give the Master's word "except on the five points of fellowship, and then not above his breath:" it may be so; there is something either in the obligation or charge, about flying to the relief of a brother Master Mason, when the "grand hailing sign of distress is given, or the word accompanying it;" can't recollect which; thinks it is in the obligation not to "speak evil of a brother Master Mason, but to apprize him of all approaching danger, if in his power;" believes the obligations relative to obeying signs, summons, &c., are taken; witness thinks that in this clause—"Furthermore do I promise and swear, that a Master Mason's seerets, given to me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, when communicated to me, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own election," theword "worthy" was inserted before the words "Master Mason;" witness don't remember the clause read about going on a Master Mason's errend, "barefoot and bareheaded;" thinks there is an obligation to assist "all poor indigent Master Masons, their wives and orphans," etc.; if any part of the obligation is omitted, candidate swears that he will hold himself "amenable thereto whenever informed;" Hiram Abiff is represented as being killed and buried; search is made for him, he is found; a sprig of cassia by his head; brethren attempt to raise him; the first grip is tried, it does not raise him; on trying the second flesh slips off; third (the lion's grip,) is then tried and raises him; in Mark Master's degree, a mark is pretended to be put on eandidate; mallet and chisel produced; a bowl also stained in imitation of blood; chisel applied to or near naked breast, and blow given with mallet; in one of degrees, master resigns his plaee to candidate; other offices also become vacant; lodge is thrown into great confusion, members are noisy, and ridicule candidate, to show him he ought not assume a station for which he is not qualified—the penalty in the Master Mason's degree is—"to have my body severed in two in the midst, and divided to the north and south, my bowels burnt to ashes, and the ashes seattered to the four winds of heaven," &c. In the Royal Arch degree, witness testified to the correctness of nearly all the clauses of the oath; witness has taken this obligation in the chapter—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not give the grand omnific royal arch word, which I shall hereafter receive, neither in the chapter nor out of it, exeept there be present two companion Royal Arch Masons, who, with myself, make three, and then by three times three, under a living arch not above my breath;" he has taken this—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not reveal the ineffable characters belonging to this degree, or retain the key to them in my possession, but destroy it, whenever it comes to my sight;" thinks he has taken this part of it;—Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not wrong this chapter, nor a companion of this degree, to the value of anything, knowingly myself, nor suffer it to be done by others, if in my power to prevent it;" he has taken this obligation—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not be at the exaltation of a candidate to this degree, at a clandestine chapter, knowing it to be such;" he has taken this—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not assist or be present at the exaltation of a candidate to this degree, who has not regularly received the degrees of entered apprentice, fellow-craft, master mason, mark master, past master, most excellent master, to the best of my knowledge and belief;" he has taken this—"Furthermore that I will not assist or see more or less than three candidates exalted at one and the same time;" he has taken this—"Furthermore, that I will not be present at the forming or opening of a royal arch chapter, unless there be present nine regular royal arch Masons;" he has taken this—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear that I will not speak evil of a companion royal arch Mason, neither behind his back or before his face, but will apprize him of approaching danger, if in my power;" he has taken this—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not strike a companion royal arch Mason in anger, so as to draw his blood;" he has taken this—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will support the constitution of the general grand royal arch chapter of the United States of America, also the constitution of the grand royal arch chapter of the State under which this chapter is held, and conform to all the by-laws, rlues and regulations of this, or any other chapter of which I may hereafter become a member;" he has taken this—"Furher more, do I promise and swear, that I will obey all regular signs summons or tokens given, handed, sent, or thrown to me, from the hand of a companion royal arch Mason or from the body of a just and lawfully constituted chapter of such, provided it be within the length of my cable tow;" he has taken this, but it was explained—"Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will aid and assist a companion royal arch Mason, when engaged in any difficulty; and espouse his cause, so far as to extricate him from the same, if in my power, whether he be right or wrong; the explanation of the foregoing clause witness says was made after the oath was administered, and was this: if he saw a companion engaged in a difficulty, or quarrel, with another person, he was to get him away, out of the difficulty, or quarrel, if he could do so: witness has not taken this obligation or any one politieal—"Also, that I will promote a companion royal arch Mason's political preferment in preference to another of equal qualifications; witness swears, that he has taken the following obligation—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that a common royal arch Mason's secrets, given me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast, as in his own, murder and treason not excepted! Witness believes he has taken the obligation to "aid and assist all poor indigent royal arch Masons, their widows and orphans, &c.;" witness believes the penalty of this degree, as read, is correct; which penalty follows: "All which I most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a firm and steadfast resolution to perform the same, without any equivocation, mental reservation or self-evasion of mind in me whatever; binding myself under no less penalty than that of having my skull smote off, and my brains exposed to the scorching rays of the sun, should I ever knowingly or willfully, violate or transgress any part of this my solemn oath or obligation of a royal arch Mason. So help me God, and keep me steadfast in the performance of the same." In royal arch ceremonies, candidates have to go under a "living arch," formed by two rows of Masons joining hands: some one says in a low tone, "stoop low, brothers, stoop low;" then they lower their hands, and the candidates are brought down on hands and knees; as they crawl through they are told they must pass through rugged ways, and chairs and other obstacles are put for them to climb over; there is a representation of the destruction of Jerusalem, at which a great noise is made; also, of the burning bush: in one part of ceremonies, in reply to question—"Are you a royal arch mason?"—the answer is, "I am that I am!"

Counsel for plaintiff declined to cross-examine witness.

John Pike, (a justice of the peace,) sworn. About fourteen years ago witness became a Freemason; is a royal arch; has taken fifteen degrees in Masonry. Witness says part of Master Mason's oath (the first part of which is read to him.) is correct, and part not; asked to say what part is not correct, and answers, the substance is substantially the same; knows of no idea in the part read meterially different from the book; some small variations; witness has taken the substance of this obligation—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not give the grand hailing sign of distress, except I am in real distress, or for the benefit of the craft when at work; and should I ever see that sign given, or the word accompanying it, and the person who gave it appearing to be in distress, I will fly to his relief at the risk of my life, should there be a greater probability of saving his life than of losing my own;' witness has sworn not to wrong the lodge or a brother of this degree, to the value of one cent knowingly; has sworn not to be at the "initiation of a young man in non-age, an atheist, irreligious libertine, idiot, or woman;" the words "old man in dotage," "madman," and "hermaphrodite," as in the book in the foregoing clause, witness knows nothing about; there is an obligation to apprise a brother Master Mason of all approaching danger, &c.; witness has taken this obligation.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

This is a busy time for many of our best workers, so we hope that the Cynosure will be particularly remembered at the State and other conventions which are to occur this month. It will certainly and steadily increase if every one does his duty.

We print the following as an illustration:

"Seeing a wish expressed in the Cynosure that some one would send the paper to the 'Temperance Reading Room at Ripon Wis.,"—and as everybody's business is nobody's, I thought it was more than likely that it would not be done, and as I was going to pass through a section of country where I would be likely to see quite a number of friends, that I would ask them for 25 cents each until I should get enough to send it for one year. So here you have the money less the cost of sending it, and hope it will be much read, and be a blessing to the readers. P ELZEA."

Some one sends as a Centennial receipt to cure diseased souls:

The Christian Cynosure, courage, virtue, benevolence, and that charity that never fail th. The writer adds, "if you are not incurable you have a sure remedy for all the most prevailing diseases of church and state."

Does your subscription expire in May! Can you send in one or two names with your renewal!

Are you raising a club for the Cynosure!

THE CHICAGO CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. IS IT A NECESSITY?

We, the undersigned, desiring to promote the kingdom of God and its righteousness, hereby invite citizens of Chicago who believe Freemasonry and kindred orders to be antagonistic to the will of God as revealed in the Bible, to meet for the purpose of forming a Chicago Christian Association, auxiliary to the State and National Christian Associations, at 221 W. Madison St., Tuesday evening, May 2nd, at 8 o'clock P. M.

PHILO CARPENTER,
REV. JOS. E. ROY,
REV. J. P. STODDARD,
REV. J. W. BAIN,
and others.

The call for the organization of a new society in Chicago raises two natural and appropriate questions. First:—What is its general and special object? Second:—Is there no other organization which can do its work? The following from the New York Witness to some extent answers both these questions. After having preached the Gospel for years with power and success, Mr. Moody in the Hippodrome in New York reads:—"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness? Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you;" and remarks, "Now if that is not a very clear language that if we are going to keep company with God we have got to be separated from the world, I don't know what is. I don't know but that it would be a good thing to stop preaching the Gospel, and preach separation. This idea that Christians have got to be mixed up with ungodly men is contrary to the word of God." With increasing fervor he cries out: "Oh! that some prophet would be raised up that would cry separation until we get the church of God separated from the world! 'Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.' Some say that is matrimony. When I was in Philadelphia I spoke upon the text, and after the sermon a minister came down and said he agreed in almost all I said, 'but I don't think,' said he, 'that it meant secret societies.' 'Do you belong to one?' I said. He said yes. You see people will not admit that a text applies to themselves. I think the thing, however, is very plain. If I am yoked up with an ungodly man how is God going to walk with me? How are we going to walk together except we be agreed?"

The prime object of the National Christian Association and its auxiliary societies has been for the last eight years and is now to preach "SEPARATION." It recognizes three fundamental phases of society; the family, the church and civil government. Its special business is to separate churches and Christians from Freemasonry, (and related societies) which is as antagonistic to true religion as is any other pagan or false worship; and to separate the institution of Freemasonry and its adherents, who acknowledge their loyalty to an absolute despotism, from all participation in the government of the United States, whose adherents, if loyal, believe that all men are created free and equal. To promote this separation of the church and civil government from this formidable enemy which (wherever it can do so) grasps and wields their power while destroying their vitality, is the special object of the Association to be organized in Chicago. Its general object is to promote the separation of Christians, as Christians, from all forms of sin and to promote Scriptural holiness; and to aid all citizens of the United States, as citizens, in preserving and transmitting to coming generations the rich legacy received from our ancestors: a country governed according to the principles of Christian civilization.

The second question: Is there no organization already formed which can do its work? We answer: There is no other organization that WILL; although there are many which ought to do its work. In Chicago there are very few churches which require their members to separate themselves from secret societies. The churches are not able now to do it. They are not sufficiently consecrated to Christ.

The Y. M. C. A. primarily attends to the work of preaching the Gospel. As an Association, it has not reached the height attained by its successful champion D. L. Moody, from which to preach the indispensable necessity of "separation" to Christians.

No one would for a moment regard Mission societies or Temperance unions as capable of doing the work the Lord has put upon those whose business it is "to expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved, to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption."

Is this society a necessity? If you think so will you join us and work for the separation of the family, the church, and the state from those influences which blight all that is sacred, lovely and honest in them?

The society is to be organized May 2nd, 8 o'clock P. M., 221 W. Madison St., 2nd floor. Interesting speeches by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and others. Good music may be expected.

All friends are cordially invited to attend.

The Remedy.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

That Christ is the great physician, and the Gospel the true and only remedy for all moral evil is the grand, blessed truth which we are never to forget. It is not because there is "no balm in Gilead" and "no physician there," that the health of the daughter of Zion is not recovered; but because the physician is not sought and the remedy is not applied.

If secretism is ever to be purged out of the church it will be when the rays of the sun of righteousness will shine so directly upon it that all its hidden abominations shall be made manifest, and men shall learn to abhor it, and this by God's grace we are doing and hope to do more and more.

But is this all? Have we no stumbling blocks to take out of the way? Is there no work of construction which we are called to perform? Yea, verily, Christianity is not a negative system. Its commands are positive. Love is its spirit, and working benevolence is its organic law. Now that the church has largely failed to care for the bodies as well as the souls of men is but too manifest to the world; and Satan, taking occasion by our short comings, has made men believe that there was a need for some other organization as a substitute, or at least a supplement, for the church. Hence Freemasonry has arisen and calls itself the 'handmaid of religion," whose mission is to carry out the work which the Gospel could not accomplish. It says, we will concede to the religions (Christianity, paganism, etc.,) the work of regulating men's beliefs, but since they have failed to do the work of mutual help which we all so much need, we will therefore unite in that religion in which all men agree, and bind ourselves under the most terrible oaths and with most dreadful penalties that we "will help, aid and assist all destitute brethren wheresoever disposed around the globe." Such a compact has really no element of benevolence in it. It is intensely selfish, but it has enough of the semblance of benevolence to deceive the unwary, and it is just here that Masonry has its strength.

Now it is just here that we must meet the enemy. We must show to the world that our holy religion needs no substitute nor supplement, that it is adapted to all our wants and in it "The man of God is thoroughly furnished to every good work and work."

Let us show to the world that our bond of love is a stronger tie than anything earthly could impose; that our obligation of mutual help leads us—if need be—to lay down our lives for the brethren. What we want is a revival of practical benevolence that shall show clearly the difference between the true and the false; between the Divine remedy for all human ill and Satan's quack remedy which is offered as a substitute.

Until we have such a revival we shall make no real progress. We must not only break in pieces the idols, but we must show them the true God. We must not only point out the selfishness of the lodge, but must how them the benevolence of the Gospe And we must love, "not in word only, but in deed and in truth." We must not only hold up to the church the abominations of the lodge, but we must not fail to let the church see her own shortcomings, and that if she would save the world from its iniquities, she must expend far less in costly edifices; far less in personal adornment; far less in the dress parade of sham warfare with evil; and far more in earnest aggressive love for the souls and bodies of men. And this but opens up a view of truth which we trust will be worked to its depths.

—Works without faith are like a fish without water; it wants the element it should live in.—Feltham.

—We must not let go manifest truths because we cannot answer all questions about them.—Jeremy Collier.

What Sayest Thou to These Things?

THE DUTY OF THE CHURCH.

Respected brother Dubs:—In this we will consider the duty of Christian churches respecting erronious systems and their adherents. Christ says to his disciples, "Ye are my witnesses.' This is spoken to his whole church, for all time to the end of the world. This testimony of his followers is in direct opposition to all evil influences whether they are incorporated in a system or held and practiced by individuals. He demands of his followers a willing and perfect obedience to his Gospel rule for this very reason; he requires of us a self-denying life. For this purpose "he gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Titus ii. 14.

This implies a radical change of heart and life in all his followers; deviation from this Gospel rule, by individuals or churches, separates them from him in spirit and life. A church may have disorderly members but if such are reproved and admonished by her to repentance, or excluded after labor, that church is free from their guilt; but if a church takes such under her protection and excuses or apologizes for their transgression, she becomes partaker of their sins, and becomes guilty of the blood of souls; and on the other hand becomes oppressive toward such of her members who conscienciously warn the church against these evil influences.

This has been the case in the past history of the church, and is yet the case at the present time. That church may in some things be a model for others, yet if she lacks this radical principle, this saving "salt", she is condemned by the word of our Lord already. For instance, here is a modle church in some things. He says of it; "And thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith; even in those days wherein Antipas my faithful martyr was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth;" yet that church was blamed and reproved by the Master, and admonished to repent, because she held in her communion and fellowship adherents of strange doctrines. He says concerning them, "Thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols and to commit fornication." Rev. ii.. 13-15. Those members who were guilty of those idolatrous practices professed to be the followers of Christ; yet they compromise with idolators by adhering to the double-faced doctrine of Balaam, and were led into fornication thereby. Is this not the case with the adherents of the lodge of the present time? How many are led by these influences into grievous sins, that pollute and destroy soul and body; and how many are corrupted by them in their moral principles. Is not the believer by faith wedded to Christ, and does he not, when taking upon himself another obligation than Christ's commit spiritual adultery? Paul says to the Corrinthians, "Ye cannot drink of the cup of the Lord's and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and the table of devils."

It is true that an evil system may so infatuate the minds of members and churches that, for a certain length of time, little can be done against the evil. This was the case with the Israelites. Many became so infatuated with this Balaam doctrine, that Moses, the man of God, whilst reproving and warning them against this evil could do little else than wait till God in his own time overthrew the evil, and those who caused it. Yet in such times the church is under obligation to her great Head to bear direct and plain testimony against the evil, "and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Had the churches of our land been faithful to their charge in the commencement of the slavery question, would not that evil have been banished from the land by this Gospel rule, and prevented our late bloody war? Oh when will Christian men learn to obey God rather than man!

It is high time for the churches which harbor this present evil system to repent. Is not the past history of the church a fearful warning? "They that sow the wind, will reap the whirlwind." He says of that church, "Repent or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth." God will visit a people or church, which, after faithful warning continue in their evil course. It is a fact of history when a church becomes lukewarm in the radical principle of the Gospel of Christ and its saving element, it seeks the praise of man instead of God, and stands ready to compromise with evil influences for the sake of popularity. This spirit generally takes hold of the ministry first. In seeking popularity they forsake the true path to honor, and go in the forbidden path of compromise with evil, and by this evil influence and example bring corruption and moral death into the churches of Christ. The apostles warned against this very spirit in their day. Out of this self-seeking spirit grew up the beast of popery with its seven heads and ten horns, and all its spiritual whoredom and abominations; and will the legitimate fruit of its "image" with its secret signs be any better? (See Rev. xiii. 13-17, and 2 Thess. ii. 4-12.) This "image" at a distance looks very innocent and lamblike as if it might be left to go in pasture with Christ's sheep. But look closer. See in its forehead the name the Mystery of Babylon. Then has it not the audacious forehead of the mother of harlots? And its teeth are they not those of the beast of prey? And its mouth, does it not speak great swelling words of blasphemy, and puffs itself up with assumed works of charity; and its eyes are they not full of adultery? Its hands are they not already clenched in revenge? Its feet, do they not trample down and crush out all true testimony against it?

Then, my dear brother, how can the true watchman of Zion remain silent or neutral in the face of such a destructive system and be guiltless?

O that Zion would arise out of her dust in her Lord's strength, and put on her full armor of salvation! Then her light would shine forth as the sun, and her victory would be sure, and the enemies of our Lord would fall repenting at her feet, and acknowledge that the Lord of hosts is with her, and the God of Jacob is her strength. This is the prayer of your humble brother in the Gospel of Christ.

H. W. Hampe.

A Public Wrong to be Confessed.

BY GEO. SOVEREIGN.

Dear Cynosure:—Since brother H. H. Hinman's lecture at this place, March 20th, the friends of Masons have made three stout objections, to what was advanced on that evening. First, such respectable and intelligent men as we know to be Masons would never consent to be initiated into the lodge almost naked; secondly, the raising of Hiram Abiff is too childish for sensible and religious men to ever have been indulged in; thirdly, the solemn obligations of Freemasonry, bound by the most solemn oaths, cannot be made known without the loss of all confidence in the reputation for honesty in the person so revealing. The first two objections to the lecture have been measurably answered by appeals to Masonic writers. On the third I would now bestow some attention.

My present stand is on some of the truths contained in this portion of God's word, Prov. xxiii. 23 33: "He that covereth his sin shall not prosper, but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." One doctrine of this undoubtedly is that sins committed against society or individuals must be confessed and forsaken, or the sinner is left under all the consequences of his transgression; that is, he stands condemned before God, damned forever. For the obligation is to confess, see James v. 10: "Confess your faults one to another, that ye may be healed." The Roman Catholics have gone into sad extremes on this subject. Sins against God alone should be confessed to God; those against our fellows should be confessed to God and those concerned.

I now come to make this solemn but true statement: Freemasonry is a flagrant crime against society, and often the ruin of individuals, which sin must be confessed and forsaken by all who are aware of what they are doing, if they would find mercy at God's hand.

First, then, Freemasonry is a crime against society. The resolve to conceal and never reveal is bad. If any other society were to do so they would be justly suspected of wicked designs against the rest of race. What did the great Master do on such a subject, John xviii., 20: "Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world, I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple where the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing." What did he commend to the notice of his disciples, Luke xii., 3, 4? "For there is nothing hid that shall not be known. Therefore, whatsoever ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed on the housetops." What do you suppose the apostle Peter would have done with such a suggestion from the Master if the secret things had been Masonry? Why, with a voice above the din of scoffers he would have cried aloud, Repent and make your humble confession in the name of the Lord that your sins may be blotted out, John iii. 21: "He that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God."

"Furthermore, do I promise and swear that a Master Mason's secrets, given to me as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall be as safe and inviolable in my breast as in his own when communicated to me,—murder and treason excepted and they left to my own election." Is not this horrid promise upon oath an occasion of the blackest injustice towards others out of the lodge? Look at its workings in every Mason's history, during the conflicts going on in the world! The secret crimes of the Mason are promised concealment on oath, by his brother Mason. How would this concealment work if these guilty wretches are brought to face an innocent brother in the church or courts of law? Will a God of justice let such base partiality pass unrebuked, or let the guilty parties go unpunished unless they confess to the injured and make amends? They have eyes but cannot see who think not.

"Furthermore, I promise and swear that I will aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason, when engaged in any difficulty and espouse his cause, so far as to extricate him from the same, if in my power, whether he be right or wrong." The man given up to the delusion to make such a godless promise, on oath too, will soon find an opportunity to finish his sins by the base act of taking the part of the ungodly against his neighbor, a Christian, the poor, or any one else.

Now, my dear sir, I will not insult your moral sense or that of your readers by asking, ought not these men to come out of the lodge and confess to the world? Then shall we block up their way of return to God and these fellows by calling them perjured villains? God forbid. Such Masons as Mackey and numerous others of their writers are perjured! These confirm the disclosures of the mysteries. They say they are bound by their solemn oaths yet have not kept them, Let such look to themselves! Are they not "perjured villains?"

Horrors of War.

Mr. Warren L. Goss, President of the National Union of Andersonville Survivors, has published a paper showing, from the files in the War Department at Washington, that the total captures of soldiers and citizens by Confederate forces during the war was 188,145, and that of these there died in the Confederate prisons 36,401 persons. The total number taken by Union forces was 476,168, of whom 227 570 were confined in Northern prisons, the rest having been parolled or exchanged. Of these the whole number who died was 30,151—making thus, North and South together, a total of 664,314 persons who were captured, 415,715 who were for a longer or shorter time in prisons, and 66 553 who died in these prisons—the great mass of them far from their homes and friends, and exposed to all the often terrible horrors of a prisoner's condition. Who does not shudder at the thought of what must have been the sufferings and feelings in many an instance? Who will not pray for every cause of war in our country again to be forever kept out of the way, and to have peace in its purest and best and most permanent forms continued?—Christian Instructor.

The Sabbath Question at the Centennial.

American Christians cannot be too greatly interested in the decision of the Exposition managers on this matter, and every indication on their part to stand by the sacred institution, and the principles of our government in respect to it, will be hailed with joy. It cannot be that the dictation of ignorant foreigners will prevail. The last Christian Statesman has the following:

The New York Tribune utters the sentiment of the best part of the community in saying: "The Exhibition is not to be opened on Sunday—a conclusion likely to provoke little comment even from those who oppose it. We enter into no discussion as to the propriety or impropriety of observing this one day with strictness, or observing it at all. The fact is that it is so observed from Canada to Mexico and from sea to sea, except in a few settlements of foreigners. It simply expresses the common-sense and feeling of the people, therefore, to close the great show on the first day of the week.

The managing correspondent of the Boston Journal of Commerce, stationed at Philadelphia, writes to that paper in its issue of the 25th of March in relation to the opening of the Exposition on the Sabbath day: "The Sunday question is formidable, and whichever way it is decided, the Centennial Commission will be ironed out flat. Their position is not enviable. A manager told me the other day, he would open his theater for two performances on Sundays if the Commission opened their doors. I do not wonder at religious people trembling at the prospect before them. The wedge once entered, down goes the Sabbath of the American Christian. I am not saying this in any sort of a partizan sense, for I am not given to that sort of a thing, but it is well for religious people to look this matter square in the face. The press of Philadelphia, and everywhere else for that matter, is divided upon the subject. The foreign influence is determinedly in favor of opening the doors; the American element says open and shut. The former of the latter stands for the class of persons who represent the lower strata, and the latter of the latter the best classes. Once open the exhibition on Sunday, and forever will license be licentious in this city, and from this the influence will be centrifugal, extending over the continent at large. I think there is no dodging this conclusion.

"Sad will be the day when any city allows its theaters to invite Sunday visitors. Already a German variety show on Third street insults the best elements of Philadelphia, and the weak-kneed Mayor, afraid of the German vote, dare not enforce the law, to his shame be it said. One cannot say that theatrical managers are illogical in concluding that if one show is open they have a right as well to be; for they have such a right. The religious and moral classes are doing but little to stop the affair, and if they did all they could it would not be much, for a politician in this world, though he may be the vilest of men, is the ruling influence. . . . Then again the Centennial Commission is not a highly religious body of gentlemen. They are powerless, because they say they are, not at all because they need be. They talk of 'pressure,' and I doubt whether one-third of them will dare vote against the desecration of the Sabbath. If they know what their command will entail upon the United States of America, they will put their foot flat upon the measure, now and for all the time. If they vacillate they are gone; and then, to think of the train of evil following in the wake. . . . . I do not know what the sense of the people is upon this question of opening the Exposition on Sunday, but I know very well what one man's vote would be, if he had one among the voices of Commissioners; neither would he care for the blackest of ink from the blackest of journalists the world over. I am not arguing the religious character of Sunday, nor the responsibility of man for its observance; but the Americans want a check; they are driving too fast; one day in seven man must rest, or, like the French nation, die before fairly started in life. That day of rest is Sunday, and now comes up the question: Are the people of the United States willing to have their day of rest broken up and destroyed by the rabble, greedy for gold, at the sacrifice of Sunday; a day the feature and pride of the Republic; a day the observance of which has made the people what they are, and has done more to prolong life than all other influences combined?"

The Mason's Heaven.

We read in the Masonic Monitor about the seven stars of Osiris, the Clouded Canopy, and a bogus ladder charged to Jacob. By way, en passant, the rounds of that ladder are Christian virtues and the sides Israelitish pillars.

On an assurance given by Past Grand Master Scott of Mississippi, in his keystone of the Masonic Arch, page 229, that this "sombre piece of drapery," called the "Clouded Canopy," is a symbol of God's presence, we essay to jump the cloud and ensconce ourself within the folds of the canopy, in order to scrape an acquaintance with the god of the Blue Lodge degrees. For the purpose we have resolved to mount that ladder and by the stolen virtues of St. Paul, mount we do, up we go, into the sanctum sanctorum we get, and behind the cloud we pop! Ha! ha! ha!

"We're up in a balloon, boys,
Up in a balloon,
All among the LITTLE STARS,
A sailing round the MOON."

Though the fumes of sulphur wax strong, for the continued cohesion of our corporeal parts, we hope the thing "won't dynamite" just now. Before entering this "workshop of the devil," we had the presence of mind to provide ourself with a capital appliance with which to ward off "all approaching danger" and shield both "front and rear" against any "sudden and adverse attack" for which this place is so widely noted.

Looking about we discover, that the "little stars" notwithstanding 'tis said

"They meet upon the level
To part upon the square," are very unequal in their fraternal relationship with each other. They are of different magnitudes and move in regular gradation. They represent seven constituting officers of the lodge. This we know by ocular demonstration, for whenever we tipped our "tile" to one of the "select and chosen few," his bright particular star would coruscate like a flash in a thunder storm. These "lit le stars" revolve under the cognomens of worshipful master, senior warden, junior warden, treasurer, secretary, senior deacon, and junior deacon; titles originally assumed when the morning stars first sang together, which fact proves Masonry to be older than the garden of Eden, by several degrees, notwithstanding the serious mistakes made in the construction of that Bethel ladder, and the extreme youth of the English vernacular.

Pardon digression from our pencil sketch. An incident occurred just now. A widow with several tender duplicates sent in a petition for relief, and the brethren with accustomeda promptness, perfect harmony, and any amount of universal benevolence, unanimously voted to throw the petition to the dog Cerberus under the sacred altar, who for sweet charity's sake received it with the due-guard and sign of a Master Mason, —whereupon the brother junior warden, forthwith called the craft from labor to refreshment. They refreshed. Who says Masonry is not a glorious institution—the widow's tear of joy, and the orphan's prayer of gratitude? We notice the "ever faithful" invariably address their officers by their distinctive official cognomens prefixing in each instance the mealy mouthed epithet of "brother," except in the case of the worshipful master, to whom they always apply the "endearing" and "contrite" term of worshipful only. We shall ne'er look upon such scene again, neither in heaven above nor earth below. It is an event for a lifetime. Long to be remembered, and never to be forgotten. J. H. WOODWARD.

TME AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

No Choice of Evils.

NEW CONCORD, O.

I noticed in your paper an article signed by N. H. Dorsey, who doubts the propriety of bringing out the third Presidential candidate at this time; that we cannot hope to elect; that the best policy is to choose the least of two evils. Truly we need not hope to elect this year, but we may make a start, and may elect some other year. I gave my first vote for James G. Birney in 1844, not expecting that he would be elected, though so unpopular (only eight votes given for him in the township) yet I felt happy in doing so, not knowing how or when slavery would be abolished, but I knew I was right; I knew the end would come sometime, and left the how and when with Him whose ways are not our ways.

It may be well to consider the propriety of chosing the least of two evils. A choice may be made between two physical evils; but is it right to choose any moral evil knowing it to be so? If the Republican party chooses a candidate for President, possessing the qualifications of our late Vice-President, and the Democrats choose one whose principles are in direct opposition, then seemingly, it would be consistent to vote for the Republican candidate; but unless the platform corresponds therewith, there is not much gained. If a temperance man is elected to an office by either of the two contending parties of the day, one who desires office, not having a temperance platform to back him, he will not make a live active man in the cause of temperance, knowing that many of his constituents are in favor of rum.

I have been troubled for the last few years to know whether it would be better to support the American party, the principles of which contain the several reforms of the day, or support a party with but one reform, thinking that by taking but one reform at a time it would succeed sooner, and upon this theory I supported the prohibition party to some extent for the last few years, but believing that the leaders of it may be in opposition to other important reforms, and as we can endorse the platform of the American party, it would be well to support it, and leave the consequences with the God of nations.

S. Harper.

I intend to do all I can in electioneering for Walker and Kirkpatrick. I think a good lecture in this place would get a great many votes. Some think this is the wrong time to run an anti-secret man for President. My judgment is that it is the very time if the brethren friendly to the cause will only go to work in earnest, and my prayer to God is that they will do their duty. Isham Benefiel.

The Indiana State Political Convention will meet in Muncie, Delaware Co., on the 23rd day of May at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of putting in nomination candidates to be voted for, for State officers at the October election, and to select electors for President and Vice-president, and for transacting any other business coming properly before the convention.

Bro. Needles still pushes onward in Missouri. The last number of the Freeman has the following on the local political issues of Albany, where it is published:—

If every man that is in for reform, had been in town on Monday evening the third of April, and seen how much alarm was among the craft because there was a town ticket got up without any Masons' names on it, he would have supposed that the liberties of the people were in danger of being swept away as with a besom of Destruction. The whole band of "mystic brothers" was set in motion. Such a turn out on such a short notice could not have been called together, (we guess) unless one of the greatest of the Sanhedrims had been in eminent danger, and the cry of "Is there no help for the widow's son" had been heard to ring forth through the night air, then, of course, it would have been the duty of the whole craft to respond to the call, and to the rescue of their dear brother clansman. Whenever the people outside of the clans become as much in earnest about their liberties as the mystic brotherhood are about keeping control of the government, then we will see the people of America arise, declaring their determination to throw off the yoke of these self-constituted lords, and putting men in office that will deal out equal justice to all men.

The Thoughtful Men of the Republic Preparing to Act.

It may be necessary, says the Evening Post, to say, in regard to the following circular, that it was not at once given to the press, because it was addressed to individuals and not to the public, but inasmuch as the subject-matter has been mentioned by one of the public journals, it is thought proper that the full text of the document should now be printed:

"New York, April 6, 1876.

"Dear Sir:—The widespread corruption in our public service which has disgraced the Republic in the eye of the world and threatens to poison the vitality of our institutions; the uncertainty of the public mind and of party counsels as to grave economical questions involving in a great measure the honor of the government, the morality of our business life and the general well being of the people; and the danger that an inordinate party spirit may, through the organized action of a comparatively small number of men who live by politics, succeed in over-riding the most patriotic impulses of the people and in monopolizing political power for selfish ends—seem to render it most desirable that no effort should be spared to secure to the popular desire for genuine reform a decisive influence in the impending national election.

"Mindful of the fact that this patriotic desire is honestly struggling for effective expression inside of existing political organizations, as it is also strong outside of them, and believing that by all proper means it should be encouraged and made to prevail, the undersigned invite you to meet them and others of like purpose, who have been invited in the same manner, in a free conference to consider what may be done to prevent the national election of the Centennial year from becoming a mere choice of evils, and to secure the election of men to the highest offices of the republic whose character and ability will satisfy the exigencies of our present situation and protect the honor of the American name.

"The conference will be held in the city of New York, on the 15th of May. You are respectfully and urgently requested to be present, and to communicate your acceptance of this invitation to H. C. Lodge, Esq., Post-office box 1938, New York city. Very truly yours.

"William Cullen Bryant, N. Y.
"Theodore D. Woolsey, Conn.
"Alex'r H. Bullock, Mass.
"Horace White, Illinois.
"Carl Schurz, Missouri."

One of the most discouraging signs of the times is the way members of Congress and politicians crowd round any one of their set who has been found out in dishonest and disgraceful conduct. We all remember the serenading and hand-shaking of men of whose guilt no one entertained any doubt, but who had succeeded in excluding the evidence necessary to convict them; and now we see Belknap gets a sort of ovation when he tries to snirk a trial altogether. Go on, gentlemen; that's the way to the pit of political perdition, to say the least, and the sooner Washington is cleared of all who sympathize with Belknap, Babcock, Harrington and Shepherd, the better.—*N. Reform News and Notices.

Eighth Anniversary of the National Christian Association will be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20 to 23.

Indiana---Special Notice.

The Anti-masonic convention of the Indiania Eldership of the Church of God, will meet at Yellow Lake Bethel on Friday evening, the 5th of May, 1876. Let there be a general turnout of the brotherhood and all who feel a deep interest in the cause of God.

Indiana State Convention.

Having been notified of the action of the committee on Political Action, and that a convention is called to meet in Muncie, Ind., on the 23d of May, at 10 o'clock A. M, we have decided to call a State meeting at the same time and place, to continue as long as the State Association judges best. Let there be a full attendance of all the friends of reform in the State. We hope to meet Bro's. Stoddard and Ronayne, and others, as well as our own State lecturer. Let the county associations be represented, and also the different churches of the State.

Peter Rich,
Chairman Ex. Committee.

—The General Agent with Mr. Ronayne are in Connecticut this week attending the State Convention at Waterbury. They will probably visit other localities in the State before returning.

—The return of the former may be hastened from a serious loss sustained by the burning of his home in Byron, Ill., last week Tuesday. A statement by the Treasurer of the N. C. A. on the eighth page should be read by all.

—The Illinois agent visited Montrose, Iowa, in the south-eastern part of the State, before going on to the State Convention with Hon. J. B. Walker, this week.

—Mr. Ronayne's health is much improved, and as the roads become settled, he will on his return from Connecticut, give attention to correspondents and meet all appointments that may be made for him.

—Rev. J. T. Kiggins, State agent and lecturer for Indiana, sends us word that he has resigned that position. He has yet a few appointments in Cass county to fill. Rev. John Breden of Marengo, Lawrence county, will respond to calls for lectures in southern Indiana. Dr. S. L Cook of Albion, and Rev. C. F. Wiggins of Angola, were designated by the last State Convention as assistant lecturers, and may be corresponded with in this respect.

—We do not know how the State Association's account stands with the agent, but would suggest to the friends in Indiana that an earnest effort to settle any accounts should be immediately made. Send your donations for this work to your State treasurer, Peter Rich, Westfield, Ind.

—Rev. N. D. Fanning of Marengo, Ill., whose eloquent address at the second meeting of the Illinois State Association in this city will be remembered, is soon expecting to travel through Indiana and part of Ohio, beginning at Lima, Allen county, O., and journeying towards Chicago, via., Ft. Wayne, Goshen, Elkhart, and Laporte. Friends along this route can make arrangements with Mr. Fanning for lectures to the great advantage of their communities.

—Bro. A. J. Weaver of East Sandy, Venango Co., Pa., writes that it is proposed to secure a series of lectures from Elder Baird at that place soon. The address of Rev. H. W. Hampe, for which Bro. W. inquires is at Linéville, Crawford Co., Pa.

—Past Master Ronayne has an appointment at Hartsville, Indiana, the seat of the United Brethren college of that name, for the 15th to 17th of May next.

From the General Agent.

Jackson, Mich., Apr. 13, 1876.

Dear K:—On my arrival last evening I found Bro. Harry Wilcox and sons ready to welcome a pilgrim and to extend the generous hospitality of their cheerful home. Sister Wilcox is slowly recovering from a serious illness but with renewed "faith in God" is determined by his grace to fight the good fight to the end. With this aged couple who have walked together for over fifty eventful years, I spent the evening, and it was very instructive as well as gratifying to listen to the narration of facts and events which have been shaping not individual characters alone but the character of our whole republic.

Father Wilcox has lived to see a generation fade away, until, like the once dense forests of Michigan, there remains only here and there a riven, shattered trunk, covered with scars and bending feebly towards the bosom of "Mother Earth." As I listened to his tremulous voice and saw the unbidden tear coursing his furrowed cheek, I thought how wise, how merciful and how wonderful the provision that when the earthly tabernacle shall be dissolved, he hath "a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens."

At a village near Bro. W.'s home in New York was a lodge of Freemasons, and although often solicited to join he positively refused to fellowship this unfruitful work of darkness and never ceased to reprove it, and through a long, eventful and successful life has never seen cause to regret this course. Others among his comrades yielded, and so far as he has observed or been able to learn from others, not one of the number ever attained to permanent success in business, or gave evidence of being prepared to enter joyfully upon the life to come. Some have died of dissipation and some in the poor-house. One man of steady habits owning a well-stocked farm joining Bro. W.'s, and having beside four or five thousand dollars on deposit, joined the lodge at fifty years of age and being thus brought into familiar associations with base men in their nocturnal conclaves he soon entered upon a course of dissipation which terminated in utter ruin, and landed his soul in a drunkard's eternity. Other cases equally marked and sad had come under his own observation, which were the legitimate if not the inevitable result of lodge life and lodge influences. These sad pictures had made a deep impression on Bro. W.'s mind and when he remembered how many of his companions in youth had been slain by this assassin, secretism, the old man wept like a child.

It would seem that such instances, that can be multiplied indefinitely, and traced directly to the late hours, un-Christian influences, and dissipated character of lodge associations ought to be a warning sufficient to deter any man not bent upon his own destruction from entering this way to death and hell. It is true that not every one entering the lodge ends his life in poverty or dissipation. but not one of all the number escapes entirely unscathed. The denial of Christ, the heathenish rites and the blasphemous oaths, with their horrid imprecations, must leave the "mark of the beast" upon the soul, even though the influence of early training or other causes should so neutralize the lodge poison as to leave some soundness in the bodies and morals of its victims.

Bro. W. supplements to his personal efforts with liberal contributions to aid in this great conflict, and watches carefully the movement upon the whole field. When the State Agent called recently, he departed $15 better furnished for the work, and the State Lecturer following soon after found three times $15 with $5 added in waiting, to encourage his heart and nerve his arm for the war. This is a good example and if followed by all the friends in proportion to their means, there would be no lack of funds for the work in this State.

There are those who are strongly opposed to the lodge, who nevertheless sustain it and perpetuate its influence by supporting its adherents. This, to my mind, is wrong. It is like furnishing the rebels with food and ammunition while striving to crush the rebellion. Such a course is suicidal. The church or the state cannot afford it. The time has fully come when the lodge should be compelled to sustain its own functionaries whether in the pulpit or out of it, and Christian men should no longer support this anti-Christian system of usurpation that is using its power to rob and plunder the "cowans" in the outside world, of their liberties and of their money. Let the church and the nation arise and in one grand indignation movement which shall eclipse that Chicago meeting of forty thousand loyal citizens hurling their anathemas against "bummers," as the whole nation eclipses the single city of Chicago, and sweep away this whole system of lodge bummerism by which our land is cursed. Let the men who meet in midnight conclave to drill for war and who appear on public occasions with plumed heads and with daggers in their hands be sent to the asylum, or at least retired from every office of trust or honor, and let the administration of this government be committed to men who are not sworn to practice a system of favoritism which compells them to rob honesty and integrity to pamper and perpetuate those leeches that are sucking the very life blood out of our body politic.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Apr. 18, 1876.

My journey thus far has been made pleasant and profitable by meeting several personal and warm friends of our cause on the cars. From Cleveland to this place I enjoyed the Christian conference and fellowship of Bro. A. H. Phelps who was on his way to a field of labor in Connecticut and whose sympathies and prayers are with us. He is a very earnest, zealous worker for Christ and only needs information to become a power against the lodge. He once joined the Odd-fellows in New Haven, Ct., but soon left them. I showed him one of the exposes of that system and he pronounced the signs, etc., correct and after examining the book more carefully he will give us in writing his statements concerning it. I also met and passed some hours with Bro. B. T. Roberts on the train. Bro. R. fears that it will be inexpedient for him and for many of his people to attend our June meeting on account of its falling within the time of their general camp-meeting season. It may be however, and I hope it will be so ordered in the providence of God that many of our Free Methodist brethren will be able to unite their prayers and counsels with others in the Eighth Anniversary.

At Jackson, Mich., I met Bro. E. P. Hart in the depot, who is full in the faith and abundant in works.

I have seen none of the "leaders" since coming here, but we all know where to find them on every question of reform. Bro. Kinney is away attending conferences, and Bro. Stratton is momentarily expected. Things about the Wesleyan office look cheerful and give unmistakable evidence of thrift and good management. Would that such establishments might be greatly multiplied! Yours,

J. P. STODDARD.

WHEATLAND CENTRE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Rev. J. L. Barlow, our State Lecturer, paid us a visit a short time ago, on the 30th and 31st of March. He gave lectures, also formed an Association here of twenty-eight members. We have had one meeting since he left, which was quite well attended, and somewhat interesting. There are not very many Masons just about here, but there are quite a number of grangers, or Patrons of Husbandry, some of whom are considerably stirred up. But we mean to cry aloud and spare not the green monster, secrecy, in whatever form it may come to us. Thank the Lord there are a few who are not afraid to speak out their thoughts; no doubt there are many who will fall into the ranks when they see that they will not have to stand alone. If we could have some man sent to our county to canvass it and form Associations, I think we could poll quite a respectable vote this fall for Messrs. Walker and Kirkpatrick. In the course of a few days I think I shall be able to send you two or three subscribers for the Cynosure, but fearing I may weary your patience I shall close, praying that the good Lord will hasten the day when secrecy shall be done away with in our land.

M. M. COMSTOCK,
Secretary Wheatland Association.

Correspondence.

The Protestant Episcopal Church and Freemasonry.

Feeling great concern and a deep interest in the cause of Christ, and beholding in so many, both ministers and laymen, such indifference in regard to coming out from the world and being separate as God would have them, I, although an obscure layman, of the P. E. church, cannot refrain from raising my voice in behalf of a much needed reform. I feel that I am almost alone so far as man is concerned, especially in my church, but with God and truth on my side we are a majority. As I am a member and cannot help seeing the dire effects of this evil, I do not feel willing to submit any longer without a voice in the matter. I know that the chances for a reformation in our church look small indeed, when I consider how many of our ministers are Masons and how large a per cent of laymen also are, and the remainder with few exceptions are silent slaves of the secret lords. Can it be possible that ministers whose commission is to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ through his death and resurrection, on Sunday, should on St. John's day of the same week, and to many of his Sunday audience, laud Freemasonry and tell of its power to prepare men for heaven through the death, burial and resurrection of Hiram Abiff? I ask can such ministers be innocent? Can he be innocent who goes in the darkness of night to the lodge and there swears allegiance to an institution that positively excludes nearly nine-tenths of the whole human family, including his own wife and children? I ask again, can a minister be innocent who goes to a funeral of a good member of his church, and gives him Christian burial to-day, and to-morrow attends the funeral of a dead Mason, it may be an infidel or drunkard, and there dressed in all the toggery of the lodge transfers him to the "Grand Lodge above" where the Grand Architect presides, thus teaching that God is a Freemason and heaven is a lodge? Can I be innocent if I use my means and influence, small though they are, for the support and defense of such ministers? I ask again, can I be innocent in patronizing ministers who go into the lodge and there swear to do wicked things and then call on God to help him to do them; is it my duty to attend upon the ministrations of such apostate ministers and receive the elements of bread and and wine at their hands?

But, says one, Masonry or other sins does not invalidate their acts. That may be; but I think it is my privilege and my duty to receive those mercies through purer channels.

It almost seems to me as if Masonic Christians act as if they thought God's plan of salvation was not quite perfect and sufficient, so they adopt the devil's plan, and by putting the two together they feel sure of their own salvation, leaving all the women and children and cowans to be saved by the old way. If all true Christians believe that the Christian religion and the church are all-sufficient for their soul's salvation, what occasion has Bishop, priest or layman to adopt another and false religion, as all Masons do?

May God speed the time when men will preach the Gospel for the glory of God and not to please the world.

LINUS CHITTENDEN, a seceding Mason.

A Window for a Testimony.

NORTH CANAAN, Conn., April 19, 1876.

I am an old man of 81 summers, and wish to give the public a little of my experience. I lived in the town of Sheffield, Mass., and attended the dedication of a church in Canaan, Conn., about eight years ago, which had Masonic emblems on three of its windows. They were anxious to raise money to pay its indebtedness, and solicited donations. I gave them fifty dollars and they wanted more, so I told the trustees that I would give fifty more for the privilege of a memorial window, which they were glad to grant.

My inscription was "Jesus, the true light and Master Teacher, in secret said nothing." The minister preaching there, being a Mason, did not like it; wished me to alter the inscription; that I did not like to do. They put me off by various excuses, and so it run along for about three years. When I was in New York, I went into several establishments where they manufactured such windows, and one told me he would make one for ten dollars. I told the trustees of this, but they would not get it made, but said I might. So I took out the window and sent it down to New York, and it came back and I put it into the house.

In a short time Robert Van Dusen, a Mason, and mighty big man, hired a a painter to put a thick coat of paint over the light and then after a short time to take it out and put in a plain glass in its stead. Their preacher, Wm. Hall, who was a Mason and lodge chaplain, with R. Van Dusen slandered me as bad as they could by word and deed. So the minister and people showed their disregard to all moral principle. MILES BELDEN.

"The Mark of the Beast" Reviewed.

SAYBROOK, Ill.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

There appeared in the Religious Telescope of Jan. 19th, and republished in a subsequent number of the Cynosure, an article entitled "The Mark of of the Beast," which was doubtless written with reference to the church and society on my charge, and which I regard as an outrage upon the moral standing of said society and trustees. Their character, I feel in duty bound, as their pastor, to defend so far as I can consistently with truth; especially since the story is being republished in

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1876.

Another Fire!!

Not this time in Chicago, but Byron Ill., where the pleasant home of our General Agent on the banks of the Rock River was totally consumed last week. The efforts of willing neighbors saved the furniture and movable goods, but Mrs. Stoddard and five children are left without a home, and the husband and father far away at work for the reform. The Association has not been able to pay him fully for his services since Jan. 1, 1875, and there is now due him some FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS. Bro. Stoddard needs this money immediately. The Publishing House Fund is all invested and the Treasurer is at liberty to use only the interest of it for the payment of salaries. So once more there is a necessity for friends to help. Contributions to the General or Lecture funds will be applied on what is due the General Agent Direct to H. L. KELLOGG, Treas., No. 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

THE SPIRITUAL HARLOTRY OF ROME.

Could we see New Testament piety pure and simple, meeting and maintaining Christ's truth, worship and discipline in the local churches of Palestine, Asia Minor and regions adjacent; and could we separate and set apart from that New Testament Christianity, the centralization, secrecy, ceremony, mystery and show which men have invented and added to the religion of God, and which, in the words of the learned Mosheim, reduced Christianity in the dark centuries to "Mimic shows and trifling," we could then see exactly in what the papacy consists—what it is made of.

"The most Reverend Dr. James Butler's Catechism," which is the one in common use in the Romish Sunday Schools in this country, contains "The Apostles' Creed," an epitome of Gospel truth which Protestants can and do repeat with them; and it teaches the children that God "has graciously promised every blessing even heaven itself, through Jesus Christ, to those who keep his commandments." And the Catechism contains some good prayers and sound instructions. But along side of, and intermingled with these, the Catechism also contains another religion which is strictly human in its origin, and yet which exerts spirits which inhabit it, by the evil a superhuman and supernatural power over mind. Such are "the six percepts of the church," following the ten commandments and equally binding on the soul These require the child from the age of seven years, to confess regularly to a priest; to keep a multitude of fast days and holy days; make the sign of the cross; and a host of observances, which, having no divine authority, are disregarded by God. And yet the commandments of the church are enforced with a far more terrific sanction than the commandments of God. Thus we have:

"Question—Is it necessary to keep all and every one of the ten commandments? Ans.—Yes. The scripture says, whosoever shall offend in one, is become guilty of all."

But the commandments of the church are enforced thus:

"Question.—Do the precepts of the church oblige under pain of mortal sin? Ans.—Yes.

Question.—Where shall they go who die in mortal sin? Ans.—To hell, for all eternity."

So much more fearful is it to disobey the church than to disobey God.

Thus, in Popery, Satan has achieved precisely what he failed to achieve with Christ, viz: a union of Christ's worship and religion with his own; his own still, as above shown, having the pre-eminence! Had the Savior consented to worship him, that terrible combination would have taken place at once of Christ's power and Satan's which we now see in Romanism, and which was not accomplished until the sixth century, when the papacy was complete.

Common worldliness, or, in scripture terms, "The friendship of the world" is "enmity with God," because Satan is its "prince" and "god." But it is easier to convert a thousand worldlings than one false religionist, who worships Satan, as do all Gentiles; and so his captivity is made complete. Then again, as it is easier to convert a worldling than a pagan, so it is easier to convert an ordinary pagan than a papist. For the power of ordinary paganism is only the mesmerism or enchantment which Satan exerts over the soul of his worshiper. But in Romanism both influences meet. The very influence of the truth and Spirit of God, is made to subserve the interests of the devil! "The abomination that maketh desolate standeth in the holy place!" Hence, popery is the mother of all spiritual harlots and abominations. Dr. Stowe used to describe the papal power over mind as the power of "depravity and conscience united," and his analysis is correct. The power that binds the Romanist to his mass includes the power of both truth and falsehood; perfect truth and perfect falsehood; Christ's power and Satan's; that which takes a Christian to his prayer-meeting, and the Chinaman to his pagoda.

Says the Catechism:

"Ques.—What is the mass?

Ans.—The sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ which are really present under the appearances of bread and wine, and are offered to God by the priest for the living and the dead."

Thus Christ does not make the sacrifice, but the priest. He has Christ's body and blood, in the shape of bread and wine in his hands, and can sacrifice or not as he pleases.

Thus the very atoning death of Christ, the blood which he shed for us, becomes by the falsehood of the mass, a tool of incantation in the hands of a priest, and that blending of the two systems, which Satan sought when he asked our Savior to worship him and promised him the vicegerency of the kingdoms of the world, is achieved in and by the mass.

And history as well as analysis, shows that the power of the papacy, which is Christianity alloyed and so destroyed, is far mightier than that of simple paganism. Direct and open calls to idolatry would be scouted by Americans, but they can be induced to practice some rites (!) not given by Christ; and this is the essence of popery no matter by what name those rites are called! And popery, as we have seen, is mightier than paganism.

It is said by Coledrige, "It is a profound question to answer, why, since the middle of the sixteenth century the reformation (from popery), has not advanced one step in Europe!" But the case is worse than the question of Coleridge puts it; the reformation has actually gone back, in some principalities, while in others the Protestantism is little better than popery with the name changed.

In England, the Protestant State Church, established by act of Parliament in the first year of Elizabeth; has been regarded by prominent Americans as "The Bulwark of Protestantism in Europe." But that State Church is itself rapidly and steadily drifting toward popery. In 1843, an attempt was made to rally the English church and nation against the Oxford Tractarians, of whom Bishop McIlvaine said, "They have not put the church on the road to Rome; they have taken it there." The result was, only four thousand, out of the sixteen thousand clergymen of the establishment, could be induced to petition Parliament against that open attempt to Romanize their church. And so entirely has the old cry of "no popery," lost its power on the English people, that another Guy Fawkes and a gun powder-plat, would only furnish a respectable sensation for the London Times.

In our country, a similar revolution in favor of dropping out the atonement of Christ from Christianity and substituting ceremonies in its stead, has been and is still steadily going on; every year the observance of Christmas and Easter and Lent is becoming more marked and obsequious Every reader of the newspapers, even the most superficial, has noticed the general drift of sentiment toward ritualism, and ritualism is Romanism. But this general apostacy from Christ and his atonement is attested by proofs more substantial than newspaper paragraphs. The grand-children of the men who taught theology at Andover and Lane, are becoming ritualists and Roman Catholics. An order has been created, with Father Hecker at its head, amply endowed with money, learning, and eloquence, for the specific purpose of drilling our shallow lecture-going masses into the belief that popery is the protectress of popular government; and the municipal government of New York city, with three different State Legislatures, have appropriated millions in money and real estate, to be controlled by Jesuits, in the interest of Romanism. Yes, we give our money to priests for schools in face of the fact that in Italy, where priests have had all the money, only four millions in twenty-one can either read or write. These appropriations are made by politicians and for votes, and by men who hear with indifference or approval, the proclamation of Father Hecker in our cities. The question is no longer, will the Catholics rule America?—but, how soon?

Day of Fasting and Prayer.

The Eighth Annual Convention of the National Christian Association will be held in Chicago, on the 20th, 21st and 22nd of next June. The Association has recently come into possession of a fine building in Chicago, which furnishes desirable rooms for Association purposes besides yielding a revenue from rentals. They are raising an endowment fund of $30,000 which lacks about $8,000 of completion. Saturday June 3d, has been selected by them as a day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of secret societies, stumbling blocks in the way of Christ's cause on earth. Those who observe it are requested to remember especially the June Convention in prayer. All clergymen who consider Freemasonry an anti-Christian society are requested to preach on the relation, as revealed in the Bible, of secret oath-bound societies to Christianity.

THE CENTENNIAL STAND:—Mr. E. A. Cook of our Publishers has gone to Philadelphia to complete the arrangements for a stand in the great Exposition. Elder A. D. Freeman of this State has volunteered his services to take charge of it during the season. Thus it is a matter of rejoicing that our reform will neither be unrepresented nor misrepresented at the International display. The necessity of a special und for tract distribution will directly appear to all, and every one who has a spare dime or dollar for this work should forward it.

—We purpose to keep enlarging the seceder's list, and will publish monthly as the names are sent in. It is hardly practicable to go back to a former generation for names, unless the parties are now living or were recently. What all the friends want is a living testimony against the lodge. Send on the name of every man who has publicly renounced Freemasonry.

—The Connecticut Knight Templar Grand Commandery, met lately in New Haven and made arrangements for a trip (for objects of benevolence?) to the Centennial.

—The N. Y. Witness criticizes the efforts of a few Good Templars (who might better than Anti-masons be called "fanatics") in organizing the children into lodges with grand titles of honor, Grand Sections, Grand Divisions, and National Conventions to meet at Philadelphia, and a uniform ritual. This attempt to school the youth in the forms and fustian and false worships can have none but a satanic authorship and deserves the reprehension of all right-minded people.

—The action of the Wesleyan General Conference at Sycamore, Ill., last fall, in referring the rule in their discipline to the various local conferences for amendment so as to exclude all secret orders, is being considered throughout the churches. The action of the Syracuse Conference lately raised a question as to the validity of the action in General Conference on the ground that there appears from the minutes to have been at the time the vote was taken three less than a quorum present. The springing of such an issue at this time is unfortunate, and we believe cannot be maintained. Under parliamentary usage the action of the General Conference will stand. Although its recommendation was thus set aside as not forming a sufficient basis for action, the Syracuse brethren passed resolutions standing by their testimony as follows:

Resolved 2.—That we pledge ourselves anew to the faithful enforcement of our present law, as contained in Section XXII of our Book of Discipline, and also earnestly advise all our people to wholly refrain from any connection with all secret societies, and to follow those things which make for peace, by 'avoiding in all things the very appearance of evil.'

Resolved 3.—That we believe that no private or public good can be affected in society by a secret organization which may not be as well or better affected without them; and that the benefits secured by such societies are not referable to the fact of secrecy, but to the faithful appliance of means calculated to secure the ends by whomsoever faithfully used."

—At the charter election in this city, so disastrous to the bummers, Mr. E. Ronayne made a signal fight in his ward against one of the aldermanic nominees. He scattered hand bills by the thousand, charging said candidate with being a Freemason and Knight Templar, and that he hoped for election by Masonic influence, and if successful would be more active for the lodge than for his constituents. The bill concludes:

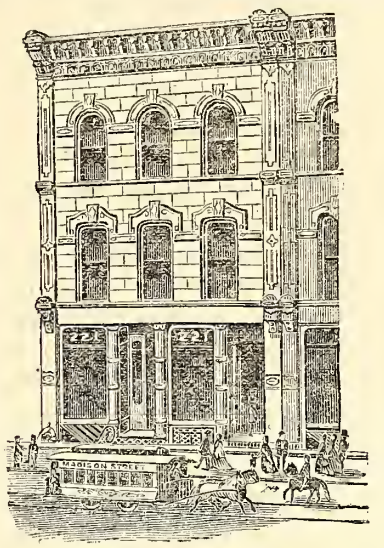
"Being a Knight Templar he has drank wine out of a human skull and prayed double damnation upon his soul! Is he a fit and proper person to represent you in the Common Council? Is he a man to whom you would entrust your interests? How long are we going to be ruled by Masonic rings, and midnight clans? So long as you have good upright free men to choose from in the name of common honesty and for the sake of your common Christianity, have nothing to do with this oath-bound Freemason except to send him back to the dark lodge from which he came."

To this Mr. R attached his name and distributed it freely about the polling places. The Freemason was not elected, though on the popular ticket (Republican), and as we understand, expended some $1500 or $2000 to get a majority. It is an indication of the respect for Mr. Ronayne among the the citizens of his ward, that he could thus openly attack the lodge and work against it all day, with so strong a backing as to quell any Masonic turbulence; though the lodge is greatly roused and threatens that Mr. Ronayne shall never speak in Farwell Hall.

—The Democratic House has run its investigation mill at such a rate that the machine is racked and the workmen about it injured. All their attempts at sensation lately have been more damaging to the party than any one else. The last reached the President and for a single night cast on him the charge of ordering $35,000 spent in New York in 1872 for election purposes. The next day witnesses and documents showed that the order was legally carrying out the provisions of Congress to prevent the frauds long and notoriously practiced in New York City by the Democratic party under "Boss" Tweed. So the threats of impeachment were swallowed with bad grace. Bristow has been persistently followed by the whiskey ring and other thieves whose business he has broken up and several cases have been brought before the investigating committees, but have all ended in exalting the character of the Secretary of the treasury on whose garments there has not yet been found even the smell of fire. Blaine, who sailed through the Credit Mobilier by capturing Poland's committee, has a bad business fastened on him in connection with other railroad transactions which he promises to explain this week The secret character of these investigations has degraded them to the Masonic level Testimony has been brought against officials and its nature concealed from them until given to the public through the press, a proceeding which cannot be too severely condemned.

Religious Intelligence.

—On a recent Sunday the crowds to hear Mr. Moody were so great that even the vast capacity of the Hippodrome proved insufficient. The N. Y. Tribune says: "The continued attendance, week after week and day after day, of such large audiences, transcends all previous history of religious meetings in this city."



—The session of the New England Conference of the Methodist church at Lowell, the past week, says the Springfield Republican, has been remarkable for the strength and vigor of the progressive and democratic elements in the church. The memorial to the general conference, which meets this spring, requesting the session from the bishops to the conferences of the power to choose presiding elders, fix the number of their visitations and apportion the districts, was carried by an unexpected vote, after a spirited debate, and the progressive party also elected its full ticket of delegates to the general conference. The struggle between the episcopal authority and the body of the church, both pulpit and pews, gathers head powerfully, and the constitution of the church is likely to feel its modifying influence in every succeeding conference.

—More than three-fourths of the students in Princeton College, are now believed to be devoted to a Christian life, a larger proportion than in any recent previous period of the College. A recent revival in the College is also extending through the town.

—The American United Presbyterian Mission in Upper Egypt, during its ten years of work, has planted ten Christian churches with an average of forty members. These members hold devotional meetings for the study of the Scriptures on five or six evenings of each week, and have thus acquired great familiarity with the Bible truths.

—The closing exercises of the United Presbyterian Theological Seminaries at Allegheny City, Pa., and Xenia, O., have occurred recently. Sixteen graduated from the first-named institution. The Seminary formerly connected with Monmouth College was consolidsted with the latter last year. Twenty-nine young men have been studying here during the year.

—The great meetings in the Hippodrome, New York, closed on the 19th, extending over a period of seventy-three days, from Feb. 7th. The number of meetings is estimated at 189, and the vigor with which Mr. Moody has carried them through, testifies not only to his physical endurance, but the grace that has so wonderfully sustained him. Probably 200,000 different persons attended these meetings and the results are only known in heaven. The last meeting showed 5,000 who believed they had been converted at these meetings. The evangelists have been ably seconded by Wm. E. Dodge, Samuel Thorne and A. G. Agnew, in the management of the business arrangements and superintendence of the whole series of meetings.

The Home Circle.

Two Christians.

Two Christians traveled down a road,
  Who viewed the world with different eyes;
The one was pleased with earth's abode.
  The other longing for the skies.
For one the heavens were so blue,
  They filled his mind with fancies fond;
The other's eyes kept piercing through
  Only for that which lies beyond.

For one, enchanting were the trees,
  The distance was divinely dim,
The birds that fluttered on the breeze
  Nodded their pretty heads for him.
The other scarcely saw the flowers,
  And never knew the trees were grand;
He did but count the days and hours,
  Till he might reach the promised land.

And one a little kind caress
  Would to a tender rapture move;
He only oped his lips to bless
  The God who gave him things to love.
The other journeyed on his way,
  Afraid to handle or to touch;
He only oped his lips to pray
  He might not love a thing too much.

Which was the best? Decide who can.
  Yet why should we decide 'twixt them!
We may approve the mournful man,
  Nor yet the joyful man condemn.
He is a Christian who has found
  That earth as well as heaven is sweet.
Nor less is he who, heaven-bound,
  Has spurned the earth beneath his feet.

—Good Words for September.

The Temple of the Holy Ghost.

About forty-five years ago a funeral was passing through the streets of Carlisle, Pennsylvania. It was the burial procession of John Hall Mason, the son of the eminent Dr. Mason, President of Dickinson College, one of the most powerful and eloquent preachers in America. The son was distinguished for his piety and talents, and his death had cast a gloom over many hearts. Many gathered to the funeral, from far and near, and especially young men. After the services at the house had been performed, and the pall-bearers had taken up the bier, a great concourse obstructed the entrance, and great confusion and noise ensued. The bereaved Doctor observing the difficulty, and following closely the pall-bearers, exclaimed in solemn sepulchral tones:—'Tread lightly, young men! tread lightly! You bear the temple of the Holy Ghost.' These sentiments, as though indited by the Holy Spirit, acted like an electric shock; the crowd fell back and made the passage way clear. Through the influence of these words a most powerful revival of religion sprung up, and swept through the college, and extended over the town. No town in Pennsylvania has enjoyed such a season of spiritual work and refreshing since that, or in any way equal to it.

"What! know ye not" says Paul, "that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" It is said that the father of Origen would often go to the couch of his sleeping child and kiss his body, saying that it was the temple of the Holy Ghost. I fear that we too often forget this great truth, and when we allow ourselves to subject our bodies to sin and defilement, we make an awful mistake. It is needful that we should fortify our minds against these dangerous temptations, by which so many eminent men have been cast down, and shamefully overcome. We should not only withdraw our feet from all evil enticements, but actually flee from them. Nothing will dissolve their charm and break their power more than instant flight. The more we linger and moralize, the stronger will the meshes become, and the closer will the net be drawn upon us. We should remember that gift of God, the Holy Spirit, and reflect upon his remarkable condescension to come and dwell in us, making us his property, and elevating our humanity. As the ancients kept their temples pure and undefiled, so we should preserve our 'bodies' free from all unholy words and actions. In some of the heathen temples, the vestals cherished a flame on their altar perpetually. So should we maintain the flame of truth on the altars of our hearts. Within their temple walls were their helpless deities, and there thronged the myriads of votaries to pay homage and worship. We should worship the Father, and cultivate the companionship of the Holy Ghost in our bodies.

How anxious we should be to glorify God, to live nearer to Christ. How careful we ought to be not to profane these temples of the Holy Ghost. But first of all we should be careful and ascertain that we are the temples of the Holy Spirit. The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, and where we find these we will find the Spirit. These are the fruits of the Spirit. No wicked soul is solicitous about making its calling and election sure.

The believer, then, should be animated by noble views, to live wholly devoted to Christ, and 'glorify him in body and spirit which are his.' We should banish all complaint, all anxiety, all fruitless care. We should appropriate that faith which is the precious gift of God, and which own Jesus alone as king and priest.—Presbyterian.

Something to Harden my Heart.

"Give me something to harden my heart." So said a middle-aged man, as he entered the bar room of a tavern and walked up to the bar-keeper. "Here, L——, give me something to harden my heart!"

It was uttered in part, evidently, as a witticism; for, as he spoke, he looked about the room for the smile of approbation. And yet there was a sneer in the tone of the request, like the jeer of some fiend from the pit, for the speaker and all his associates well knew that the bar-keeper was a professor of religion; and they knew, too, that he had not the apology that he was only a bar-keeper, hired to perform a service, about which, personally, he might have had scruples, for he was owner of the hotel as well as bar-keeper in it, and a man that they knew was not wanting in sense, nor ignorant of the great truths and rousing appeals that have been poured forth on the subject of temperance.

To this man was addressed the call "Give me something to harden my heart!" And he knew what was meant, and took down the decanter of brandy, and handed it to the speaker, that he might help himself. And as he did so, a cold shudder passed over me, as I thought of that expression of the Saviour, "Woe unto the world because of offences! It must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!"

Something to harden the heart! Alas, too true a description of what the one asked and the other gave him! Beyond question it hardened the hearts of both—of the one, again to drink, and again to sneer at religion, and again to make light of the fearful fact that his own heart was hardening, and fearfully hardening for ruin; and of the other, to smile upon the one that insulted alike himself and his profession of religion, and to sell his principles, and his self-respect, and his conscience, all for the paltry price of the glass that was purchased.

Something to harden the heart! Remember it young man, and touch not the social glass. Remember it, parent, and permit not your child, and invite not your friends to partake of it. Remember it, ye dealers, who, for filthy lucre, are pouring out the tide of death, and hardening your own hearts and those of your victims, for the judgment. Remember it, ye friends of temperance, and see, in the light of it, how blessed is your work, by which you can make the hearts of thousands tender, and save, perhaps, their souls from death.

Something to harden the heart! What the scoffer asked for is not the only thing that will do it. You may harden your heart not only by the intoxicating cup, but in a thousand other ways. By neglecting the Sabbath, the sanctuary, the Bible; by profaneness, or lewdness, or falsehood; by casting away that tract, or disregarding that friendly expostulation; by forgetting a father's counsels or a mother's prayers; by going within the limits of temptation; in a word, by trifling with conscience, or truth, or God's Spirit in any form: by any or all of these things you may harden your heart, and seal yourself over to death.

Something to harden the heart! Tremble at the thought of anything that shall do so fearful a work, and rather seek for that which shall soften and subdue and melt your heart in penitence at the cross, and prepare it for duty and for glory.—Sel.

Cards and Bibles.

An agent of the Bible Society giving an account of his visits to one of the counties in Pennsylvania, says:—As I entered a small village in Lower Augusta, I hailed a body of workmen and inquired if they wished to obtain any Bibles. By way of response, one of the young men cried out, "I care for nobody, and nobody cares for me." I replied, "If you would care for somebody, somebody would care for you." The other men proposed to buy him a Testament if he would read it and throw away his cards. To this he agreed, and the Testament was bought. Then said they one to another, "Now let us each buy a Testament and throw away our cards." And five were bought. Then one ran into a house and brought out another man, and insisted that he too should buy a Testament and throw away his deck of cards. He was taken by surprise; but, on learning what the others had done, he proposed to trade me his cards for a Testament. I readily accepted his offer; and while he went into the house to look for the cards, one of the men came near and said, in a low voice, "Only get his deck, and we will pay for the Testament." In a moment the cards were brought out into the street and given in exchange for a copy of the Word of God. One of the men then called a mechanic out of his shop and said, "We have all bought Testaments, and have agreed to throw away our cards and try to do better. Now, we want you to buy one too." The mechanic at once handed over the price of a Testament, and requested me to write in it his name and mine, and put down the date, that they might not forget the time of this interesting transaction.

German Farms.

The Germans pleasantly live in villages called Doerfer. Only on very large farms are the farm buildings on the premises. The farm is then called a "Bauern Hof." The Dorf is a village of farmers. Around the town lie small farms in fragrants of from an eighth of an acre to an acre. These are scattered to the north and south, east and west of villages. Rarely does one find a farm of a hundred acres. Then it is a Hof. Indeed, a farmer with ten acres is considered well off. And this quantity of land is most likely cut up into private patches of less than an acre, set in among other people's plots, like the parcels of a quilt. Some approach so near to a line that they are forbidden to make them any smaller. Fences are unknown here. Not even along the highways are they found. Wood is too scarce, and the smallness of the fields would take too much of it, even if it were abundant. Over narrow foot-paths, along the edges of the fields, the farmers reach their grounds. The most of them have to carry their produce out some distance to the wagon roads, and many carry all of it home. Not an inch of ground is wasted. Every little spot is made to tell, to produce something, if it is only a blade of grass. Even along the edge of the foot-paths, the busy women reapers carefully cut off the few scattered stems of grass.

The cattle are kept and fed in the stable all the year round, save when the herdsman or shepherd takes them to the Dorf Wald, or village forest. To let them run at large in a grass field would be too wasteful. They would tread many a good blade under foot. Besides, who could keep his cattle from running into other people's fields without fences? During the grass-growing time, the women daily cut grass with the small German sickles, bind it in great bales larger than themselves, which they bear home on the head. Often they bring the feed a distance of one or two miles. Morning and evening the streets are alive with these women bearing heavy burdens. The men, meanwhile, are engaged in still heavier work.

Their stock of cattle, like their farms, is small. A few farms with horses, more with oxen, most with cows. In Belgium, I saw donkeys struggling along laboriously in carts large enough to carry a dozen animals like themselves. In Holland, four and six dogs hitched to a wagon, dash through the streets with apparent ease, and in some of these German villages I have seen a cow hitched to a truck wagon galloping along as if she had been specially created for that purpose. My cousin Yost has two large, sleek yellow cows, well fed and groomed, with which he works his ten-acre farm. Besides being good milkers, they perform his work in the plough and wagon as well as horses could do it.

A German Dorf usually contains from one hundred to fifteen hundred people.

How could from one hundred to three hundred American farmers, with their large dwellings, outbuildings, barns and stock of cattle, thus dwell together in unity? The home of a German village like its farm, is confined to a small space. Usually it is on a square plot of ground. Both the house and the barn stand on the street. Between them is the yard—the barn-yard and the house-yard in one—the whole small. From it, man and beast enter their respective abodes. The house and barn front and open on one and the same yard, not on the street. You seldom find a street entrance to the house. It is reached by passing through a gateway into the yard. The village is built compactly. Few houses have two stories. Man and beast dwell in closer proximity than with us. They work harder and get much more out of an acre than American farmers. Many a German farmer raises more from ten acres than an American does from fifty.

Every village has a forest, where the villagers get their fuel. The forester assigns each his share of fuel. The forest is also the village pasture-ground.

Every village has its gooseherd, swineherd and shepherd. Every morning these respective functionaries blow their horns along the street, when geese and sheep come running out of every gateway and alley, each to join its kind, to be led on to a common village pasture. Long lines of gabbling geese run through narrow, fenceless footpaths, without daring to touch a single blade not their own. The shepherds sometimes remain on the neighboring hills for whole weeks. At night they commit their flocks to their dogs. These animals, not very unlike sheep in color and hair, possess a remarkable intelligence and faithfulness. I have seen the shepherd walking carelessly ahead of his flock, while the dogs would run guard on each side. The hungry sheep were tempted to browse among the rank wayside grass, while the faithful dog would check the slightest attempt at depredation. Landed property is pretty equally distributed. With rare exceptions the poorest have a few patches upon which to raise their bread, and the richest have seldom more than twenty acres.—Guardian.

Children's Corner.

The Boys' and Girls' Letter Box has but one letter in it this week, but our young friend James has made a good beginning and we know others will come. Elder Barlow will be much encouraged, too, to know that the boys are listening to his appeals for the truth, and no doubt he will pay particular attention to this part of his audience. Here's what our young reporter says this week:

PORTLAND, Ionia Co., Mich.

DEAR EDITOR:—I am a boy fourteen years old, and am greatly opposed to secret organizations. I am young, although I may accomplish some good in time. Rev. J. L. Barlow delivered three interesting lectures here in which he showed us, first the origin of Freemasonry; second, its religion; and third, as Mr. Remington said, uncapped the lodge. Some of the Masons said hard things of the Elder, because his subject was Freemasonry. If it is a good and nice institution, I should think it would bear investigation; don't you? JAMES W. MARCY.

We do think so decidedly; and so we pass the question on to the rest o our boys and girls and wait for their answer.

"Mary had a little Lamb."

There are floating about in the great ocean of literature stray chips of song or story, which from their wit or wisdom, or from some unaccountable reason, become popularized and cherished more carefully than whole navies of world renowned authors. Their parentage unknown, they come as literary foundlings to our doors, and, once admitted, command their own place in our affections. Among such is the poem, "Mary had a little lamb." There is hardly a child in the land who has not become familiar with the verses; not a college student but has sung them to a dozen different tunes. It has been parodied, paraphrazed and translated into dead languages. And yet scarce any one knows who is the author, or whether it is fictitious or founded on fact. It is, perhaps in the truth of the story that the secret of its popularity lies. For it is the true account of an incident that happened sixty-one years ago, not fifty miles from the Cradle of Liberty. And "Mary," a delightful old lady of three-score and ten, still lives and cherishes the memory of the event. The writer, on a recent visit, craved from her own lips the true story of the affair, and will reproduce it as nearly as possible:

"It was when I was nine years old," she said, "and we lived up on the farm. I used to go out to the barn every morning with father to see the cows and sheep. They all knew me, and the cows, old 'Broad' and 'Shorthorn' and 'Brindle,' would low a good-morning when I came to their stables. One cold day we found that during the night twin lambs had been born. You know that sheep will often disown one of twins, and this morning one poor little lamb was pushed out of the pen into the yard. It was almost starved and almost frozen, and father told me I might have it if I could make it live. So I took it into the house, wrapped it into a blanket and fed it on peppermint and milk all day. When night came I could not bear to leave it for fear it would die, so mother made me up a little bed on the settle and I nursed the poor thing all night, feeding it with a spoon, and by morning it could stand. After this we brought it up by hand until it grew to love me very much and would stay with me wherever I went unless it was tied. I used before going to school in the morning to see that the lamb was all right and securely fastened for the day. Well, one morning, when my brother Nat and I were all ready, the lamb could not be found, and supposing it had gone out to pasture with the cows, we started on. I I used to be a great singer, and the lamb would follow the sound of my voice. This morning after we had gone some distance, I began to sing, and the lamb, hearing me, followed on and overtook us before we got to the school-house. As it happened, we were early, so I went in very quietly, took the lamb into my seat where it went to sleep, and I covered it up with my shawl. When the teacher came and the rest of the scholars, they did not notice anything amiss, and all was quiet until my spelling class was called. I had hardly taken my place before the pattering of little feet was heard coming down the aisle, and the lamb stood beside me ready for its word. Of course the children all laughed and the teacher laughed, too, and the poor creature had to be turned out of doors. But it kept coming back, and at last had to be tied in the woodshed till night. Now, that day, there was a young man in school, John Roulston by name, who was on a visit to one of the boys, and came as a spectator. He was a Boston boy and son of the riding-master, and was fitting for Harvard College. He was very much pleased over what he saw in our school, and a few days after gave us the first three verses of the song. How or when it got into print I don't know."

Thus she ran on, telling of the care bestowed on her pet until it grew to be a sheep, and she would curl its long wool over a stick; and it bore lambs until there was a flock of five all her own; and finally how it was killed by an angry cow. Then she brought out a pair of her little girl stockings, knitted of yarn spun from the lamb's wool, the heels of which had been raveled out and given away piecemeal, as mementos. No one can doubt that she, whose youth was rendered famous by love to an unfortunate animal, has lived a life of benificence and charity. With a heart overflowing with love towards all God's creatures, she has indeed lived to care for the destitute and needy, and be a mother to the motherless. And now, in a green old age, she is surrounded by those whom her warm heart long since taught to cling to her and follow as the lamb in her youth. When at last she shall cross the river she will find an eternal home in the green pastures and beside the still waters where the Good Shepherd feeds his lambs. John Roulston died before entering college. What the world lost in him who wove into verse that immortalized them both, the story of Mary and the lamb, no one may say. —Wm. B. Sawyer, in Springfield Republican.

Home and Health Hints.

Carpets or Cleanliness.

The prudent housewife looks anxiously over her her belongings, particularly carpets There are thin spots that begin to loom up ominously on her vision. Day by day the chasm yawns larger. She lies awake at night planning how she would put the frayed breadths under the bed, or back of the stove, behind the lounge, if, happily, the defects be not too great to admit of such concealment. If so, the carpet is condemned to a smaller floor.

But why all the solicitude about carpets? And why are they so afraid of bare floors? As far as cleanliness is concerned carpets are very reprehensible. Think of the dust they accumulate, of the unsavory odors they take and hold and give out! The fact is, it is almost impossible to keep a carpet absolutely clean.

"But bare floors! ugh! It makes one shiver to think of the thing! Besides, they make a room look so unfurnished and poor-folksy."

All a mistake, I do assure you. The truth is, we do not know half the beauty there is in our common woods, and we have little idea how ornamental, as well as sweet and clean, a bare board floor can be made. You do not want paint to hide the beauty of the wood, but some process that will bring out the grain, and fix it before our eyes in its own wonderful beauty of curve and wave, and concentric circle.

Let me illustrate by my own experience. We have just moved. Every person who has passed through the trial, knows what worry of cutting and piecing carpets that signifies—to say nothing of new ones. Before moving I made up my mind, not only from pecuniary reasons but from motives of health as well, to dispense with carpets in certain parts of the house. There are three halls. I did not want oilcloth, for it is hard to keep clean, is as cold as a bare floor, and not half as pretty in my estimation. Carpet of any kind holds too much dust for hall floors. Then there was the dining-room. Grease-spots on my dining-room carpet had often vexed my soul, and brought gray hairs to my head. No more carpet on that floor henceforth for me. I resolved to have the floors before-mentioned oiled.

This is the way we did it: We procured from a druggist three quarts of boiled linseed oil, and the same amount of shellac varnish. Also a paint-brush. This quantity of material will cover as much floor as forty yards of carpet, and cost only $3.50.

The floors were cleaned as thoroughly as possible, and all spots that would not wash off were planed off.

We put on the first coat of the oil in the evening, and the next morning it was dry. The following evening we put on a coat of the shellac varnish, which was dry by morning. Then, after two or three days, we put on the final coat of oil, but as the wood will absorb very little oil this time, we put it on with a flannel and rubbed it in as thoroughly as possible. It was soon dry and ready for use. Now we have beautiful floors, easily kept clean by wiping off the dust with cold water. Once in three or six months we can go over them with a little of the boiled oil, and have them look as well as ever again. In the Winter, if we choose, we can lay down rugs to take away the "cold" look that some object to.

Such floors would rob "cleaning-time" of half its terrors, and add largely to the purity of the atmosphere of our houses, already poisoned by air-tight stoves and furnaces. It is a cheap reform and easily tried.—Christian Weekly.

Temperance.

The Chicago W. C. T. U. are filling up the evenings of each week with meetings in different parts of the city. Their all day meeting on election was both pleasant and profitable.

—The Ministerial Temperance Conference, to be held in Philadelphia, Tuesday, June 13, is expected to discuss the following subjects:

1. Christian Liberty as Related to Alcoholic beverages.
2. How shall the Church of Christ most effectively work against the Drink Traffic.
3. Should not Unfermented Wine be Used at the Communion?
4. Temperance as Related at Revivals.
5. Should not Churches Contribute Systematically to the Cause of Temperance?
6. The Drinking Usage and Liquor Traffic, as Hindrances to the Progress of the Home and Foreign Missions.
7. The Responcibility of Christian Citizenship.
8. Church and Sabbath School Temperance Societies.

Petitions against the sale of intoxicating drinks on the Centennial Exhibition Grounds, and against opening those grounds on the Sabbath may be sent, the first to the National Temperance Society, 58 Reade street, New York, and the second to the Christian Statesman, 127 North Seventh street, Philadelphia, to be presented by the Sabbath Association here.

The temperance reform in Eastern Massachusetts makes steady progress. At Gloucester, Salem, Lynn, Canton, Woburn, reform clubs have been organized and many are signing the pledge. Swampscott claims to be the banner town in results thus far. It has a population in round numbers of about two thousand people, mostly seafaring men, but it has a reform club of three hundred men, a Ladies' Temperance Union, numbering one hundred and fifty, a "Reynolds Temperance Club," containing fifty youths, and a children's society with a membership of one hundred and sixty-four. "Such a showing," writes a Swampscott correspondent, "is worth speaking about, for everybody knows that the toilers by the sea are subject to greater temptations than are many other classes of workers in life, and when these men, proverbial for their reckless generosity and disregard for self, stand up manfully to the front and dare to do right, they mean business every time."—Statesman.

As if it were not shame enough for our National Government to violate its most solemn treaty-stipulations by allowing vagabond gold-hunters to invade the Black Hills, it has actually authorized the sale of licenses to liquor dealers in that region. The collector of internal revenue for Dakota, recently wrote to Commissioner Pratt saying that parties were asking for a government license to retail liquors at Custer City, Black Hills, on Indian territory, and asked for instructions. The commissioner replies, that according to existing laws not only may ardent spirits be lawfully introduced into the Indian country under certain circumstances, to wit, by order of or under authority of the War Department but, in his opinion, may lawfully be sold there. Alas for our year of boasting?—Advance.

The Washingtonians.

Hon. Frank W. Miller, a son of one of the earliest and most consistent members of the Washingtonian Total Abstinence Society has contributed to the Portsmouth (N. H.) Chronicle a brief history of the organization. He says:

On the 2d day of April, 1840, six men sat drinking in a tavern on Liberty street, Baltimore. Notices had been published in the papers of that city that a distinguished clergyman (Matthew Hale Smith) would lecture on temperance that evening, in one of the churches. This subject was mentioned by one of the six, and, after some talk, it was agreed that two of their number should attend the meeting, and report. This was done, and, after the report had been listened to, and the subject discussed, one of them exclaimed, "Let us form a temperance society, and make Bill Mitchell President." With this understanding, and after taking another drink, they separated. On the next evening they met at the same place—the matter was again talked over, and they resolved to form, and did form a society, naming it after the Father of our Country, as it was common at that time to name most organizations after Washington. The names of these six individuals were William Mitchell, David Hoss, Charles Anderson, George Steer, Bill McCurdy, and Tom Campbell. They then voted to meet the next night in a carpenter's shop, and each agreed to bring a new member. These meetings were held almost nightly, and for remarks each related his own experience at the Court of Death. As might be expected, the meetings soon began to attract public attention. John Hawkins early became a member, but was not one of the original six. These reformed men were soon invited to visit other cities and towns, and who of our old citizens has not listened to the thrilling and simple experience of John Hawkins as he portrayed the misery of the drunkard, and told the touching story of his little daughter Hannah persuading him to quit the drunkard's drink. The new movement spread from city to city, and from town to town, until there was scarcely a place in the United States that did not have its Washingtonian Total Abstinence Society. Men who had been drunkards for years burst the bands that had so long bound them, and became temperance reformers. The name being quite long, it soon became shortened by daily use, and these organizations became known throughout the country as "Washingtonians." The Washingtonian Society was originated in this city in 1841, and has been instrumental in reclaiming more than 200 intemperate men, many of whom kept the pledge till the dying day. Others still live, a blessing to their families and an honor in society. They demonstrated the great fact that the drunkard could be saved. While nearly all the societies of this class in the country have ceased to exist, the Portsmouth Washingtonians have always maintained their organization."

News of the Week.

—The first election under the new charter took place in this city last week Tuesday and resulted in a great, almost complete triumph over the saloonists and thievs. A few of the old ring aldermen were re-elected but they will hardly be recognized in the great majority of upright men.

—Dom Pedro, Emperor of Brazil passed quietly through Chicago last week on his way to California. He will spend some time in the city on his return to the Centennial.

—The Belknap impeachment hangs fire, and the managers show inability to prosecute it. The objection brought by counsel that Belknap had resigned and Congress had no jurisdiction is attempted to be covered by the lame presumption that the retiring Secretary drew his pay until midnight of the day on which he resigned instead of 10 o'clock A. M.

—The President has vetoed the bill for reducing his salary to the old rate $25,000.

—A break in the levee of the Mississippi near Hannibal, Mo., caused the overflow of a large tract of cultivated lands and the destruction of a great amount of crops, live stock and buildings. No lives were reported lost.

—The House has passed the bill transferring the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department. That is as far as the transfer will be made probably. There is likely to be a dead lock between House and Senate on the appropriations, the latter greatly modified the bill from the House which refuses to accept the amendments, —A monument in honor of Abraham Lincoln, erected by the colored people, was unveiled in Washington City on the 11th inst., the twelfth anniversary of the assassination of their great friend. Mr. Lincoln is represented standing erect, with the Proclamation of Emancipation in his left hand, while the right hand is outstretched over the kneeling figure of a slave, from whose limbs the shackles have just been broken. The cost of the monument was about $20,000. Frederick Douglass delivered an oration.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 23.—The English and the Russian Ambassador had an interview with the Grand Vizier. The conferences resulted in an announcement that the Porte has no intention of declaring war against Montenegro.

LONDON, April 23.—A Times dispatch from Berlin reports that the Servian War Office has ordered all militiamen to prepare for a foreign campaign. It is considered, however, exceedingly improbable that Servia will go to war unless she is attacked by Turkey.

—A telegram from Athens says that Porte is hesitating on the question of declaring war against Montenegro. The war party is strong in the Cabinet. Russia strongly objects.

—The troops have not yet assembled at Scutari, Albania. Nothing is ready for immediate hostilities. Great agitation and alarm prevails in Constantinople.

THE NEW BERLIN TRIALS,

April 13th and 14th 1831,

Attempt by Masons to prevent Public Initiations like Ronayne's.

"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that a Master Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, when communicated to me, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own election;"—Witness has taken no obligation to go on a Master Mason's errand, barefoot and bareheaded, &c.; there is an obligation in substance to aid and assist poor indigent Master Masons, their wives and daughters; witness did not obligate himself to take, afterwards, any part of the oath which might be omitted at the time; penalty is, "to have my body severed in two in the midst and divided to the north and south, my bowels burnt to ashes, and the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven;" knows nothing about the clause that follows, relative to a "vile and perjured wretch," &c. Witness says, in the course of ceremonies in lodge, when the candidate is brought to light, the Master exclaims, "And God said, Let there be light, and there was light," at the same time the bandage over the eyes of the candidate is quickly pulled off, and there is a clapping of hands and stamping of feet on the floor; witness is asked—"When you were initiated, was there a rope around your neck?" Answer—"No." Question—"What then?" Answer—"A small cord." In the Mark Master's degree a mallet and chisel are used to mark the candidate; a bowl is produced as if to catch the blood; it sometimes has the appearance of being stained with blood; the chisel is placed near the breast, and a blow upon the head of it given with the mallet. In another degree, there is a representation of killing Hiram Abiff; he is buried; and after considerable search is found, with a spring of cassia by his head; is raised from the grave, &c. On examination in the Royal Arch obligation, witness testifies to the most important and exceptionable clauses, substantially the same as Gen. Welch. Witness has taken the obligation to "aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason, when engaged in any difficulty; and espouse his cause, so far as to extricate him from the same, if in my power, whether he be right or wrong;" he says this clause was explained the moment he took it, same as General Welch has testified: witness never took, or heard administered, any political obligation; he swears, positively, and without any qualification, that he has taken the following obligation—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that a companion Royal Arch Mason's secrets, given to me as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, murder and treason not excepted!" Witness says the penalty is the same as Gen. Welch has testified; to the question, in some of the ceremonies, "Are you a Royal Arch Mason?" the answer is in the language of God to Moses, "I am that I am." Witness was asked whether, in another part of the ceremonies, the question—"Who comes there?" was not put three times. Answer—"No" Question—"Was it put twice?" Answer—"No." Question—"Was it once?" Answer—"No." Question—"How many times then?" Answer—"Seven." In the Royal Arch degree, the candidates pass under a "living arch," made of hands, so low that they have to crawl, &c.

Cross-examined. Witness believes he is not compelled, as a witness or juror, by his oath and the charges, together to favor a brother Mason; charges considered to explain the duties of a Mason.

Rouse Clark, sworn. Witness is a Freemason; don't know how many degrees he has taken; is a Royal Arch, and higher. [Here the counsel for the plaintiffs admitted that Clark would swear to the same obligations as Messrs. Welch and Pike had sworn to, and earnestly entreated counsel for defendant to examine no further. A few questions, however, were asked, and answers to them drawn from the witness.] Question—"Have you taken this obligation in the Master Mason's degree? "Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that a Master Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, when communicated to me, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own election." Answer—"I have taken one similar to that." Witness says he has taken the obligation to aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason, whether he be right or wrong, &c., but says it was explained, as in the testimony of Gen. Welch; says he has taken the following, in substance, in the Royal Arch obligation—"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that a companion Royal Arch Mason's secrets, given me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, murder and treason not excepted!"

Cross-examined. Witness thinks the charges and lectures are moral.

Another witness was called, but the court decided it was unnecessary as testimony given was not controverted by plaintiffs.

After counsel on both sides had concluded, the cause went to the jury about 6 o'clock, A. M. on Thursday, who retired, and not being able to agree, were discharged about 9 o'clock—five being in favor of acquitting the defendant and one for his conviction.

Washington and Seceding Masons.—The editor of the National Observer lately delivered a course of Anti-masonic lectures at Cat-kill and Hudson, N. Y. One of these lectures was on the Oaths of Masonry, showing that these oaths are null and void from the beginning, and unlawful; and that the eternal salvation of those who have taken them, depends upon their repenting of and renouncing them. These points he established to the satisfaction of large assemblies of citizens, and of professing Christians, who heard the lecture.

We give a short extract from this lecture, for the satisfaction of seceding Masons who are styled "perjured villains" by their opponents; and it must console them to discover that if they are perjured, GEORGE WASHINGTON was ten-fold more perjured than they are, since his oath which follows and which he violated, was a lawful and constitutional one, lawfully ordained or prescribed lawfully administered, and lawfully taken or received by him.

The Extract.—"Let us look, for a moment, at the oath of allegiance, as taken by GEORGE WASHINGTON:—

"'I, GEORGE WASHINGTON, DO TAKE ALMIGHTY GOD TO WITNESS, that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to our most Sovereign Lord, King George the Third, and him will defend to the utmost of my power, against all conspiracies and attempts whatever, that shall be made against his person, crown, and dignity: And I do faithfully promise, to maintain, support and defend to the utmost of my power, the succession of the Throne, in his Majesty's family, against any person, or persons whatsoever. Thereby utterly abjuring any allegiance or obedience, to the person taking upon himself the style and title of Prince of Wales, in the lifetime of his father, and who, since his death is said to have assumed the style and title of King of Great Britain and Ireland, by the name of Charles the Third, and to any other person claiming or pretending a right to the crown of these realms. And I do swear, that I do reject and detest as unchristian and impious, to believe, that it is lawful to murder or destroy any person or persons whatsoever, for or under pretence of their being heretics, and also, that unchristian and impious principle, that no faith is to be kept with heretics. I further declare, that it is no article of my faith: and that I do renounce, reject, and abjure the opinion that Princes excommunicated by the Pope and Council, or by any authority of the See of Rome, or by any authority whatsoever, may be deposed or murdered by their subjects, or by any person whatsoever; and I do promise, that I will not hold, maintain, or abet any such opinion, or any other opinion, contrary to what is expressed in this declaration. And I do solemnly, in the presence of God, and of his only Son JESUS CHRIST our Redeemer, profess, testify, and declare, that I do make this declaration, and every part thereof, in the plain and ordinary sense of the words of this oath, without any evasion, equivocation, or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation already granted by the Pope, or any authority from the See of Rome, or any persons whatsoever; and without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration, or any part thereof, although the Pope, or any other person or persons, or any authority whatsoever, shall dispense with or annul the same, or declare that it was null and void from the beginning.'

"Now, then, let me see the American in this assemblage, who will rise up and declare GEORGE WASHINGTON a perjured villain for drawing his sword against the monarch, whose person, crown, and dignity,' he had so solemnly, in the name of the ever-living God, sworn to defend!

He swore, to maintain the person, crown and dignity of George the Third, and yet he did not hesitate when George the Third lent his name, his person, his crown and dignity, to the vile purposes of tyranny and oppression, as Freemasonry did, when she decreed the murder of Morgan, to buckle on his armor, and go forth to the field of battle, for the prostration of that tyrant, his crown and his dignity!

He swore, to defend, to the utmost of his power, the succession of the throne in the family of George the Third; and yet he did not hesitate to exert himself to the utmost of his power, to destroy that succession, to cut it off, both root and branch!

"He swore, that it was no article of his faith, that princes like George the Third, could be deposed or murdered by their subjects, or by the authority of the Pope, or by any authority whatsoever: and yet he drew his sword by the authority of the American Congress of '76, to depose George the Third, so far as power extended to these States, then the province of George the Third—and had he come in contact with that monarch on the field of battle, would have killed him or seen him killed, with the same feelings, that he killed, or saw killed, or instigated and exhorted, by all the powers of his mind and body, his fellow soldiers to kill any or all, if necessary, of those who were sent hither by George the Third, to subjugate our fathers.

He swore, too, that he took the whole of his oath, which I have just recited, without thinking that he could be absolved from it by any authority whatever; and yet he absolved himself from it, and violated every clause of it; And where, I repeat it, is the American in this assemblage, or elsewhere, that will dare to brand him, on this account, as a traitor and a villain? Where is the man, or rather the miscreant who will have the hardihood to bestow upon the name of the father of his country, the immortal GEORGE WASHINGTON, the foul epithets of 'perjured apostate,'—'abandoned outcast,'—'detestable wretch,' as we are styled, who have, I fear not to say, as virtuously and as justly violated, and renounced forever, in the sight of God and man, our unlaful, vicious, all-corrupting, and blasphemous obligations?

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

The roads are generally dry now. That fact, welcome to those whose movements have been circumscribed by mud for a long time is heralded to us by a full club of twenty subscriptions with a draft for thirty dollars. It was sent by W. R. Morley, Brush Creek, Iowa. Like some others when airly in this work of canvassing he writes: "I will try to get up another club before long." It is worth a great deal to have a good start. One friend in Elmwood, Ill., set his mark for twenty-five subscriptions and sent in nearly fifty. The hardest part of this business is getting well started.

Where is the next club coming from?

Does your subscription expire in May? Please renew promptly. Did it expire in April, and have you forgotten as yet to forward your renewal? Please send it now.

There seems to be a resolute purpose in the hearts of many of our readers to increase the circulation of the Cynosure, that is half the battle. Now what we need in order to secure a brilliant victory is the other half.

Our readers will be glad to know that a banner inscribed "THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE," is to be displayed in the main building of the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition, telling the thronging multitudes that there is a SUCH A PAPER OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES IN THESE UNITED STATES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED DURING WEEK ENDING Apr. 22th, 1876, from L H Ames, Mrs. S B Allen, O C M Bates, T K Bufkin, I O Bayles, K Bjorgo, H F Buftham, J M Bryant, Mrs. E R Cowell, H Chequey, J Excell, R J Elliott, T Graefe, J S Hickman, E Jarvis, D Kelly, W M Love, W Miller, J McNabe, B Monroe, W R Morley, S Y Orr, M Pettengill, J Renfro, G Richey, E Ronayne, J E Reagan, J P Stoddard, A Spencer, J Seeley, E Trumbull, T Vickers, A Wilson, J N Ware, J S Wilson, B J Wise, J Warner.

The Work of Rev. A. D. Freeman at the Centennial.—His Entertainment—Drs. Stevenson and Barr, and Bro. Hubbard will aid him.—Money wanted to pay for Centennial Tracts.—The American Book Trade Association.—Our Books and Tracts in the "Main Building."

PHILADELPHIA, Apr. 27, 1876.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am here to arrange for the distribution of tracts at the Centennial, to put our little case of books and tracts in place, as the space is forfeited if not occupied before the 1st of May.

Our space, two feet six inches by three feet on the floor, and seven feet six inches high, is now secured, and occupied by a book case two feet six inches wide, eleven inches deep, and seven feet six inches high, with a railing in front and a six inch shelf, just leaving room to put a stool inside of the rail. The book case is of black walnut with glass doors. Over it is a carved top piece lettered in very bold gold letters:

PUBLICATIONS OF EZRA A. COOK & CO.

OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

A banner will hang in front but above with the words:

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

A large Reform Journal,

Opposed to Secret Societies,

Weekly, at $3.20 a year.

The line "Opposed to Secret Societies" in each is made prominent, so that every person who visits the part assigned the American Book Trade Association may see at least one clear protest against the lodge, and it is hoped a million persons may here receive three or four of our briefest and most pungent Cynosure tracts. Money is greatly needed to pay for these tracts, and God, we are sure, will send it.

As Ezra A. Cook & Co., give one dollar for the free distribution of tracts for every other dollar contributed, these Centennial tracts will cost but half price.

Rev. T. P. Stevenson, D. D., editor Christian Statesman, whose guest I now am, Rev. W. W. Barr, D. D., editor United Presbyterian Worker, and A. B. Hubbard, (Baptist) are very cordial, and will do all in their power to further our cause here. Although the hospitality of each will be most severely taxed by relatives and acquaintances, during the six months of the Centennial, they each claim the privilege of entertaining for a time your noble almoner of our literature, Rev. A. D. Freeman, who freely GIVES six months of labor to this work, and only asks that his board, railroad fare and current expenses may be provided for. Ezra A. Cook & Co., meet all but the one item of board, hoping that a portion of the expense may be repaid by Cynosure subscriptions and sale of books.

Were it not for the fact that all who have relatives and friends outside of the city will have their hospitality greatly taxed, it would be easy to find sufficient entertainment for Bro. Freeman, though less than one-third of the time is as yet provided for. Each of the brethren named will try to get other friends to give entertainment, and we trust our good brethren Rev. James Crowe, Alexander Mackie, Andrew Mitchell, S. Agnew, Dr. D. Williamson, Lewis G. Seifert, S. Higginson, and Wm. Dunlap, all of whom are Cynosure subscribers, will see that Bro. Freeman does not lack for a home during his proposed stay in "The City of Brotherly love." To-night I start homeward again.

THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION

promises to be a huge affair indeed.

The buildings are simply monstrous in size, and the display of wonders from foreign countries alone is well worth a trip across the continent to see. Most of the more curious foreign exhibits will be found in the Main Building. In the south-east part of this building is the space occupied by the American Book Trade Association, and here is the place to find Rev. A. D. Freeman, and the tracts, Cynosure, and books "Opposed to Secret Societies." EZRA A. COOK.

Oh, Columbia, Rouse Thee!

Oh, Columbia, rouse thee, sweet land of the free!
A midnight of terror is waiting for thee;
A viper is warming to life at thy breast;
A fiend at thy side gathers strengthening rest;
A foeman bends daily thine altars beside,
And roams o'er thy valleys with lengthening stride,
His seal stamps already each mountain and vale,
And his cross-blazoned standard floats high on the gale:
Oh, Columbia, rouse thee! for conquest prepare,
Ere too late thou shalt waken to sink in despair.

Oh, Columbia, rouse thee, already thy foe
Mutters curses and threats of a withering woe!
It will come when the midnight has blackened the sky,
And the sleep of security sinks on thine eye;
It will come with the slow winding trail of a snake,
Thro' the high-waving turf and the sheltering brake
It will smite with the fang of a fiend from beneath
With the name of God borne on its horrible breath:
Alas, for thee then, O, dear land of the free!
For thy bravest and best will be stricken from thee.

Oh, Columbia, rouse thee! and stand in thy might,
And the strength of thy God for the truth and the right.
For the sake of thine altars and freedom and home—
Repel the invader, the despot of Rome.
To your prayers! who have faith in Jehovah to-day:
To your work, heart and hand, who command and obey!
Oh, nation late smitten with fire and with sword,
Till thy proud heart acknowledged the hand of thy Lord—
To thy watch! to thy work! lest o'er mountain and shore
The vials of wrath shall be broken once more.

The Bible Opposition in Figures.

Has it occurred to you in the midst of this Bible-in-the-schools controversy, to look about you and see where the objection comes from? You, for instance, are a member of a Christian church. Of course it is not you who fear the influence of God's Word upon the minds of your children. If you take that side of the controversy, it is not because you object, but because you are disposed to make concessions to the objections of others. What others? Not your fellow Congregationalists; not your brethren, the Presbyterians; not the Methodists; nor the Baptists; nor the Episcopalians. The great body of Protestant church-members everywhere want the Bible in the schools, and consent to its exclusion, if at all, only out of deference to other people's wishes. What others? The non-Christian church-goers! Not at all. Go to any Sabbath congregation in a Protestant Christian church, and ask those present, whether church-members or not, whether they feel, personally, any apprehension of evil results from the freest use of the Scriptures in education, and they will vote No, a thousand to one. It is conceivable that men and women who have respect enough for God's Word to go habitually to hear it preached, and who know as much about it as even an uninterested hearer must know, could ever believe it dangerous to the minds of their children.

Now let us see what this signifies. We have in this country about 40,000,000 people. Of these about two-fifths, say 16,000,000, are adults. Of these, again, not less than 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 are adult members of Protestant churches, and therefore are not objectors. The congregations statedly worshiping with such churches contain a number of non-church members, (one of the leading Protestant denominations in this country reports the ratio of communicants to non-communicants as only two to eleven) say 5,000,000 more. Here, then, you have not less than 10,000,000 or 11,000,000 out of 16,000,000 who are adult church goers, and who are not objectors.

Are the mass of non-church-goers objectors? I believe not. Many a man who has not seen the inside of a church for ten years, many a mother who is kept away by poverty, sickness and family drudgery, revere the Bible almost superstitiously and want their children instructed in its truths. Multitudes even of the vicious and criminal classes, would hold up both hands for the good Book, at the very moment that some of its professed advocates are ready to bow it out of doors. The canvass now in progress in Chicago is, I am told, developing a surprising unanimity in favor of the Scriptures, among those who are not commonly reckoned as its friends. We shall certainly be far within the bounds of fact if we assume that at least 13,000,000 out of the 16,000,000 of adults in the country are not objectors to the Bible in the schools. Who, then, are the objectors? Well, some Catholics object. Not all; there is very considerable and respectable party of them who do not object, and who dissent from the objections of their church. The strength of this party has not yet been adequately measured. It is by no means impossible that it may be, or become, a majority. But suppose it to succumb entirely to the influence of priesthood, making the Romish church a unit on this question, how much of a unit would it be? The church in this country numbers, men, women and children, about 4,000,000; say a 1,500,000 adults, not more.

Then, some infidels object. Not all; for some do not care. Others are strenuous objectors. But suppose all of them were so. How much of a party is that? I am not aware of any reliable statistics upon this point, but from half a million to a million would certainly be a liberal allowance. Of the remaining half million, or million, there are the politicians who object for advantage or reward; and hangers-on who object because their leaders do; and combative people who object from constitutional instinct; and argumentative people who object for the luxury of objecting. And there are, as has been said, good, conscientious folks, who, while they have not personally the least objection in the world, are championing other people's objections, on the ground of expediency, fair play, or something of that sort. Please to notice, however, that out of 16,000,000 adults in the country, we have accounted for at least 13,000,000 as being, so far as their own preferences are concerned, no objectors at all against a protesting minority of two or three millions. Notice, also, that this small minority of one-fifth or one-sixth, which comprises all who can be mustered against the Bible in the schools, is chiefly composed of infidels, who do not believe in the Bible, and Romanists who do not believe in the schools.—Rev. Geo. Huntington in the Advance.

Religious Character of Masonry as Presented by Masonic Teaching.

While unable to discern anything in Masonry worthy of commendation from intelligent men anywhere, we see much that merits condemnation from all men; and especially from citizens of this Christian Republic.

As citizens, we can but condemn the anti-republican character and tendency of the institution, as evidenced by its titles, its opposition to a "free press" and "free speech," and its preferment of the obligations imposed by the lodge to those binding us as members of the commonwealth; while as sensible men we turn in disgust from its mawkish, vulgar ceremonial.

As Christians, however, our opposition to Masonry is based not so much on its want of harmony with our governmental institutions or its display of buffoonery, as on the antagonism it manifests toward the Christian religion. That Masonry is within itself a religious system, that as such a system it is at war with the doctrines presented by Christ and taught in the Bible, is the fact that makes it the imperative duty of every Christian to labor for its overthrow.

Although Masons in debate often deny the religious character of their institution, we know that it has such a character from their standard publications. If their leading authors cannot be believed, how shall we trust the bustering braggarts that are the usual exponents of the order? Almost every Cynosure contains proof that Masonry is an anti-Christian religion, in the form of extracts from some of thei writings; and we would increase that volume of proof, by contributing our mite.

Of late we have obtained some very Masonic documents; among them, "The Spirit of Masonry," published under the official sanction of the Grand Lodge of England. We invite attention to a few brief extracts. Claiming for Masonry but three degrees, the author declares the first to have been formed for man in his Edenic state, as a worshiper of God in nature; the second to have been introduced at the erection of Solomon's Temple, and adapted to man in the transition stage, from nature to grace; and connected not only with Judaism, but also with all other ancient religious systems; from the Pythogoreans to the Druids, inclusive. After bringing those who worshiped the true God as revealed in the law, in the use of rites and ceremonies divinely prescribed; and those who, with idolatrous rites and shameful indecencies, worshipped imaginary personifications of Deity, together; he marshalls in the third degree as the "hand-maid' of the Christian dispensation. He says: "In the forming of this society, which is at once RELIGIOUS AND CIVIL, (capitals his,) great regard has been given to the first knowledge of the GOD OF NATURE, and that acceptable service wherewith he is well pleased." Again; "The institutors of this society had their eyes on the progression of religion, and they symbolised it, as well in the first stage as in the advancement of Masons." Of the term Mason, he remarks: "I am induced to believe the name Mason has its derivation from a (what?) language, in which it implies some strong indication or distinction of the nature of the society; . . . I am inclined to determine that the appellation of Mason implies a member of A RELIGIOUS SECT, and a professed devotee of the Deity "WHO IS SEATED IN THE CENTER OF HEAVEN." Concerning the lodge, he informs us; "The lodge when revealed to an entering Mason discovers to him A REPRESENTATION OF THE WORLD. . . . A lodge whose perfect Masons are assembled, represent these (creative) works of Deity."

To conclude we quote: "The Master Mason represents a man under the Christian doctrine saved from the grave of iniquity, and raised to the faith of salvation. As the great testimonial that we are risen from the state of corruption, we bear the emblem of the Holy Trinity, as the insignia of our vows, and of the origin of the Master's order."

To our brethren in Christ we appeal for help against this "Image of the Beast." We are living in days fraught with peril to church and state; the times demand earnest united effort against the evils that are the cause of danger. If asked to give name to the evils that now imperil us, we should reply: Roman Catholicism, secretism, and intemperance. Shall we have a united movement against these evils? The American Party offers opportunity for us to move solidly against them at the ballot-box. With this open door set before him, what Christian citizen can withhold his support from this party?

Turn we now to the members of the N. C. A. Brethren, you have given us a good basis for united political action in that child of your adoption, the above party; now when shall we have for its spiritual co-laborer the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH? If we, as Christians, may not vote with the corrupt parties of the day, how can we, in good conscience, fellowship "works of darkness" in our church organizations? As "one army of the living God" let us fall into line, and shoulder to shoulder press the battle to the gates.

FIDEI DEFENSOR.

War and the Bible.

In the epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Romans, chapter xiii, we have some teaching as to what we should recognise, and practice. The ruler in civil government is called "God's minister." "If thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake." The power of the sword possessed by the ruler is "of God." "He is a revenger" in the exercise of his delegated power "to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." This subjection is urged, for fear of wrath in case of disobedience, and also to keep a conscience void of offense. The ruler is "a revenger," to execute God's revenge and wrath, upon "him that doeth evil."

Here we learn that those who are enemies to God, and to Christians, should have justice executed upon them, even to the taking of life. No difference between Old and New Testament times, in that respect. Mr. Edgerton, in the Christian Cynosure, March 9th, inquires, "Does he remember the wars of conquest and of extermination carried on by Moses and Joshua against the Canaanites who were not even enemies to them at all so far as any history discloses." I would refer him to the book of Joshua xi. 20. "For it was of the Lord to harden their hearts that they should come against Israel in battle, that he might destroy them utterly, and that they might have no favor, but that he might destroy them, as the Lord commanded Moses." So they were enemies. Here we are taught that the children of Israel would not violate the golden rule, and were under the law of God, as recorded in Deut. xx. 10. "When thou comest nigh unto a city to fight against it, then proclaim peace unto it." And Deut. x. 19. "Love ye therefore the stranger, for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt." And also Prov. xxv. 21, "If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty give him water to drink." These are Old Testament laws.

As for Amalek, we have a record of him in Ex. 17. In this chapter we have an account of the children of Israel sinning and tempting the Lord. Then in the 8th verse we find that the Lord chastized them for their sin, by the instrumentality of Amalek, "Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel in Rephidim." Verse 14, "And the Lord said . . . I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven." Here we find that Amalek made an unprovoked attack upon Israel, and was afterwards punished by the instrumentality of Israel; but I have never discovered any change of God's law regulating men's duty towards each other. All of God's law, and what is given by the Prophets is in accordance with the golden rule, and teachings of Christ. "And they said, Lord behold here are two swords. And he said unto them, it is enough." These three last words of my quotation has not been interpreted by Mr. Edgerton. I see no rational meaning to the expression unless it refers to the literal sword; meaning that the two, was all that was needed on that occasion; but to fight then with the sword of steel, was not encouraged, but discouraged by Christ.

The moral law of God, as distinguished from the ceremonial is a transcript of Divine attributes. And God cannot, until his nature is changed, release any one to whom this transcript comes, from its binding obligation. Perfection is required of the believer's representative and surety, because the law could receive no relaxation. The believer in Christ hath a perfect righteousness. Rom. viii. 3, 4. "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." So there is a binding obligation upon all, by the moral law of God.

This moral law, the Decalogue, is called "the ministration of death." It condemned the transgressor. "If the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory." This moral law is a schoolmaster to those out of Christ. "But after that faith is come" (to Abraham and all his children,) "we are no longer under a school-master." All believers can say, "But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed." Gal. iii. 23; Rom. xiii. 8, 10: "He that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." Christ said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Matt. xxii. 37-40. God is love, and he never gave a law, otherwise than in the exercise of love. These two commandments embrace all that was found written on the two tables of stone. If we were delivered from the binding obligation of the Decalogue; we would then be delivered from the binding obligation to love God or men.

Extermination of the wicked, even the most cruel, by civil government, has become unpopular, yet the law of God is not relaxed in that particular. So the innocent suffer instead of the guilty.

JAMES BARNETT.

"Hence apostacy, heresy, and schisms, although considered in some governments as heinous offenses, and subject to severe punishment, cannot become the foundation of a charge in a Masonic lodge. Treason and rebellion, because they are altogether political offenses, cannot be inquired into by a lodge; and although a Mason may be convicted of either of these acts in the courts of his country, he cannot be Masonically punished; and notwithstanding his treason or rebellion, his relation to the lodge, to use the language of the old charges remains indefeasible." . . . . "A disclosure of any of the secrets which a Mason has promised to conceal and never reveal, is a heinous crime, and one which the monitorial lecture of the first degree expressly says, 'would subject him to the contempt and detestation of all good Masons.' Disobedience and want of respect for Masonic superiors, is an offense for which the transgressor subjects himself to punishment."—Mackey's Masonic Jurisprudence pp. 512.

The Frontier of To-day.

George William Curtis, editor of Harper's Weekly and of the "Easy Chair" department of Harper's Monthly, is evidently improving. From the last number of the latter we take the following:

'Good causes, reforms of every kind, forward movements of society, like the advances of population, have their frontiers that seem almost barbarous and inhuman to the older settlements. Before the steel is burnished with the impalpable diamond powder it must be shaped by mighty blows. The frontiers-m n of reform, Gracchus, Cromwell, Luther, Sam Adams, Garrison, must often appear wild, unreasonable, tactless, mad. But we shiver and wince at their attitude and ways in vain. The work of the trip hammer only the trip-hammer can do. The frontier man must have an eye and a hand and a heart ready by night and by day to cope with savages and wild beasts. The pioneer of reforms must be able to endure the desertion of friends as well as the peril of his life from enemies, and his voice must startle like the alarm bell at midnight."

That is a fact, Sir George. And we are not sorry that you have been pushed from your home as rudely as a savage "pale face," would drive a "red skin." We are not sorry that your "easy chair" has failed to find permanent comfort among the "older settlements." It is to the frontier which the warning voice of duty is seeking to send many. More Noahs, and Abrahams and Samsons, and John Baptists are needed at the front to-day. Men of brawn and brain; men of heart and action.

The liquor traffic, with its hundreds of millions annually squandered; with its sixty thousand yearly sent to drunkard's graves, and hundreds of thousands into pauper huts and prisons, needs the help of the rough hewers of the frontier.

Sabbath desecration, "Bible bouncing" from the schools. The spawn of secretism which swarms the land like Egypt's frogs, and which enters the homes alike of high and low are among the privations and embarassments on the frontier, which the ax of the stalwart and daring-hearted alone can fell, But down with them. Hew at the foot of the trees, cut them up root and branch, and let God's unsullied sunlight fall. If this be not done, our doom as a nation and as a Christian church is forever sealed.—Wesleyan.

Shall the Indians be Sacrificed?

We can scarcely imagine a more ill-judged measure than that which has just passed the House of Representatives, for transferring the care of the Indian tribes to the militsry. The reason against such a measure are most obvious and most conclusive.

1st. It would be a reversal of the peace policy, which has already borne incomparably better fruits than any previous method of treating Indians. This peace policy is the brightest feature of President Grant's administration. Let it not be effaced.

2d. The military, of all classes of the community, are the least fitted to take charge of Indians, if the object be their improvement. We have seen recently how little moral training there is at West Point, or rather how much training there is of a contrary nature, and every now and then come accounts of the loose morality of soldiers and officers when in the vicinity of Indian tribes.

3d. Of all men in the world, the very worst to have charge of these tribes are Sheridan, Custer, and others like them, whose intense disgust with, and contempt, not to say hatred, for Indians, breathe out at every pore.

If integrity in dealing with the Indians be sought, we have too sure evidence in the General Babcocks, Belknaps and several other generals and high officers that the army is not the best place to seek for it, and perhaps the great disgrace which these men have inflicted on the nation will thus be the means of warding off the greater disgrace of turning the Indians over to the army.

This measure, which is alike an outrage on the Indians and the Great Republic, must not be carried out.—N. Y. Witness.

Give the Quakers a fair chance.

THURLOW WEED ON THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.—The venerable Thurlow Weed has written a letter to the New York Tribune upon the question of excluding the Bible from the public schools, in which he expresses a regret that an old class-book of half a century ago, known as the "Beauties of the Bible," has been permitted to drop out of the schools. Mr. Weed says of this book:

The "Beauties of the Bible," of which the Rev. Ezra Samson, of Hudson, is the author, was first published in 1800, and contains 282 pages. If this book should be restored to our schools, the best parts of Scripture would constitute an important branch of common school education. Our children, while learning to read, would become imbued with the spirit of Christianity. The present seems a fitting occasion to call the attention of educational boards and the clergy to this book. If, simultaneously with the great uprising of the people under the eloquent Gospel appeals of Mr. Moody and the tranquiliz ng harmonies of Mr. Sankey, the "Beauties of the Bible" should be introduced as a class-book in our common schools, thousands upon thousands of our grateful children will rise up to thank those who conferred this blessing upon them.

The recommendations of Mr. Weed will come with increased force when it is considered that he has nearly reached the close of his long and busy life, and that the hand which has written so often and so powerfully on worldly matters now takes the pen in defense of one of the most sacred recollections of his younger days.—Chicago Tribune.

Political.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker, of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick, of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE INDIANA STATE POLITICAL CONVENTION will meet in Muncie, Delaware Co., on the 23rd day of May at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of putting in nomination candidates to be voted for, for State officers at the October election, and to select electors for President and Vice-president, and for transacting any other business coming properly before the convention.

Scratching the Ticket.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

The election of the board of officers of the village of——, took place yesterday, the 18th inst. The leading issue with the great majority of our citizens was license or no license. But it was quite perceptable to an observing mind, that the secret orders figured very ingeniously to have a fair representation of their own on each ticket, and to elect either straight through, would have thrown the balance of power into the hands of the mystic brotherhood.

I am much pleased to say, to the credit of our town, that there have been no licenses granted here for several years, except to druggists. But to their shame, the principal one at least has abused his privilege to such an extent that it has induced some of our best citizens to favor the license act, on the ground that there will not likely be more whiskey sold with than without licenses. The sequel is that those who clandestinely issue the poison are well skilled in the grips and signs. And then we have quack doctors who will prescribe whiskey for a man with a corn on his little toe, and then he can call as often as he gets dry, for some like that he got before; and of course the druggist issues on the old prescription, and the law is not enforced, because the gentleman occasionally wears the lamb-skin. Hence the effort of the craft in selecting candidates on both tickets. Some of us, however, discovered the trick in good time to defeat all, save one, who holds an affiliating relation to the lodge.

In the meantime we distributed a few Cynosure tracts such, as "Grand Lodge Masonry," "Masonic Oaths and Penalties," "Masonic Chastity," and we also exhibited on the streets "Past Master Ronayne's expose of Blue Lodge Masonry" in the Cynosure of April 6th. And Oh! but it raised a breeze among the mystic brothers, and still the wave rolls high. We were kindly advised to-day by one who had been Esst in search of light, that it would be to our interest to mind our own business, and let Masonry alone. Well, that's the way they look at it, but then, some men are such busy-bodies that they will meddle with other men's business. I really wish that every anti-secrecy man in this Union would so far meddle with Freemasonry at the next Presidential election as to vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick. But some of the friends of our cause, while they acknowledge the corruption of the two prominent political parties, think that of the two evils we had better choose the least, and that is to vote Republican, in order to keep the Democrats out of power. I have hitherto voted with the Republican party, but it is now out of sight, and I conclude that if my old party must be held together by the whiskey ring and led by the cable-tow, the sooner she crumbles the better, and I am for Walker and Kirkpatrick. W. W. K.

Let us Vote as we Pray.

DEAR EDITOR:—I am glad a political department is opened. Let me give my views also. Some three years ago my way to the polls was cut off by the light God gave me in answer to prayer, for as yet I knew nothing of the secret evil or profane oaths of Masonry and did not know where to get published information, but I wanted to prove it that I might hold fast to that which was good. So I asked God in this simple language, "O Lord, show me thy will in this matter concerning me." Then I received an evidence which can not be taken from me, that it was an evil of the worst form and that I could not vote for an officer, support a minister, nor commune where the sacred emblems were dealt out by Masonic hands. This stopped my voting in this direction. Last autumn I voted for R. A. Browne and Pennypacker' Prohibition candidates in this State (Pa.). We had a county ticket in Venango Co., and I find in supporting it I voted (not knowingly) for some of the craft. But the American party has removed all obstructions out of my way and I can vote that ticket in the name of the Lord. If we pray, O Lord, destroy the works of Satan and root out every evil, let us not then turn around and say, You can't do it Lord, by voting for these promoters of evil. Though we fail to elect at first we shall not lose our reward. "He that giveth a cup of cold water in my name shall in no wise lose his reward." I am yours for the truth, A. J. WEAVER.

THE IOWA STATE CONVENTION.

The Iowa State Anti-secret Association met in the College Chapel at Western, Iowa, on Tuesday evening, April 25th, at half past seven P. M. After being called to order an address of welcome was given by E. B. Kephart, and responded to Rev. T. J. Bauder of Muscatine. A brief address was then given by Rev. H. H. Hinman, State Agent of the National Christian Association for Illinois, followed by some remarks by Hon. J. B. Walker, of Wheaton, Ill. The convention then adjourned to meet at 8:30 next morning, to spend a season in devotional exercises.

Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock, after a season of devotion, a committee on enrollment was chosen, who reported a roll of fifty-six delegates, representing seven different denominations, including twenty one ministers and representing fourteen counties. The committee on nominations reported the following names for permanent officers, who were duly elected by ballot:

President—Rev. M. S. Drury, Western, Linn county.

Vice President—Rev. E. B. Kephart, Western.

Recording Secretary—E. J. Grinnell, Charles City.

Corresponding Secretary—Lewis Bookwalter, Western.

Treasurer—John Dorcas, Shiloh.

Ex Committee — Moses Varney, Springfield; and Prof. I. L. Kephart, Western.

A committee on finance and State Agency was chosen, consisting of J. L. Bookwalter, J. C. Bartholomew, John Dorcas, T. Palmeter and W. H. Oliphant. The committee on resolutions were Rev. M. Bowman, Rev. M. S. Drury, Rev. T. J. Bauder, Rev. W. S. May and H. H. Hinman. The committee on political action were David Platner, Laurie Tatum, J. H. Minthorn, C. D. Bradley, J. P. Wilson, L. M. Howard and Geo. Bokaw.

After which adjourned to meet at 1:30 P. M.

Committee met at the hour appointed, and spent a season in devotion. After which they listened to an able address, by Rev. M. S. Drury of Linn Co. Subject, "Secrecy in its relations to the family, the church and the State." After which they joined in singing, "Hold the Fort." C. G. Webb, of Springfield Ill., then gave his experience as a seceding Mason, and endorsed the statements that had been made in reference to Masonry. Brethren Hinman, Bradley, Wiggins and Dr. J. B. Walker, followed with remarks giving important facts in reference to the practical workings of the institution of Masonry, when on motion adjourned, to meet at 7 P. M.

Convention met according to adjournment, and after devotional exercises listened to an address by Hon. J. B. Walker, on the Nature and Influence of Masonic Obligations. A collection was then taken for current expenses and on motion of Bro. J. Dorcas the convention chose Oskaloosa as its next place of meeting, and the third Tuesday in April, as the time.

On Thursday morning, devotional exercises were conducted by Pres. Kephart. After approval of the minutes the convention voted to amend art 1st, of the constitution of the State Association, by inserting the word Christian, after the word Anti-secret, so as to read "Anti-secret Christian Association, auxilary to the National Christian Association, opposed to secret societies."

The committee on finance then reported. 1st, a claim against the Association of $105 due Rev. J. Hankins, for services, which they recommend to be allowed and to be raised by a collection and the balance on the field of his labor. 2d, that the ex-Committee, as soon as practical, place a competent agent and lecturer in the field, and to pay him such wages as they may agree upon. 3d, that the friends of this reform in Iowa raise at least $1000 more than is already pledged to secure the Carpenter donation. A collection was then taken up for Bro. Hankins, and $195 pledged or paid to the Carpenter donation fund.

The committee on resolutions presented the following report, which after discussion on its several items was adopted.—[The excellent resolutions are put over one week for want of room.—Ed.]

A paper was then read by Theron Palmeter, of Mason City, in reference to a newspaper to be called The Iowa Freeman, and is to be owned and conducted by an incorporated body. On motion of Pres. Kephart the subject was referred to a committee, composed of Rev. W. S. May, D. Platner and W. Oliphant.

On motion of Pres. Kephart, a series of questions in reference to extending church fellowship to members of the secret orders was referred to committee of Rev. H. H. Hinman, A. C. Staples and Prof. L. Bookwalter, who reported in substance: That fellowship ought to be withheld from those members of the secret orders who after due labor and admonition still adhere, and that the warrant for so doing is found in 1 Cor. v. 11; 2d Thess. iii. 6, and in Matt. xviii. 15-17.

The committee on political action then reported in substance as follows; That Freemasons held the controlling power in both the great political parties, and therefore, 1st, We gladly hail the rise of the American Party, with its platform of principles and candidates for President and Vice-President.

2d, We recommend that this convention take such action as shall secure to every voter of the State the privilege of casting his vote for such candidates

3d, That the friends of this reform place in the field candidates for county and town offices, in all cases where there is a considerable anti-secret sentiment.

This report was adopted and a committee of C. D. Bradley, J. Dorcas and Laurie Tatum, were chosen, whose duty it is to nominate and report our electorial ticket for the American party in Iowa, on or before the first day of August next, and at their discretion issue an address to the people.

Hon. J. B. Walker gave another able address.

Vice Presidents were then chosen as follows: S. H. Atwood, Geo. Parker, Buchanan Co.; John Stein Ainsworth, Washington Co.; J. R Patterson. Oskaloosa; T. B. Adams. Pottawatomie Co.; Dr. Lewis, Marshall Co.; D. Palmeter, Cerro Gordo Co.; James Conner, Fayette Co.; A. T. Curtis, Johnson Co.; E. S. Bunce, Muscatine Co.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the papers which published the call for the convention and on motion adjourned to meet at 7 P. M.

Convention met and chose the following delegates to the National Christian Association at Chicago, June 2d: W. S. May, D. Platner, Mr. Moffat, Rev. R. A. McAzeal, H. Hankins, E. I. Grinnell, D. Wilson, T. Palmeter and J. Dorcas.

The convention then listened to an address by Rev. H. H. Hinman, after which adjourned sine die.

The attendance was large, the spirit of the convention was most harmonious and excellent. A spirit of fervent prayer and praise seemed to be present in all our meetings. The testimony of Bro. Webb, a seceding Mason, and of Rev. Cunningham, a seceding Odd-fellow, awakened much attention. The convention adjourned full of courage and faith in the final triumph of our cause.

H. H. HINMAN,
in behalf of the Secretary.

Good News from Barry County, Mich.

HICKORY CORNERS, Mich., April 26, 1876.

Rev. J. L. Barlow has just called upon us and poured out a volume of truth such as the people of Barry county have never listened to before. Many, we believe, of our young men have thus been timely warned and will therefore escape the entanglement of the "cable-tow." The good that has been done will not be fully disclosed until the day of final accounts.

If enough young men can be found we expect to start a "clandestine" lodge in which candidates will be initiated to the disgust of the young and flourishing lodge now established.

The "old hand-maid" is fully stirred up, and the Masonic "pot" is "boiling over." Yesterday I attended a funeral at the church where Bro. Barlow lectured, and heard a sermon from a seven-degree Mason. The deceased was a girl twelve years old, whose mother being a "woodshed" Mason, had received some assistance from the fraternity, and the speaker improved the occasion by lauding the institution in which he counseled them not to mind the scoffing of fools and God would bless them in their good deeds. When he spoke of fools he trembled with rage, and the effect of the sermon was lost upon the fraternity as well as the rest of the congregation.

We have entered the battle; guns have been fired upon both sides, and we expect to "fight it out on this line if it takes us all summer." Yours for the truth. E. W. BRUCE.

Footfalls Among the Wolverines.

DEAR K:—Since my last I have been very busy—not 'seeking knowledge under difficulties;" but striving to impart light unto those who sit in darkness, so far as Masonry and its kindred is concerned. I have been permitted to meet all my appointments in spite of mud and other obstacles; and in the main have had good congregations.

From Grand Ledge, we went to Constantine, in St. Joseph Co., reaching there on Saturday evening, and finding our friends almost discouraged, yet willing to act. Arrangements were made by which I lectured in a large hall on Monday evening, to a fair audience, which received the word quietly with the exception of some boys and a certain judge whose jewel caused him some trouble. The hall being engaged for subsequent evenings we were compelled to put off the closing lecture until Saturday evening, the 25th ult.; so on the 22d we took the cars for where for three evenings we met full houses, and gave them the gospel of Anti-masonry, to the great delight of one class and the evident disgust of another. How strange!

On the way to this place I was accosted by a Masonic gentleman who heard me the night before, who said: "We had a lecture from an old gentleman, on this subject some time since, and it drove so many into the lodge, that for a time we had more than we could do; and you are going to bring about the same state of things," or words to this effect. I replied, "Admitting this to be the case, the lodge will have its treasury much benefited, and as you claim to be a 'benevolent society,' I submit that upon simple business principles you ought to pay me a good commission." But to my surprise, he made no response. He evidently did not see it in that light at all. It seems strange that, so far, not one of the gentlemen who claim that we are building up Masonry—adding to their numbers and funds,—will talk at all favorably about a division of the profits. Benevolence indeed!

While at Centerville, I watched the mails daily, for the promised letter from the Masonic minister who challenged me so boldly at Grand Ledge. He promised to write me at Centerville, so that I might have his letter on the following Wednesday. In that letter he was to let me know what points he wished to discuss, and I, in reply, was to set the time. He took my name and address, but alas! from that day to this I have heard nothing from my challenger though I visited the office in Centerville from Tuesday until Saturday, on which day I returned to Constantine, and gave my closing lecture to a large and interested congregation. Here an elderly gentleman of the Masonic persuasion interrupted me two or three times, but finally subsided on perceiving that he was really playing into my hands. On closing I gave my usual challenge for a reply, which was not accepted. After the congregation had largely departed a gentleman came to me and said: "You have been telling the truth, and may God bless you, and help you break down the order." He said he had taken three degrees and found he could not be a Mason and a Christian. He is one of a large class who are crying under the soul bondage thrown around them by the Masonic oaths. At Centerville we shared the hospitality of Messrs Fletcher and Avery, and at Constantine of Bros. Lantz and Mauchemer. From this latter place we went to in Branch Co., where we spent two nights and days of very stormy weather—it snowing and blowing most of the time; still we had fair audiences, and at the close of the last lecture another Mason gave me his testimony as to the truthfulness of my work. From this place I went alone to Hudson, where I was met by a Bro. A. K. Dibble, who took me ten miles away to the northward, in the coldest storm I have experienced this winter, to the town of

WHEATLAND,

in Hillsdale Co., where I found good friends in Bro. Isaiah Martin, the pastor of the Wesleyan church, his members, and some from the M. E church. I went among them quite sick, but after resting a night and a day, I commenced work on the evening of the 30th, and spoke that and the following evening to large and sympathetic congregations, who gave good heed to the word. During the afternoon of the last day, we formed a town organization, which, under the efficient lead of Bro. Martin, will yet be heard from. The kindness I experienced here at Bro. Dibbles will never be forgotten. From Wheatland I returned to Fenton, from whence I went on Tuesday, April 4th to and oh, the mud! For two nights I spoke in the M. E. church, and was surprised at the numbers out in spite of the almost impassable roads. Here also we formed a town organization, which starts off with a Mason at its head, who is to give the first address. Old "Billy Roberts" rose to his feet after I closed, and proposed to traverse my statements, but only succeeded in highly amusing the anti's—said he had not been with the Masons for thirty years. I asked him why? "Well," said he, "I'll tell ye. One night a regular black leg applied for admission and I kept him out. You know how I did it," said he, looking up at me with a grin! "O, yes!" said I. "you blackballed him." At this he laughed, and went on to say,—"You know that when a man is black-balled he cannot make application again for a year, "but," "said he, he made application again the next night, and was accepted!" I thanked the old gentleman for his assistance whereupon he sat down. From this place we went to and gave two lectures in the Baptist church, and also formed another town organization which may, if properly worked, be productive of much good. In this town are many good friends of our cause.

HOLLY,

next opened a door for us in the Christian church, and closed it again before we got through. This place and where I gave two lectures on Thursday and Friday of last week, have given me the coolest reception I have met with in the State. The people need the light but don't know it. Alas for them!

Ronayne in Bradford Co., Pa.

HERRICKVILLE, Pa., Apr. 22, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

By request of the Secretary of the Bradford County Anti-secret Association I send you a brief report of Mr. Edmond Ronayne's visit to this place in the early part of last month. Daniel P. Rathbun, J. R. Baird, E. W. Wheeler, and others, had recited to us the obligations and described to us the ceremonies of the lodge-room, but Masons said, "It is plain that these men never were Masons or they would not be going about the country telling such absurd stories about Masonry. They have probably been reading Morgan's books, or Bernard's or Finney's, or some other catch-penny affair, and now think to make a nice thing by lecturing against Masonry. It is a pity they don't know more about it." Well, we thought so too, but when we remembered how hard they had tried to make Elder Rathbun understand it by rail-riding and pounding and stamping and shooting and dosing, it did seem to us that he ought to know something about it; but Masons said he did not, and so there was nothing more to be said. Or, perhaps I should say there was a dispute about it and no way to end it.

But just then some one told us of Mr. Ronayne. Mr. Ronayne was a Mason. There was no dispute about that. Masonic books, periodicals and reports fully endorsed him. Masons high in authority had commended him as an intelligent, faithful worker in their order, and as a bright particular star in the constellation of Most Worshipful Master Masons. If any one knew the ancient mysteries and modern secrets of Freemasonry, most certainly Mr. Ronayne must know. But would he come out and tell us? We sent the question to him and the answer came back, "I will come." And come he did, and for two consecutive evenings he exhibited, recited and explained the rites, ceremonies and obligations of Blue Lodge Masonry.

A whispered commentary was kept up for a considerable part of the time like this, "Why, that is just as Rathbun said," and "That is just as Baird told it," and "That is just as Wheeler explained it," and others said, "Why, this is just as Morgan and Bernard published it years ago."

On commencement Mr. Ronayne said: "If there are any Masons here I will take it as a favor if they will expose me if I fail to present Masonry as it is, in its signs, its ceremonies, its moral character, or its obligations." No one exposed but just at the close of the second evening's lecture a man well-known as one of our oldest and most respectable citizens, slowly arose and said in substance: "When I was a young man I joined the Masons. It has been a long time since I have met in the lodge, but as nearly as I can recollect you have seen Masonry to-night just as I received it some forty years ago." It seemed to us then that no farther proofs were possible; but we were mistaken, for all the secret orders have been specially active since Mr. Ronayne's visit, clearly establishing the fact that they make common cause against any opposition to either, and also that Freemasonry either directly or indirectly controls all the others. But the secrets of Masonry are not all revealed yet. New forms of evil and new devices of mischief are constantly presenting themselves and the mystery of iniquity still works and will continue to work, until it has no longer place or being. DAVID M BEARDSLEY.

Now Help the Widow's Son!

Gen. Phelps, now in Philadelphia, says: "There is an evident undercurrent here to make the Centennial ledound to the interests of Freemasonry, if not to take possession of it entirely for that purpose; and it seems to me that our association should take steps to expose it, and defeat the scheme as far as possible. Foreigners should never be permitted to go away from this Christian country bearing the idea that we are a nation of hypocrites, professing Christianity openly, but in secret practicing the sly arts of Masonry, which puts us on a level with pagans."

I endorse this, knowing it to be true and feeling that it is our duty to do all we can to expose the rascality. Every man and woman who reads the Cynosure will see the necessity for prompt action.

During the summer thousands of the best and most intelligent men and women of the United States will visit Philadelphia. They will all be in the dark, while thousands of Masons will be playing sly tricks on them. But tracts containing a notice of our reform will open their eyes and bring us money, workers, speakers and able writers.

We suggest a committee of three or more citizens of Philadelphia, to take charge of the distribution of tracts, etc. Such a committee will know how, when and where to scatter tracts to the greatest advantage. Boys or other persons will gladly hand them around for fair pay. What we do must be done quickly. E. J. CHALFANT.

[Elder Freeman will do all that can be done in this work on the Centennial grounds. A free distribution to the crowds outside would be a noble work and we would suggest that Gen. Phelps secure the co-operation of friends in Philadelphia to carry it out. —ED.]

How I Became A Mason.

I was raised in Pennsylvania. When a young man I went into the State of New York, Yates county, to a place called Dundee. I took a common school for four months, and soon became acquainted with the great men of the place. They told me there was a secret den held there by the great men of the town in a hall in the upper part of a large building, and I had better join it. It would make a great man of me. They said all the great men of the town belonged to it, and many ministers of the Gospel, and all the great and good men of the country, and if I would join it, it would make a great man of me; and I could get higher wages for teaching and be thought more of; and if I got in any bad scrape or trouble, my brethren would help me out, and I would find friends wherever I went.

Influenced by these fair promises, I sent in a petition to join this den of darkness—for they always hold these dens in the darkness of the night. I was accepted; they took me into a small closet adjoining the den, stripped off my clothes, and tied a rope around my neck about nine or ten feet long, and a hood-wink around my eyes, so I could not see. Then I was led into this den like a fool, and led up to the head man of the den. In this predicament he said I must take an oath, not to reveal any of the works of the devil in that den.

I then took the horrible oath of the first degree. After this I went on till I took three degrees, and the awful oaths attached to them. Then I saw the devil had got me, soul and body, in this trap, and the trap secured by three great, strong chains, and as I was a school teacher I was inclined to study hard questions and try to solve them. I then began to examine the chains of the devil's trap I was caught in, for I longed to get loose and be a free man once more. The first chain was covered with letters. I studied them them out and they read thus: I bind myself to have my throat cut from ear to ear, my tongue torn out by the roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark, etc., if I should ever reveal any of the works of the devil I had seen in that den, or should see hereafter. I thought this a very strong chain. Then I looked at the second chain. It read thus: "I bind myself to have my left breast torn open, my heart and vitals taken out, and thrown over my left shoulder, and carried to the valley of Jehosbaphat and there given to the wild beasts, and fowls of the air to prey upon, if I should ever reveal anything I had received in that den, or should receive hereafter. I examined the third chain, and the writing was this: I bind myself to have my body severed in two in the midst, and half divided to the North and half to the South, and my bowels burnt to ashes in the center, should I ever reveal, etc. This is still a stronger chain.

Well, I thought I would not lie there in the devil's trap any longer than I could help, so I resolved to try to get out. I made one mighty effort to get loose and behold! the chains became like the cord that bound Samson; they parted asunder and the trap flew from my soul and body, and I became once more a free man, like a bird let out of a cage. All this happened in the year of our Lord, 1826, just fifty years ago the past winter. I have been trying ever since that time to warn people against the secret traps of the devil, in my weak way. I am now about 71 years old, and thank God the devil never has got me in one of his secret traps since that time. Yours respectfully, CURTIS COGSWELL.

A Review.

WEST UNITY, O.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A short time ago a friend gave us an article on Masonry and requested us to reply to it through the Cynosure. The article is credited to the Corner-Stone, and starts out as follows: "Freemasonry has its history—a history full of noble and generous deeds, well worthy to be preserved and cherished through ages to come. She has survived the vicissitudes, the wars and the revolutions of nearly thirty centuries, and has witnessed the rise and growth of all the civilized nations on the face of the earth."

For one hundred and fifty years the earth has been ransacked to find something to prove the antiquity of Masonry. Grand orators have proclaimed it, until orators not so grand have perhaps believed it. Grave D. D. have written it, and but a few days ago we heard it proclaimed at the grave of a deceased member of the fraternity, in speaking of the emblem of innocence and the lodge of a Mason, "It is more ancient than the Golden Fleece or Roman Eagle," and that "our order has existed from time immemorial," but we have never yet been informed where the evidence can be found.

Again, "The principles of our order inculcate honor, probity, justice, self-abnegation; they denounce, they condemn, dishonor, falsehood, injustice and presumption. They teach mankind to live together as one great family, loving, cheering, true to one another as God who is our Father is true to us."

To which we would reply that after studying it for thirty years, at home and abroad, in the camp and on the battle-field, in the caucus, the convention and at the ballot-box, in the social circle and in trade, in the temple of justice and in the temple of God, if we were called upon to state its principles as they have appeared to us, we would reverse the whole of the above, and defy the world to give its true character in fewer words. When the Redeemer claimed to be the Son of God the high priest rent his clothes, and accused him of blaspheming, but when it is claimed for Masonry, as it is here, that it is as true as God, we hear of no Masonic minister rending his clothes.

Again, a man is never too old to practice brotherly love, relief and truth, never too old to bring a ripened judgment, a holy and consistent life to bear on his younger brethren.

True, every word of it, "Old men for counsel," but how many men of large experience and sound judgment, have you spurned from your lodge door on account of their being too old?

Again, Masonry has ever been loyal to its own principles, characteristics and aims, it has sought to do no work but its own. True of course, as it would be of every excessively selfish man, or combination of men in the world.

Again, "Amid all the strifes which have sundered communities and deluged the world in blood, Freemasonry has been in the enjoyment of tranquil repose."

And what does it prove? admitting their claims to be true. Why, it proves that they could—yes, did stand unmoved and hear Rachel weep for her children; that they could tranquilly look on while the Redeemer was being nailed to the cross, and though fifty millions of Protestants have been sacrificed to the genius of popery, Gallio like they have cared for none of these things. We believe it was Cato who said when his country was being plundered, "It were a shame for Cato's house to stand at such a time," which shows the difference between his wisdom and the wisdom of Masonry.

Again, "The world is wide, and the demand is great enough to employ the energies of all, but Masonry leads the column of that great army which followed the church of Christ up and down, and to and fro in the earth conquering peace and fraternity among men." How this can be reconciled with the "tranquil repose" mentioned above while the world was being deluged with blood, and the great majority of that blood the blood of this same church, we fail to see, but any one can see by the above that it is Masonry and not the church, that is conquering peace, and that in the estimation of the writer the song of the multitude of the heavenly host to the shepherds of Bethlehem, of "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will towards men," was not sang of the Redeemer, or of his church, but of Masonry.

Again, "Masonry is a country of charity, whose streams go out to invigorate and gladden the sorrowful, to bear relief to famished poverty, to meander by the widow's cottage and to lave the feet of the orphan. Its crystal waters cool the fever of partisan passion, and baptize men of conflicting views into a great brotherhood of mercy."

If all this—or the half of it is true, is it any wonder that Masons prefer the lodge to the church?

Yours, &c., J. G. MATTOON.

Anderson's History.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

In your paper of Mar. 30th, 1876, I notice the Masons have been disputing the date friend Barlow has given to the origin of Masonry, viz. A. D. 1717. To say that Masonry existed previous to the above date is all supposition, and whosoever doubts the truth of this let him examine Dr. Anderson's "Constitution" (printed in 1738) page 109, where it is written that four companies, that is to say some persons who were wont to meet at the Goose and Gridiron ale-house in St. Paul's churchyard; at the Crown ale-house in Parker's Lane; at the Apple-tree in Charles street, Covent Garden; and at the Rummer and Grapes in Channel Row, Westminster, did meet at the Apple-tree aforesaid, in the year 1717, and having chosen (the nameless before hinted) a chairman, they constituted themselves a lodge.

Such are the words of the most authentic history among Masons, and they beyond contradiction prove the origin of their supremacy to be a self-created assembly.

Anthony Sayer was the first Grand Master of Masonry found on record. He mounted the supreme chair upon the 24th day of June, 1717.

White Line in the Grange.

WEST UNITY, Ohio.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Last Spring seeing an advertisement of a granger text-book, I sent for one. The first part was for the white man and the back part for the colored man. I have proved the white man's ritual as far as the fourth degree by giving signs that I learned in my book to a steward of a lodge, and he did not know but that I was a granger till he mistrusted that I was teaching a man in an adjoining room whom he knew was not a member of the order.

Since that I met another man whom I accosted but was not recognized. "I am not acquainted with you." I said, "Did you not know me by this?" giving him the Patron's general sign, and he said he had not been to the lodge since last spring, and he did not notice, and then said he would tell me, but he would not tell an outsider, that the grange was going down out West. Politics was the reason. He said they had let polities in, and they did not attend the lodge much where he came from.

One of the best granger speakers whom I asked what is the reason the colored man has a different ritual, said that he would not dare to organize a grange down South of the colored men under the white ritual. I think it is time Republicans open their eyes to see what the real intentions of the grange are before it is too late.

Missions or Masonic Balls.

PLAINFIELD, Will Co., Ill.

"The Masonic Installation in this city on the evening of the 29th ult., was one of the most brilliant affairs of the season, in this city. Many strangers were present and the imposing ceremonies engaged the strictest attention of all present in the thronged hall. Mr. Odell's address was an effort of the first water, and was highly appreciated by both those within and without the fold. The supper under the auspices of the ladies of the Presbyterian church, was all that could be desired and the succeeding hop, with Ike Millspaugh's sole stirring voice, was the crowning event of the night."

FAITHFUL CYNOSURE:—

As I am going to renew my subscription, I thought I would send you a clipping from a Joliet paper. It grieves me to see churches intermingling in ceremonies that bear the impress of heathenish rites.

It seems especially appropriate now that the "Centennial" has dawned upon us, that Christians certainly should rise "into the liberty of the sons of God" and recognize Christ alone as the way, the truth, the light, instead of assisting and fostering that Spirit of anti Christ which is cherished in Masonry.

I remember but a few months since the ladies of this same church spoken of, gave a splendid repast in the interest of the Woman's F. M. Society, just before our Missionary, Miss Dora Schoonmaker, was sent to proclaim Christ to the heathen in India. How sad that they should, in aiding what is so unchristian, help to sustain those heathenish mysteries, of which the apostle says, "It is a shame even to speak"! It may be ignorance, but surely light is in the world.

The 'hop' exceeded the supper it seems. Why then preach against such good things?

Respectfully yours,

MRS. ETTIE R. COWELL, M. D.

Will We Act?

NEKOMA, Henry Co., Ill.

There is much being said in this time of attempted reform against the evils of Masonry. I have not much personal knowledge of what is usually done inside of a Masonic lodge, but my eyes are not entirely closed to all that is being spread out before the outside or heathen world. We, poor unenlightened outside worldlings may know something of this pet evil, if we will only open our eyes and look.

An aged friend, to the reform called on me a few days ago, and among other things that he told me concerning this child of Satan, was the following in reference to the murder of Capt. Morgan. He said that at the time of Morgan's abduction, he was living within eight miles of where Morgan was taken from, and that he knows, as well as he knows anything that he did not see, that he (Morgan) was murdered.

This is the testimony of one whose years are four score and seven; not a wild fanatic, but one of cool deliberate judgment. I am aware that Masons of to-day attempt to cover up this foul crime, but murder will out, all the efforts of men and devils to cover it up to the contrary notwithstanding.

But this is not all that we may know of this blood-stained institution. The tendency is for man to make it his god, before whose shrine he bows down to worship; and to prove this statement evidence is not wanting. I know of some who have been led from the God of heaven to this Baal worship; and these known facts influence my mind, for I was once a Baal-worshiper, and bowed before the shrine of Odd-fellowship.

I have now before my mind one who once seemed to be a devoted Christian, but who has since been hood-winked and cable-towed in order to raise (lower) him to the honors (dishonors) of Masonry; and if we are to judge the tree by its fruits he soon after his elevation, (distinguishable lowering) lost all his seeming interest in the cause of Christ. In order to obedience to the Worshipful Master, he seemed to neglect the commands of the Good Master. I believe that he did neglect religious duties for the more pressing ones of the "secret conclave."

Thus much concerning Masonry. I do think that I know, and need not to be "cable-towed" in order to be apprised of the fact. And more than this, I have, when there was an especial effort being made to build up a languishing Zion, known professed Christians to absent themselves from the house of God, for the express purpose of being present at the temple of Dagon. When all ought to have come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, these would go up to the help of the devil against the Lord. When all ought to have lent a helping hand in order to an ingathering of souls into the fold, these were up gathering into the folds of Masonry.

Christ with them used to be first, and all else secondary; but now Masonry is first with them, and Christ is only secondary, if at all. How sad the sight!

And now, without fear or favor, I assert most emphatically, that anything, I care not how high sounding its title may be, nor how popular, nor how much it may be worshiped and adored by men, small or great, high or low, rich or poor, neither how much it may be sanctioned and legalized by those who sit in high places, if it wean the affections from Christ, it is a monster evil that is to be feared, and ought to be crushed.

Against it every child of grace and every lover of reform ought to wage an uncompromising warfare, and fight it until the last vestige of it is wiped from the face of the earth.

Brethren in Christ, can we rest while a monster of so hideous mien is stalking abroad in our land, and gathering our fellows one by one into the vortex of ruin and woe? Let us arise, that blood be not required at our hands in the day of judgment.

In this time of earnest effort we want men of stamina. We want men of decision, men who will act, and trust God for results. The cloud may not be larger than a man's hand now; but it is destined to grow until it covers the whole heavens.

Who will be on the Lord's side?

"Choose you this day whom you will serve." Our interests, civil and religious, are at stake.

And while this is so, will we sleep as do others? Let us arise and go forth in the name of the Lord of hosts, for we are abundantly able to go up and possess the land.

G. A. Brown.

OUR MAIL.

O. C. M. Bates, Constantine, Mich., writes:

"I will just say that Rev. J. L. Barlow made Constantine a visit in March and delivered two lectures to the people; first proving that the religion of Masonry is composed of heathen rites and ceremonies, and their worship to be devil worship; second he showed the horridness of their oaths, and further proved to them that they were bound and sworn to lie by the nature of their Masonic obligations. But I am sorry to say that the most of the Methodist brethren refused to come out to hear the lecture. They all seemed to make excuses like the guests that were bidden to the wedding. But the truth is they wish to remain ignorant of the truth lest their conscience be defiled."

Jacob Ackhart, Schaghticoke, N. Y., writes:

"I find uphill work in trying to increase the circulation of the Cynosure in consequence of the lamentable apathy that prevails among the professed friends of the reform, but I am not discouraged. I will persevere in faith knowing that truth will prevail against the works of darkness."

This is a good time to sow seed and if it is improved the reaping-time will surely come.

W. M. Love, Osceola, Mo., writes:

"I am just on my way home from Roscoe in this county, where last night and the night before I lectured to large attentive audiences on the evils of Masonry. I will give you a more extended notice when I get home. I will here only say the good cause grows apace and the signs have never been more encouraging than they are at present."

This is good news and should put fresh strength into the hearts of all our readers.

Moses Pettengill, Peoria, Ill., writes:

"A Mason said to me that they, the lodge, had received more applications for membership since our good meetings here last fall than ever before. So it seems there are some foolish men yet. But our meetings with Ronayne's exposition of the heathenish initiation of Masons into the lodge will prove, I trust, to be like good seed sown in good ground."

One who has been an observer of the results of the Masonic revelations says that the exposition of the character of Freemasonry tends to bring honest, intelligent men out of the lodge although it drives in the knaves.

Theo. Graefe, Becks Mills, O., writes:

"I thank God that the Carpenter donation is secure. Such an undertaking which is alone for the glory of God, must prosper in spite of all the host of hell, for He cannot deny Himself. Praise and adoration be to the Lamb! I distribute every paper after reading so that it gets introduced among the people. I hope to secure some subscribers soon. I am heart and hand in the cause, and will do all I can."

W. H. Linam, Pine Apple, Ala., writes:

"I get the Cynosure regularly and send it around to my neighbors. It has a good many friends here but they say they are too poor to send for it as yet. Times are very hard here. I hope you will succeed."

We are glad to hear from our good friends in the South, and hope they will rapidly multiply.

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for May 14.—Christian Courage.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts iv. 8-22. Commit 8-13; Primary Verse, 19.

8 Then Peter filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people and elders of Israel,

9 If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole;

10 Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazereth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole.

11 This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.

12 Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.

13 Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled, and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.

14 And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it.

15 But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves,

16 Saying, What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we can not deny it.

17 But that it spread no further among the people. let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name.

18 And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus.

19 But Peter and John answered and said unto them, Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.

20 For we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.

21 So when they had further threatened them, they let them go, finding nothing how they might punish them, because of the people: for all men glorified God for that which was done.

22 For the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was shewed.

Above the spaces of our garden home,
Soft by the washing of the Western foam,
Where we have lived and loved in days past by;
We must not weep, my darling, or upbraid
The quiet death that comes to part us twain;
But know that parting would not be such pain
Had not our love a perfect flower been made.
And we shall find it in God's garden laid
On that sweet day wherein we meet again.

Farm and Garden.

USE AND ABUSE OF THE ROLLER.

Many farmers, says a correspondent of the New York Times, make a practice of rolling their spring grain after sowing, yet this is not in all cases advisable. Often in the hurry of spring seeding, crops are got in while the soil is yet too damp and cold, and in all such cases rolling the ground only packs it closer and makes it colder and damper.

If a rain should cause a hard crust to form over winter or spring grain, the roller will break it down and leave better chance for light and air to get into the soil. It is better in such cases to wait till the oats or barley are up. The roller will break the crust, and the crop will shade the ground sufficiently to prevent another forming, whereas, if the field be rolled immediately after sowing, rains are apt to make the ground hard and dry through the whole season. A light harrow will do the work better than the roller, even after the crop is up, with the additional advantage of destroying the crop of weeds which usually start even with the grain. Oats or barley can be harrowed, at least when drilled in, until they are three or four inches high. A very few plants may be uprooted, but those simply crushed down under the harrow will tiller all the better for it, and the great majority will not be injured at all.

PLAN FOR A GARDEN.

The farmer's fruit and vegetable garden should be so arranged that it can be easily cultivated by horse-power. It is a good plan to lay out a rod or more at each end, of greensward where the horse can be turned around while either cultivating or plowing it. This would do away with a great deal of backbreaking work, and serve to keep the weeds well under, and the ground so stirred up that the crops would be highly remunerative. Grapevines could be planted along each side of the garden and trained to trellises or fences. The vegetables should be planted in rows from north to south, and so far apart that the horse could be driven between the rows. Then dwarf pears and apples, plums, cherries, and peach trees, could be planted in the same way, at one side, and kept under good culture. Thus arranged there would be hardly any hand-weeding or hoeing, for a one-horse steel plow could take their place, and the farmer, with very little trouble, could daily enjoy the products of both garden and orchard.

—Start an asparagus bed, if you have not already done it. There is no plot of ground on our premises which pays so well as the asparagus bed. It yields ten crops at least in a season, and often a score; and asparagus is one of the most healthy of all vegetables. It comes early, also, and fills a great vacuum between winter and summer. When once planted it lasts for a lifetime.

—Take a rainy day in the spring to set out shade and fruit trees. A naked farm-house is not only unsightly but is uncomfortable. Trees afford protection from the cold winds of winter and the hot rays of the summer's sun. A farm may often be doubled in its commercial value by a good supply of shade trees. They give the place an inviting look. A few pines planted so as to shelter the house from the prevalent winds will save fire-wood, and will impart a healing balsam to the air, which may ward off miasm, and that most terrible scourge, consumption. Elms are more magnificent, but there is nothing like the white pine for health and protection.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1876.

HOW SHALL WE SUCCESSFULLY COPE WITH ROMANISM.

One could wish the term "Protestantism," erased, and "Christianity" put in its place. Sprung from a German Protest in 1539, it has long since been out grown, as Christianity must out-grow all terms not "given by inspiration of God." Romanism is a sect, protesting against all other sects; and so more protestant than we. While "Protestantism" is now in the popular speech nearly a synonym for the Christian religion, and would be quite, but for the Romanizing elements which alloy and corrupt it.

Popery is the principles of popery, and the ceremonies of popery wherever found, and before we can know how to cope with Romanism, we must see distinctly in what it consists; what it is.

From the first there have been but two sorts of religion on this earth; true and false, that given of God, and that invented by men. It is inherently impossible there should be a third sort. And I need scarcely say that Jesus Christ is Lord of the true religion, and Satan and his angels animate, guide, control and wield all others. This simple view simplifies the question, how we are to cope with Romanism?—which is the infiltration of paganism, or the false religions of the world, into and upon the religion of Christ.

I will endeavor, in a series of negative and affirmative paragraphs, to give answers, or rather hints toward answers, to this question.

1st. We cannot "cope with Romanism" by acting on principles of worldly wisdom, for the "god of this world" (that is, according to concurrent orthodox writers for ages, the being worshiped in the world's idolatries, those of Rome included), is Satan, and he will give the world's favor, kingdoms, and glory, to those who worship him, as we do not. We cannot therefore out-run ritualists in worldly popularity, nor compete with Rome in world-craft and cunning. Christ has undertaken to conquer this world from Satan by teaching and suffering. We must follow him.

2nd. Protestantism will never succeed against Romanism by church-centralization, whether with or without priestly or ecclesiastical power. The reason is, that there is no church-centralization in the New Testament. Christ has given none. The course of the Gospel, like the course of nature, is from particulars to generals. The local churches in the New Testament, were independent by the word of Christ.

There is, of course, no want of reason and scripture for Christians meeting for counsel and advice when necessary, but the moment such organizations become permanent, they ordinarily, and in the estimate of the people, become ecclesiastical, literally part and parcel of "The church of God, the pillar and ground of the truth." And so far forth as they do so, they become anti-Christ, animated by the spirit and "god of this world."

I am not censuring the Protestant associations. But what has the world's Christian Alliance done, what is it now doing against such men as Hecker and his Paulists? An order whose very name implies that they are missionaries to the heathen population of the United States, as Paul was to those of Asia Minor! The triumphs of the world's Christian Alliance, if they have any, are all abroad. The rush toward Rome in this country was never greater than since that organization, never greater to-day.

3d. Nor will Romanism fall by its own blunders and dissentions, by the loss of the pope's temporalities, or the rage of taxed and oppressed papists.

For years, Protestant associations have been promising the downfall of Pope—and he is unfallen yet. He has lost something in taxes, and millions are proffered him in presents. Those effete countries which popery has emasculated of their manhood, count, and will count but little in the world's future. The moral strength of this world is to-day here in the United States, and here Romanism travels steadily toward the ascendant. And even outside the Romish church everything rushes into ritualism. There cannot be a temperance society started and become popular, but ritualism rushes in, rides it, and thus Romanizes our people!

How are the squabbles between Romish infidels, and Romish devotees in worn out Italy, to help us against our own confluent gulf-streams of infidel liberalism and Romish ritualism in this country? Such squabbles inhere in the "troubled sea" of popery. The Spanish patriot Castellar shows us, in his speeches, that popes have been against popes, councils against councils, popes against councils, and councils against popes! Such squabbles do not kill popery.

When Athenians were busy asking, "Is Philip dead? Is Philip dead?" Demosthenes indignantly answered: "Suppose he were dead; you would make another Philip!"

It is not yet quite a century since Pope Clement XIV. by a bull abolished the order of the Jesuits. What came of that? Forty-one years afterward, another bull restored the order, and it now controls the Popedom. Before their suppression by Clement, the monarchies of Europe had in succession driven out the Jesuits as assassins general and absolvers of assassins; but they have made them more Jesuits! No worse changes can we hope for to befall Romanism than it has already and often survived.

4th. Nor, finally, and above all, shall we, can we succeed against Romanism, while Protestant ministers and peoples are, under whatever names, doing the very same things which make and constitute popery. Lofty titles, worldly splendor, accumulated wealth, secrecy, mystery, man-made-rites, and lying legends; these, these are the world's religion! They constitute and compose popery, Freemasonry, paganism and Mohammedanism, and an unsophisticated man looking on a procession of each at a little distance, cannot tell which is which. They are all worships, paid not to Christ, but to the "god of this world." And we may just as rationally expect a whisky ring to enforce the revenue laws and keep government pure, as to hope that such Protestantism will exterminate Romanism.

What then are we to do? By whom, or what, or when shall we prevail?

I answer: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord."

Let us glance at some of the movements which have driven back and vanquished the very same forces which constitute the staple and substance of Romanism, and learn our lesson from thence.

Moses headed a successful movement in his day against these same sorceries. His movement hung on two hinges. He would not go until he secured God's 'presence" to go with him, and he kept himself and people vigorously within the word of God. Elijah and all the prophets did the same. So did Christ and the apostles. Their whole life and teachings and death, were one long protest against traditions, commandments, religions, and parts of religions invented by men, as substitutes for atoning blood, and Christ the only "way" to the Father! And democracy has always followed the true religion and despotism the false. Moses taught the equality of men before the law, or "one manner of law" for native and alien, and that the love of the neighbor must equal that of self. Christ was himself one of the common people; lived and died such. And Nazareth and Gallilee and Pentecost and Mars Hill are all protests against the ways and worships of the god of this world; all instances of the Spirit of God working through poor and untitled men, against the throne, and dominions, the priests, persecutors, principalities and powers of this present world.

There is but one being whom the Spirits who inhabit the world worships fear, one power before whom they quail. That person is Christ. And the first bold, sustained attempt since Moses to construct a church and state under the immediate direction, and by the sole authority of Christ, was made by the Pilgrims to New England. This, their writers inform us, they did, and the result is the United States, which the priests and priest-governed populations of the world are in motion to suppress!

We must go, not to those Pilgrims, who were but men; we must go to the sources from which they drew—the word and Spirit of God. Satan can thwart every human movement but a revival of religion, and that is not a human movement. But while we depend immediately on the Spirit, we must conform to the word of God. We must not insult our Savior with strange doctrines, strange government, or strange rites. We must "prepare the way of the Lord," who is ever ready to come to us, by 'taking these things hence.' We may be mistaken, may differ in details, but if we boldly attempt obedience God will bless the mistaken, and as light increases, the unity of his chosen will increase until all true Christians will be one in Spirit, one in method, and one in Christ; who hath already gone forth conquering, and to conquer, because those who are with him are called and chosen and faithful.

A HOLE IN THE WALL.

The following from "Loomis' Musical and Masonic Journal" of April 1876, give to the eyes of "profanes" a peep into the condition of the lodges in Hartford after the Anti-masonic convention of 1875 in that city. It will be gratifying to all friends and especially so to Bros. Rathbun, Barlow and Stratton, who labored so acceptably in that Convention, to know that the fruit of their labors so soon appears. The editor says: "From a brother in Hartford we learn that the bodies are not very much pressed with work. Hartford and St. John's lodges doing but little; Lafayette lodge nothing.' The writer attempts to account for this state of things as resulting from "the dullness of the times," and adds, "A great number being unable to join the fraternity on this account;" and finally he encourages the brethren to hope for a revival in the spring. And this is a "benevolent institution," doing more we are told than the church for suffering humanity, and is thus glorified by Rob. Morris: "Freemasonry is the great central sun in religion, of which Christianity is only the shadow." And Rebold asserts that it is destined to become the universal religion of all nations. If so, what will become of the women, fools, cripples, and poor men, when this "universal brotherhood" shall realize its grand ideal and gather all who can pay and are not otherwise inelligible into this "golden circle" of of which Albert Pike is the central figure in America. Will the poor dogs (cowans) who cannot pay be then mercifully allowed to eat of the crumbs that fall from the tables of these "Grand Pontiffs, Grand Sacrificers and All-Puissant Sovereigns"? It is hardly supposable that an institution of the character of Freemasonry would allow even the poor pittance of crumbs to the "profane." Their whole record is against such an inference and rather suggests a condition like that produced by the pouring out of the "fifth vial," when men shall "gnaw their tongues for pain."

Every Christian should pray and labor to be delivered from this anti-Christ, but if the trial must come then let us beseech God to send as he did to Gethsemane, an angel to strengthen the despised and rejected ones to endure unto the end.

—We are happy to present an early report of the very interesting State Convention at Western, Iowa, last week; thanks to Bro. Hinman, who was present. The resolutions adopted will appear next week.

—On the 13th page we reprint a petition to the M. E. General Conference meeting in Baltimore, on the 1st of the present month. This petition was drawn up by Rev. A. Hard of Painted Post, N. Y., and will commend itself to every reader. Cut it out, paste on a sheet of cap paper, get all the signatures you can and send it to Bro. Hard, who will see that it is presented to Conference. Rev. D. Yant of Bolivar, O., has also prepared a petition of shorter form, which we published a while since. We repeat the notice then given that copies can be had of him, and when signed be returned for presentation. This work should be prosecuted with vigor for the next week. In places where there are no members of the M. E. church who will begin it, let some other friend of Christ stand up for a "suffering truth" and start it. In every Methodist Episcopal church in the land there are some whose piety is not yet under the ban of the lodge. Get their names before the General Conference.

—The Connecticut State meeting was held successfully at Waterbury, beginning Wednesday last. Mr. Ronayne is remaining to give a finishing blow to the lodge in that region. The General Agent returned immediately to New York. He was followed by Masons, who threatened that he should never leave that city alive. What honest man can fellowship or maintain the horrid lodge!

THE GENERAL AGENT'S LOSS.—In the statement last week of the burning of Bro. Stoddard's house in Byron, the sum due him was put at about $500. An examination of the accounts shows that the Association owes him for honest, hard work, $1045.79. Because he must be paid something or take up some other business to support his family, the Director's Board voted to loan him such sums as he might need and the treasurer now holds his notes for $518, the first one dated Aug. 27, 1875. He has since June last raised donations for the Publishing House which will realize over $14,000, besides keeping up an extended and laborious lecture work. Interests, rents and donations to the general or lecture funds will be available to pay our General agent, and in his present severe loss the urgency of the case will appear to every one.

Conventon in California

By order of Rev. John Black of Upper Lake, Lake Co., Cal., Chairman of committee of organization, a convention of the committee and all friends of the National Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will meet in the basement of the Congregational church in Sacramento, Sixth street, between I and J streets, on the 25th of May next, at 1 o'clock P. M. The meeting is for men and women, all persons friendly to the cause.

1. To consider the nature of the secret orders now widely operating in this country, and their bearing on the cause of Christ and our civil institutions.

2. To arrange for the labors of Pres. J. Blanchard of Wheaton College, Ill., during five consecutive weeks beginning on Sabbath, July 9th next.

All friends of Jesus Christ, who is superceded and set aside by the lodge; and all friends of open, free and equal popular government, and opposed to taking secret advantage of our fellowmen, are invited to meet in council at the above time and place. All who wish to avail themselves of the labors of Pres. Blanchard it is hoped will take prompt measures to hold meetings, one or more, in their respective localities, and be present to arrange appointments for the same. By order of

JOHN BLACK, Chairman,
PHIL BECK Sec'y.

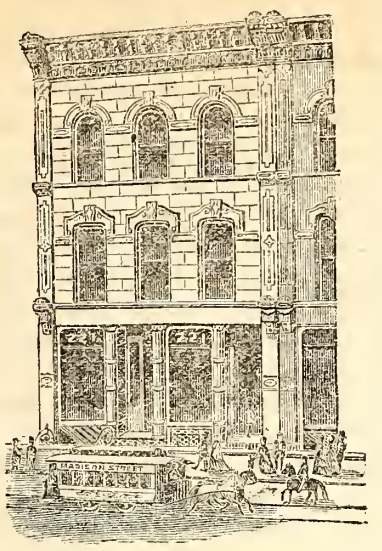
News of the Week.

—On Sunday morning the prisoners in the county jail in this city overpowered the only jailor left about the premises and fourteen of them escaped, one being soon recaptured.

—The Evening Journal of Friday says editorially: "There appears to be no doubt of the truth of the report that Don Carlos, the pretender to the Spanish throne, is in this country. He was recognized in this city last Sunday by those who have seen him at Madrid and Paris, who assure us most positively that they saw him accompanied by three Spanish companions at mass in the French Catholic church on Halsted street on that day. Those from whom we derive this information are very positive that it was the veritable Don Carlos."

—The Grand jury with Story, of the Times at its head, has unearthed a vast system of robbery and corruption in the management of the affairs of Cook county.

—Speaker Kerr ruled in Friday the House of Representatives that the section in the Legislative Appropriation bill transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, was not germaine to the bill, and must be stricken out.



—Secretary Bristow has been completely exonerated before the committee on the case of the vessel Mary Merritt, seized by the revenue officers.

—The impeachment trial drags along and it is even hinted that the Senate will summarily dismiss it for want of jurisdiction, on the ground of Belknap's resignation, and turn that gentleman over to the criminal court.

FOREIGN.—A Madrid dispatch states that the Spanish Congress has rejected the amendment reversing the religious toleration clause of the Constitution, thus taking ground against the demands of the Pope.

—A great riot took place in the Barbadoes Islands last week, and was quelled after 500 of the rioters were taken prisoners. During the riot forty persons were killed and a number wounded. The position of affairs is very threatening. Public confidence in the Government is destroyed.

In The National Sunday Schoo Teacher for May, Rev. C. D. Helmer writes on the appropriate theme of "The Early Church;" Prof. J. T. Hyde, D. D., contributes an article on "The times of Restitution," an abstruse subject, well handled, and which is touched upon in the first lesson of the month; Rev. Wm. W. Patton, D. D., treats of "Scripture-Types and their Abuses"—a subject upon which teachers especially should be posted; Rev. Jesse Lyman Hurlbut has some suggestive thoughts upon each of the lessons for the month; and then come the lessons themselves, thoroughly treated and rich in thought and in material. Freedom in Christ.

Not all the floods of care and grief can drown,
Dungeons and fetters cannot chain the heart
That Christ hath taught how blessed to impart;
Alas, not all the love thou showerest down,
Nor all thy sunny days our year to crown,
Can swell the heart that selfishness hath dried;
Nor prison doors unloosed, and bonds untied,
Can free the heart that to its chain hath grown.
Have mercy on us, Lord, and set us free
From all that fearful debt we owe to thee.
From all the tyranny that reigns within,
The tempter and the world, the self and sin;
Then even earth, in service, thanks and love,
Shall give us foretastes of the bliss above.

Prayer for the Holy Spirit.

Everything is subordinate to this chief gift of God since the return of His Son to His right hand in heaven. He is the Spirit of the Father, and He is the Spirit of the Son, and He is the Spirit of the believer, the one common Spirit of them all, by whom they are made one in that sublime and mystical fellowship, set forth in the latter part of our Lord's intercessory prayer. He is the life giving, resurrection Spirit of souls dead in sin. He is the Spirit of conviction, of illumination, of sanctification, of consolation, of strength; of all the graces which make and adorn the Christian. He only reveals Christ in the soul, and transforms it into His image. On this sacred Person all men are immediately and absolutely dependent.

The solemnity of prayers for the Holy Spirit addressed by us unworthy sinners, either to the Father, or to the Son, or to the Divine Spirit Himself, is made very manifest. When we ask for any temporal blessing; when we ask for the conversion of a child or a friend; when we ask for our own comfort or growth in grace, the mind is fixed on a far inferior object, and it cannot well be in that attitude of lowliness and dependence and adoration that it must be, when, with intelligence and earnestness we seek the advent, and the presence, and the omnipotent mercy of this Divine Person. In such prayer we are brought exceedingly near to the Lord Jesus, and plead for this august manifestation in His name, by His blood and merit, as we cannot do for any other object we place directly before our minds. The sympathy and fellowship of the soul with God are intimate and sacred, and impressive beyond all thought. Prayer becomes the most unearthy and spiritual act in which a creature can engage. There is, on our part, a directness of contact with the Infinite Spirit, in His holiness and glory, which awes and humbles the soul under a sense of instant and absolute dependence, and which gives a meaning to the commands and promises of the covenant, impossible to be otherwise attained. A sweet and gracious friendship is formed between the suppliant and the adorable object; a holy familiarity with the only source of all good becomes habitual; and the person has "power with God," and prevails as by a spiritual necessity. "The Love of the Spirit" becomes a blessed reality, and one has a sort of command of its inexhaustible fulness. Prayer is thus "fervent and effectual;" fervent, because of the office-work and grace and glory of Him who is sought; effectual, because He dwells among men for the very purpose of answering such prayer.—Interior.

Not Creeds, but Christ.

Long ago, in frontier times, there dwelt in the West a sturdy mountaineer and his family. His cottage was built upon a rocky summit that could be seen for miles around. It not unfrequently provoked a remark of surprise on the part of the travelers, that in those lonely wilds a man should select such a spot for his home. But it was oftener the occasion of joy to strangers, when after nightfall they were directed to a hospitable shelter by the friendly twinkling of the cottage window.

One day, three brave, stalwart sons, as they had often done before, went out on a hunting occasion. After wandering about several miles, and taking but little game, the proposal was made that they should separate, and yet keep within a safe distance of one another, by interchanging an occasional signal. Their plan worked well for a time, but it was not long before the signal was neglected, and when, at length, it was given by each, no return was received. The signal was repeated, but no voice answered. Again and again they called, but to no purpose. They sought to retrace their steps, but in their anxiety became bewildered. What was to be done? Night was coming on, and they were lost in the forest wilds. In the darkness, which was fast settling down, they tried to determine the points of compass, and, by that means, the direction of their father's house, but they gave up in despair.

Finally the thought struck each in turn, by a strange coincidence, that perhaps they were yet in sight of home, if they could only gain a point of observation. Sure enough, on climbing a tree, each beheld the twinkling light of his father's cot, away upon the rocky summit. Guided thus by frequent observations, they at last reached the dear old roof. It was late at night when the last wanderer came in, and then they talked over their adventure, not a little surprised that they had all escaped in the same way.

The world is lost. The nominal church is divided. The deep gloom of sin has fallen all around. There is but one way of escape. We may formally unite on creeds, but they will never bring us together to our Father's house. Human signals and watchwords are of no avail. We must seek a common light. The star of Bethlehem hovers over Mount Calvary, Thither must we hasten. Once united there, we shall find it a guiding light, leading to the bright hills of immortality.—Token of Truth.

As he thinketh so is he.—It is said of man, as he thinketh in his heart, so is he. A man's thoughts form his character. A man may to all public appearance be a pure man, and yet, if he is indulging unclean and unholy thoughts in his mind, he is forming a base character and is becoming a base man. If a man be intending to wrong, though he may not utter it with his lips, though he may not communicate the corruption to his dearest friend—he is destroying his own true character. The world is oftentimes astonished by base actions on the part of men supposed previously to have been good. It is an old saying that no man suddenly becomes base. It is by entertaining wrong conceptions, by indulging wrong thoughts, by familiarizing himself with improper scenes, and by harboring wrong purposes, that the barriers against sin are finally broken down, and he is led to the commission of evil; and wherever there are influences favoring such thoughts, society is unsafe.—Bishop Simpson.

Pres. C. G. Finney on the Morning after his Conversion.

When I awoke in the morning the sun had risen, and was pouring a clear light into my room. Words cannot express the impression that this sunlight made upon me. Instantly the baptism that I had received the night before, returned upon me in the same manner. I arose upon my knees in the bed and wept aloud with joy, and remained for some time too much overwhelmed with the baptism of the Spirit to do anything but pour out my soul to God. It seemed as if this morning's baptism was accompanied with a gentle reproof, and the Spirit seemed to say to me, "Will you doubt?" "Will you doubt?" I cried, "No! I will not doubt; I cannot doubt." He then cleared the subject up so much to my mind that it was in fact impossible for me to doubt that the Spirit of God had taken possession of my soul.

In this state I was taught the doctrine of justification by faith, as a present experience. That doctrine had never taken any such possession of my mind, that I had ever viewed it distinctly as a fundamental doctrine of the Gospel. Indeed, I did not know at all what it meant in the proper sense. But I could now see and understand what was meant by the passage, "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." I could see that the moment I believed, while up in the woods, all sense of condemnation had entirely dropped out of my mind; and that from that moment I could not feel a sense of guilt or condemnation by any effort that I could make. My sense of guilt was gone; my sins were gone; and I do not think I felt any more sense of guilt than if I never had sinned.

This was just the revelation that I needed. I felt myself justified by faith; and, so far as I could see, I was in a state in which I did not sin. Instead of feeling that I was sinning all the time, my heart was so full of love that it overflowed. My cup ran over with blessing and with love; and I could not feel that I was sinning against God. Nor could I recover the least sense of guilt for my past sins. Of this experience I said nothing that I recollect, at the time, to anybody; that is, of this experience of justification.—Memoirs of C. G. Finney.

Restitution.

Have you, in any way injured another? It is not enough to say, and to say with grief, "I do remember my fault." You are bound in duty to repair the injury as much and as speedily as possible. Have you defrauded another of his property? You are bound to restore it, with interest too. Have you injured your neighbor in his character by defalcation and slander? You are bound to explain and vindicate his character in the most explicit terms. Have you corrupted the heart of your brother by loose talk and infidel principles? You are bound to use every effort to counteract the influence of such deadly evil, and to furnish him with the knowledge of Scriptural truth. Have you injured the health of your friend, his peace of mind, his family comfort; have you in any way drawn him into sin, temptation, and danger? You are bound, by every tie of humanity and justice, by every bond of reason and religion, to repair the awful mischief you have done, and to benefit your friend by every possible means. Repentance is nothing without reformation; and reformation, in many instances, is a mere name, without restitution. —Kidd.

The Leaning Tower osa.

Mr. Charles Warren Stoddard has made a visit to the world famous tower at Pisa. Here is a bit of his experience while making the assent.

The leaning tower of Pisa has a strange effect upon you. You being well enough, you see that the stairs are very steep in some places, and that the inner wall crowds down upon you in an unpleasant way. The effect is a little like being in the cabin of a ship at sea; you realize a kind of undulating motion without having the visible cause of it before your eyes. We stopped to rest; a small window was at hand; we looked down into the interior of the tower. It was like a deep, round shaft that had been sunk slantwise, there was just enough slant to it to be unpleasant. We trudged on and on and looked again. The tower was beginning to move again; we both saw it and felt it. The walls sagged very much; it was with some difficulty that we kept from slipping out of the door level with the stairs, when the tower reeled over on our side. I wondered that we had the courage to complete the ascent. Towers had fallen before now; leaning towers are not expected to stand any longer than they choose to. The earth has sunk about the Pisa tower so that you go down several steps to get to the door on the ground floor. We were near the top; the roofs of the city lay far below us; we caught giddy glimpses of the world from the opening in the wall—the tempting doors that invited us to step into eternity without waiting for our turn. By this time the hollow of the tower looked like a monstrous tunnel. We were stumbling over the stone stairs in an unpleasantly suggestive manner, when we came to the top chamber, where the great bells hang.

Here, we breathe more freely. The big bell weighing six tons, hangs on the upper side of the tower, "to windward," as it were, the smaller bells take their chances on the down grade. This little fact relieved us, for we were still effected by the unsteadiness of the long, spiral stairway. While we were looking off upon the country from the turrets above the bell chamber, lo! all the bells began ringing right under our feet. The sensation was as if the tower were about to be shaken to pieces, every stone trembled perceptibly; the air was whistling about our ears; one man did it all. He sprang on to one of the bells and set it swinging, then gayly on to another, and at last caught the b g bell to windward, and got its thick tongue in motion; so he skipped lightly from one to the other, dodging the roaring monsters as they heaved about him. Escape was impossible while this concert was in progress.

Anecdote of O'Connell.

The Liberator, O'Connell, was once defending a prisoner who was being tried for a murder committed in the vicinity of Cork. The principal evidence was strongly against the prisoner and one corroborative circumstance mentioned was that the prisoner's hat had been found near the place where the murder was committed. A certain witness swore positively that the hat produced was the one which was found, and that it belonged to the prisoner, whose name was James. "By virtue of your oath," said O'Connell, "are you positive that this is the same hat?" "Yes," was the reply. "Did you examine it carefully before you swore in your information that it was the prisoner's?" "Now, let me see," said O'Connell, as he took up the hat and began to examine the inside of it with the greatest care and deliberation and spelled aloud the name of "James" slowly—thus, "J a m e s." "Now, do you mean that those letters were in the hat when you found it?" demanded O'Connell. "I do," was the answer. "Did you see them there?" "I did." "This is the same hat?" "It is." "Now, my lord," said O'Connell, holding the hat up to the bench, "there is an end of this case; there is no name whatever inscribed in the hat." The result was the instant acquittal of the man.

Word in Season.—A word in season will seldom prove ineffectual. Lady Huntingdon was once urging upon a workman the importance of preparation for death and eternity. The words designed for the laborer took effect upon another man who happened to be on the outside of the garden wall. The few words overheard resulted eventually in his conversion.

A good man obtaineth favor of the Lord: but a man of wicked devices will he condemn.—Prov. xii. 2.

Some Place for Me.

What if a little ray of light,
Just starting from the sun,
Should linger in its downward flight,
Who'd miss the tiny one?
Perhaps the rose would be less bright
'Twas sent to shine upon.

What if the rain-drop in the sky,
In listless ease should say,
I'll not be missed on earth, so I
Contented here will stay;
Would not some lily parched and dry,
Less fragrant be to-day?

What if some acorn on the ground
Refused its shell to burst?
Where would the stately tree be found?
Or if the humble dust
Refused the germ to nestle round,
What could the sailor trust?

I am a child. It will not do
An idle life to lead,
Because I'm small—with talents few;
Of me the Lord hath need,
Some work or calling to pursue
Or do some humble deed.

I must be active every hour,
And do my Maker's will;
If but a ray can paint the flower,
A rain drop swell the rill,
I know in me there is a power
Some humble place to fill.

The Sunday Stone.

In one of our English coal mines there is a constant formation of limestone, caused by the trickling of water through the rocks. This water contains a great many particles of lime, which are deposited in the mine, and as the water passes off, these become hard, and form limestone.

This stone would always be white, like marble, were it not that men are working in the mine, and that as the black dust rises from the coal it mixes with the soft lime, and in that way a black stone is formed.

Now, in the night, when there is no coal-dust rising, the stone is white; then again, the next day, when the miners are at work, another black layer is formed, and so on alternately, black and white, through the week until Sunday comes. Then, if the miners keep holy the Sabbath, a much larger layer of white stone than before. There will be the white stone of Saturday night and the whole of Sunday, so that every seventh day the white layers will be about three times as thick as any of the others. But if they work on the Sabbath, they see it marked against them in the stone. Hence the miners call it "the Sunday stone."

Perhaps many who now break the Sabbath would try to spend it better if there were a "Sunday stone," where they could see their unkept Sabbaths with their black marks.

But God needs no such record on earth to know how all our Sabbaths are spent. His record is kept above. All our Sabbath deeds are written there, and we shall see them at the last.

Be very careful to keep your Sabbath pure and white, and not allow the dust of worldliness and sin to tarnish the purity of the blessed day.

Musical Kites.

In Central Asia the amusement of flying kites is as popular as in Europe or America, but it is made to yield a double gratification. It delights the ear by an emission of soft, melodious murmurings at the same time that it pleases the eye with its graceful bird-like motions. Each kite is so constructed as to produce the effect of a floating Æolian harp, and thus the flight and the song of winged warblers are both imitated in the ingenious plaything. Major Abbott gives a description of these musical kites in his "Narrative of a Journey from Herat to Khiva:" "Each kite is a square formed upon two diagonals of light wood, whose extremities are connected by a tight string, forming the sides of the square. Over the whole paper is pasted. A loose string upon the upright diagonal receives the string by which the kite is to be held, and a tail is fastened to its lower extremity. The transverse diagonal or cross-stick is then bent back like a strong bow, and fastened to a thread of catgut. Of course every breeze that passes the kite vibrates this tight cord, and the vibrations are communicated to the highly sonorous frame of the kite. And, as numbers of these kites are left floating in the air all night, the effect is that of aerial music, monotonous, but full of melancholy interest."

The Difference of Sunshine.

A little girl named Mary was standing, looking out of a window which overlooked a pleasant enough country, but just then the sky was gray and dull, and the poor girl's heart was heavy. It was not that she had any great trouble just then, but she was feeling vexed, disappointed, and worried. She was weary of play, weary of her lessons, weary of her companions; in fact she was discontented.

Her grandmother was sitting by the fire reading, and Mary turned round to her and said:

"What a dull place this is, grandmamma. Only look how gray and uninteresting everything looks outside."

The old lady got up from her seat and looked, and said quietly:

"Very gray."

But while they stood looking, the sun burst out, and lighted up the grass and water, and tipped the distant hills, and cast clear shadows on the lawns, and scattered the clouds. Even little Mary's heart seemed to be warmed, and she turned around to her grandmother and said:

"See what a difference the sunshine makes!"

"Yes, Mary; you would scarcely think it the same world. You can see now a thousand beauties that were hidden from your eyes, and what was dull and gray is now bright and joyous."

Is it not the same when the Sun of Righteousness shines in the heart? All is changed. Flowers spring up on all sides, and the cold heart grows warm and happy.

To have ideas is to gather flowers. To think is to weave them into garlands.

It is not labor that hurts anybody, but rather fretting over the prospect of labor to be gone through with.—Ex.

Home and Health Hints.

There is a charm about simple neatness and cleanliness which can hardly be overestimated in its effect upon the beauty of a home. The most costly furnishing fails to please if the house be so carelessly kept that stain and soil are visible. Elegant sofas which cover patches of carpet white with undisturbed dust, picture frames which hold several stratas of the same, globes which are blackened with smoke, and carved mantles on which one can write with ease, are extremely repulsive to people who admire nicety in housekeeping. Somehow we associate vulgarity with ostentatious display defaced by dirt, and we are right in doing so. The simplest, plainest room, where everything is cheap, and where there is little to gratify the taste and please the beholder, may be made inviting by the judicious use of soap and water.

There is danger, however, that the mania for being neat may become excessive. We have seen rooms so aggressively well ordered that all the comfort of life was subtracted from them, and no margin left for enjoyment. A fastidious lady who cannot rest for an instant from the pursuit of dust, who sets your chair straight the instant you leave it, who puts your magazine away in its proper place if you happen to leave it for an instant on the lounge or the table, and who is tortured if you bring your sewing or your writing to the parlor, succeeds in making herself as disagreeable as her house is, on the surface, inviting.—Christian at Work.

The Journal of Chemistry warns the drinkers of water of wells near dwellings to beware of the typhoid poison, sure to be found sooner or later in these reservoirs, if any of the house drainage can percolate them. The gelatinous matter often found upon the stones of a well is a poison to the human system, probably causing by its spores a fermentation of the blood, with abnormal heat or fever. Wholesome, untainted water is always free from all color or odor. To test it thoroughly, place half a pint in a clear bottle, with a few grains of lump sugar, and expose it, stoppered, to sunlight, in a window. If, even after an exposure of eight or ten days, the water becomes turbid, be sure that the water has been contaminated by sewage of some kind. If it remains perfectly clear, it is pure and safe.

A Home Made Carpet.

Pipsy Potts asks in Arthur's:—Have any of you a spare bed-chamber, seldom used, which you would like to carpet at little expense? Go to the paper-hanger's store and select a paper looking as much like carpet or oil-cloth as you can find. Having taken it home, first paper the floor of your bed-room with brown paper or newspapers. Then over this or these put down your wall paper. A good way to do this will be to put a coat of paste upon the floor the width of the roll of paper, and the length of the room, and then lay down the paper, unrolling and smoothing at the same time. When the floor is all covered, then size and varnish, only dark glue and common furniture-varnish may be used, and the floor will look all the better for the darkening these will give it. When it is dry, put down a few rugs by the bedside and before the toilet table, and you have as pretty a carpet as you could wish. A carpet, too, that will last for years—if not subject to too constant wear—and at a trifling expense. I myself used a room one entire summer prepared in this way—used it constantly; and when the house was sold in the Fall, the purchaser asked me to take up the oil-cloth, as he wished to make some alterations which would be sure to injure it,

Temperance.

The Woman's Temperance Union held its regular business meeting last Friday. Report of secretary showed a large amount of Christian work done. Treasurer's report showed a balance of more than $500 in deposit.

Miss Willard is soon to go East.

The Washington correspondent of the Evening Post telegraphs: A strong pressure has been brought to bear upon Attorney-General Pierrepont to induce him to consider favorably the petitions for the pardon of ex-Collector Maguire and ex-Chief Clerk Avery, who are under sentence for connection with the St. Louis whisky ring, and to request the President to grant the pardons. A singular and noticeable fact in connection with the efforts to secure these pardons is that they are urged solely by the Democratic delegation to Congress from Missouri. In the case of Maguire, Senator Bogy headed the delegation of Democratic members who waited upon the President and the Attorney-General; and in Avery's case the delegation was headed by both the Democratic Senators, Bogy and Cockrell. Thus far not a single Republican member has united in recommending the pardons, but the movement is managed exclusively by Democrats. This is occasioning comment.

New Feature of the Centennial.

The idea that women are to take an active part in religion's great contest with rum power was evolved by the temperance crusade. The scouts and pickets of that wonderful war have been succeeded by the rank and file of a great army. The praying bands, earnest, impetuous, inspired, have become "Woman's Christian Temperance Unions," firm, patient, persevering. Twenty-five States have already organized these Unions, and others are falling into line. A National Temperance Union has been formed, and a paper, edited and published by women, has been established. Juvenile and Young People's Unions and reform Clubs have been generally organized. Temperance reading and coffee rooms and friendly inns have been provided as an offset to the "accommodations" afforded by saloons. Religious services, conducted by women, have been regularly held in towns and cities in all parts of the country.

The International Temperance Convention of women, to be held in the Centennial year in this land of the crusade, is the latest development of that wonderful uprising. Other countries have already felt the impulse, and Women's Temperance Unions are now at work in Canada and in Great Britain. Representatives from these will attend the International Convention, which has been called by the Women's National Christian Temperance Union, and which meets June 10, in Philadelphia. Invitations and documents have also been sent to every country in Europe, to the Sandwich Islands, and to Japan. A conversazione will be held on the evening of June 10; mass meetings throughout the city on the Sabbath; two sessions of the convention on Monday, June 12, to close with a meeting in the Academy of Music on the evening of that day, which will be addressed by distinguished lady speakers.

The convention will be followed (June 13) by a World's Temperance Congress, called by the National Society, of which Hon. Wm. E. Dodge is president, and J. N. Stearns, corresponding secretary. On June 13, also, a fair, under the auspices of the Women's National Union, will open at Horticultural Hall in Philadelphia. It is expected that from this fair a large sum will be realized for their work. Those who are interested in the temperance cause will find the second and third weeks in June the most desirable time for visiting the Great Centennial Exhibition.

Entertainment cannot be provided, but reduced rates can be secured from railway companies, and the best provisions that can be made under the circumstances for board at low rates will be made.

Shut Up the Dram Shops.

The Brooklyn Brotherhood of Temperance Workers are doing a splendid work. By persuasion and coercion they have already closed up over a thousand of the vile liquor dens of the city. When the Ohio crusaders were ridding that State of the foul enemy and creating a strong sentiment against him, their successes were welcomed by orderly and sober citizens all over the land; so now we gladly report the progress which is being made in Brooklyn. Cotter and his friends are having great success. The officers of the law, if left to themselves, are no terror to those people who for money send sons, husbands, and fathers reeling to their homes to embitter family life and destroy their own prospects for two worlds. The officers of the law require to have their hands and their courage strengthened for the performance of their duties to the State. The Excise Commissioners of Brooklyn, unlike those of New York, appear to be respectable men, ready to do their whole duty against all violators of the law. Give them evidence and punishment is sure. Oliver Cotter is doing much to lighten the taxes of the neighboring city. He is the real friend of the city, who is, more than any dozen of men in official position, making life and property secure and enjoyable. Let every true citizen who is interested in cheap city government come to the aid of these men. The aldermen, if right-minded, may do something to reduce the burdensome taxes which the liquor politicians have put upon us, but the utter extinction of this vile trade would bring us immense relief. Our object is to redeem and utilize the ten thousand drunkards of Brooklyn, whose time and money are worse than wasted in saloons. Two thousand at least of these drunkards began their downward career in the genteel club-house and the more fashionable hotels. Let us arm ourselves for this conflict and push things. —N. Y. Witness.

"He Gets Drunk."

"He's the smartest young man in our class."

"Yes, but he gets drunk."

"Oh, but he's so fine looking, so noble and talented withal! His composition yesterday was the very best in our division. He writes splendid! They say he's writing for a magazine. Only think of it, writing for a magazine, no older than he is, and not out of school yet! won't he be a great man, though, some day!"

"No, I don't think he will."

"Why not?"

"He gets drunk."

"Oh, that's nothing: a good many smart men get drunk. Every young man has his wild oats to sow; and because a fellow gets a little boozy once in a while I wouldn't condemn him forever; quite likely he'll outgrow it when he gets older and sees the folly of it."

"More than likely that will outgrow him; and as to his getting a little boozy, I'm afraid he was a good deal so when the boys found him beside the walk the other night, and had to carry him to his room, dodging around street corners and skulking through by-ways so that none of the professors would see him. I tell you a person that drinks at all isn't to be depended on. The only young men that I have any confidence in are those who let intoxicating liquors entirely alone."

"Well, I don't care; he's good and smart, anyhow, and I like him."

"I don't; he gets drunk."

As a natural consequence that young man who drinks will generally blight the manhood that is within him; bring shame and reproach upon brothers and sisters; trample upon the love and confidence of his fellows; shut himself out from all goodness, purity, usefulness and happiness; blot out the image of God that is stamped upon him, and drag himself down lower than the brutes. Aye, so surely does he shut himself out from heaven, as "he gets drunk!"—Rural New Yorker.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Rev. Wayland Hoyt, of Boston, will preach the sermon before the American Baptist Missionary Union at its session to be held in Buffalo, May 23.

—The Rev. Wayland R. Benedict, late pastor of Mt. Auburn Baptist church, has been elected to the chair of Philosophy and History in the University of Cincinnati.

—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church meets on Thursday, May 18th, in Dr. Talmage's church in Brooklyn, at 11 o'clock A. M. About 500 delegates are expected. The Southern General Assembly meets in Savannah on the same day.

—The visitation of the towns of Maine by delegates from the Young Men's Christian Association is still going on and will be continued through the month of May. More than 700 persons have been led through this agency to enter upon a Christian life. District conventions will be held during the Summer.

—The thirty-seventh session of the English Old Testament Revision Company was held March 24th. The revisers took into consideration the suggestions of the American committee upon the book Deuteronomy, and carried on the revision of Jeremiah as far as the 21st verse of the 44th chapter.

—The United Presbyterian church of Scotland has recently raised $50,000 to begin a new mission in Japan.

—Mr. Spurgeon stated at a recent meeting at the pastor's college connected with his church, that the institution began twenty years ago with one student, and that since that time 350 students had been educated who are now preaching.

—A reporter of the Chicago Tribune visited Mr. Moody in New York, and gained some interesting facts though reluctantly given. It seems that Mr. Moody has not sufficient means to bear the expense of travel or to support his family and himself while giving his whole time to preaching. For this reason he has been compelled to accept the free offerings of such friends as choose to give him pecuniary assistance, and desire and expect nothing in return but that he should continue in his work. A great part of these gifts come to him in anonymous letters, thus compelling acceptance. During his stay in this city all his letters, except those from his own family, have been opened by the persons who entertain him as their guest. Mr. Moody states that during his stay in the city he has received about $300 in this way, and that all he has ever received from friends has only placed him in barely comfortable circumstances. Said he to the reporter: "I have all the money I want, if it is'nt very much. I have just bought a little place to make a home for my wife and children; it cost $3,500, and I have been putting in some repairs which will cost about as much more; and I don't think I am ashamed to look any man in the face and tell him about it."

—The New York Synod of the United Presbyterian church at its late meeting revoked the action of the Philadelphia Presbytery, by which an Odd-fellow was admitted to one of the churches of that city. The testimony of the church is thus maintained, and the adherent of the lodge compelled to seek a supernumerary connection with some other religious body.

[PETITION.]

To the Bishops and Members of the General Conference Assembled.

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN:

It is a matter of thankfulness that the Congress of this nation and the highest ecclesiastical authority of the M. E. church, alike recognize the right of American citizens and of church members to memorialize and petition these respective bodies on any matter deemed vital to society, whether civil or ecclesiastical. Availing ourselves of this privilege and right, the undersigned, members of the M. E. church and societies, with a consciousness of devotion to the true interests of the same, would respectfully memorialize your reverend body in reference to what is by them deemed a grave and a growing evil in our beloved Zion, and which calls for an emphatic expression from the highest ecclesiastical authority known to the church—we refer to the connection of our ministers and members with what are known as "Secret Societies," especially with those societies which are bound together with oaths or pledges of honor which are deemed equivalent to an oath. We do not feel called upon to discuss in this connection the propriety, the utility, or safety of these societies abstractly, nor to assume to know all the secrets of these societies, but to ask your attention to evils involved in and resulting from the connection of our ministers and members with such societies. Such connection your Memorialists regard as impolitic, injurious, and at war with the peace, purity and real prosperity of the church.

These societies are, by your Memorialists, regarded as rivals to Christianity and the church, inasmuch as many worldly persons who identify themselves with them come to regard them as equal with, if not of greater authority and value, than the church, and as embracing all that is essential to salvation; at the same time they lightly esteem or wholly reject our Lord Jesus Christ. They conclude that there is even some good in them not found in the church, else why should ministers and Christians seek and hold connection with them. For these and other reasons, the connection of unconverted men with these societies, and especially the sanction given to them by ministers and Christians, constitute a bar to their conversion.

Then, further, the influence of these Christian men is drawn off from the legitimate channels of the church, and divided between it and these societies. Time is spent which has been pledged "wholly to God and his work." Money is expended in the erection of costly edifices, in regalia, in supporting officers, and in public demonstrations in furtherance of worldly ends, and in un-Christian and vain display. Social and personal influence is absorbed in these circles, which are so foreign to the purposes of the church, and all this without compensating returns to society or to individuals.

It seems to us very evident that should the "old Catholics" complete a religious organization, rejecting all the doctrinal errors, and reforming all the practical abuses of the Papal church, yet ordering a highly mystical, symbolical, and secret service, to which many men of imaginative temperament should turn with eagerness,—if Methodist ministers and members in any considerable numbers should seek admission to such a fellowship, while yet retaining their membership in our own church, the General Conference would, with the first opportunity, express its disapprobation of their divided allegiance. And yet the society supposed would be much more distinctly Christian, and more certainly useful, than the orders against which we remonstrate.

Thus there is a manifest loss of spirituality in many cases, resulting from associations with skeptical and immoral men, whose known character, as mere self-seeking or party politicians and infidels, should restrain Godly people from their intimacies and fellowships since the very atmosphere that surrounds them is miasmatic and pestiferous.

Then, this commingling so secretly and intimately with those who are of the world, must weaken the ministerial influence with even these men. He may become popular with them as one of them, but his Christian influence cannot but be lessened, because his power and his consistency are compromised.

Your Memorialists further believe and would represent that the secrecy claimed and maintained in regard to oaths, obligations and schemes—to teaching and ties—is calculated to bring suspicion upon those who fraternize with these promiscuous societies. It cannot fail to weaken confidence among brethren.

Christianity is light—"the light of life"—of the world, and Christians are to "let their light shine before men." Christians are "not of the night nor of darkness, they are children of the light and of the day." Our Lord said, "I spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing"—nothing but what might be known publicly—and he bade his disciples to "proclaim upon the house-tops" what they might hear in the ear in closets.

But secret societies seek to conceal and to hide behind oaths and symbolical signs and pass-words. St. Paul said of some—"It is a shame to speak of those things that are done of them in secret." This may be true in the cases under consideration. If not, why not "come to the light, that the deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." "Every one that doeth truth cometh to the light."

The fraternity of Christian brotherhood in Christ is the most sacred of all relations, since Christians are one in Christ; Christ is "head over all things to the church," and Christians are said to be "members of his body, his flesh, and his bones," and no man may mar that unity or introduce friction into that body.

But the secret oath and the "mystic tie" claim precedence, and they separate among brethren. There must, in the nature of the case, be a loss of confidence, since, as between a brother Christian and a member of the secret fraternity, the latter, in an exigency, must command the precedence.

There are multitudes of Christian men who conscientiously believe that these secret-bound societies are evil and dangerous, and no Christian can claim it as imperative on him to join them—especially to the grief of his brethren. They do not put it on the ground of duty, but of expediency. On the other hand duty demands that Christians should neither "eat flesh nor drink wine, nor any thing whereby a brother is stumbled, offended, or made weak."

These secret relations are the occasion of debates and strifes in societies—occasions of division in regard to ministerial acceptability—of disparagement to those ministers who dare not enter into fellowship with them, but who in every respect may be able and faithful ministers of our Lord Jesus Christ. They complicate ecclesiastical administrations in regard to appointments and elections, and they are not "of the Father, but of the world."

In view of these and other aspects in which the subject may be viewed, your Memorialists would respectfully petition your reverend body—

1st. To embody in the Book of Discipline at least an advisory rule adverse to such relations and fellowships, which may tend to dissuade and separate members of the church from such intimacies; or, if such moderate legislative action be judged extreme, then at least

2d. To give such expression of sentiment in regard to the connection and association of the ministers and members of the church with secret societies as shall clearly indicate your disapproval of such connection.

And as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20 000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

Dnring the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

SERMON ON ODD-FELLOWSHIP AND OTHER SECRET SOCIETIES

BY REV. J. SARVER, Pastor Evangelical Lutheran Church, Leechburg, Pa.

This is a very clear argument against Secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship, Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers, is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications.

Topics of the Time.

The Centennial Commissioners last week after a long and full discussion decided to close the Centennial grounds on the Lord's Day. Praise God for this victory for his truth and vindication of American principles! The whole number of Commissioners present was forty-seven. On the question, "Shall the Exhibition be kept open on Sundays?" nine voted aye, twenty-seven nay, seven did not vote, and four paired off. The majority on the right side was most decisive. The Chicago Tribune comes out with an editorial on the decision full of senseless and infidel objections, and an illustrated German paper of low morals or none displays a picture of the Main Hall of the Exposition over which is a representation of the devil hovering in great wrath, while the visitors are fleeing in terror. Such papers speak for the destructive sentiment that demands the desecration of the Christian Sabbath in connection with this great celebration of our national life. The World's fair held in London was closed on the Sabbath day, and at the Vienna Exposition, England and American exhibitors closed their sections on that day by mutual agreement, to the surprise of thousands of visitors to whom it is a day of mere sensual gratification, The testimony was a grand one in its carrying out and in the effect upon the better classes of Austria. The demand of this same foreign rationalistic element, and of would-be home imitator is against the moral sense of the nation, and the very foundation principles of Americanism. Never for a moment should it be listened to.

Though the Commissioners have done wisely and well in this refusal, their dodging of the temperance issue is an act of cowardice. The question of the right of the Commissioners to permit the sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds being under consideration, in connection with the State law forbidding such sale in Fairmount Park, it was voted to indefinitely postpone the consideration of the subject. The temperance sentiment of the country should not let this question rest here.

Since the United States Supreme Court decided against the single check upon foreign immigration of a small fee on landing, the people of San Francisco have been greatly aroused against the influx of Chinese coolies which threatens an immense increase. They have held monster meeting to protest to the Government, and clubs have been formed with the supposed purpose of procuring the destruction of Chinese quarters by mob violence or incendiarism. The opposition to the Chinese is not as has been often represented because of their cheap labor, but rather to the infamous system by which they are induced to come to our shores and sell themselves to slavery. Nearly every Chinaman comes here under a written contract with the Six Companies of San Francisco, by which his condition here is made one of abject slavery. The poor coolie dare not complain for he is watched by the Chinese secret societies, which are in full play, and his life is likely to be the forfeit of their displeasure. Chinese interpreters have been killed for their services in court. The appeal to Congress for a new treaty with China may bring a check to this influx of heathendom, but the proclamation of the Mayor of San Francisco that the laws of the city will be enforced in the foul coolie quarters as elsewhere will be better. The wretched condition of these people can scarcely be understood. Opium, female prostitutes, a condition of slavery, or perpetual fear of assassination have followed them from their own shores to curse their wretched lives here.

Washington's Farewell Address.

In no copy of that address which I have seen does the word secret combinations occur, but the inference that the author meant secret societies is very probable. The words, "all obstructions to the execution of laws; all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency,"—these words describe the action of secret societies exactly; and the whole language of the address with regard to combinations seems to point unmistakably to such societies.

Contemporary history confirms this view of the case. At the time when the address was written the Jacobinical French minister, Genet, had come to the United States, and had established Jacobin clubs among our people, which, at the present day, have assumed the shape of socialistic and communistic clubs, and which are known to be secret societies. These clubs were known under several names among us, such as Democratic societies and Tammany societies, of which the Tammany society of New York is the regular descendant and inheritor, in every respect. These Jacobin clubs, or Democratic societies, alias, Tammany rings, were so indecent and unprincipled in their attacks upon Washington as to draw from him, it is said, the only violent oath that he ever uttered. The sense of the American people generally was so outraged by these secret clubs that a demand was made upon the French government for Genet's recall.

These clubs operated in favor of Thomas Jefferson; and this person was very lenient toward them, declaring that he thought they would die out of themselves if left alone. This is the language of interested persons toward secret societies of the present day. But these societies thrive nevertheless, and are frightfully prolific of late years. In Washington's correspondence with Rev. Mr. Snyder, on the subject of Masonry, he speaks of the "founder, or instrument employed to found the Democratic societies in the United States," in which he evidently alludes to Genet, and accuses him of designing "a separation of the people from their government," so incompatible with republican government did the principles of such secret societies appear.

Washington seemed to think, it is true, that Masonic societies, as bodies, had nothing to do with the spread of these diabolical principles, though individual members of the lodge might have done so; but that the principles of secret associations, Illuminist or Jacobinical, had something to do in trying to destroy our republican government, which he had so long striven to build up, was to him "too evident to be questioned;" that is, he candidly acknowledged that the principles of secret associations (known by us to be sprung from English Masonry and Jesuitry) are dangerous to republican government.

Genet, in founding his Jacobin clubs, did but carry out the principles and tendencies of Freemasonry. The lodge, as a body, did not affiliate, probably, with the Jacobin club; but the teachings and principles of both are the same. The word "combination" in the address, rightly construed, means an association whose motive power is secrecy. Washington could not have intended to caution us against open and fair associations, because such kind of associations, like the right to bear arms openly, is secured to us by the Constitution. It is only secret association and secret arms-bearing that can be justly censured or proscribed.

We admit that Washington might have conceived that there is a great difference between Masonry and other secret societies; but we of the present day, who have had more experience of the evils of these societies, know better. The pretensions of Masonry may be more lofty than those of Ku-Kluxism; but both claim to be animated by a good purpose, and, when sifted to the bottom, the pretensions of one are no better than those of the other. No one set of men can resort to secret practices and claim to be more respectable or more holy than any other set of men who resort to such practices.

Washington virtually admitted that there was no essential difference between Jacobinism and Illuminism; and it is well known that Illuminism is a German development of English Freemasonry, and, indeed, all secret or exclusive clubs or rings of men may justly be regarded as Masonic in their character, and to be animated by the same principle that lies at the foundation of Masonry and Jesuitry. The Jacobin club of France was exclusive, not fairly and openly admitting every citizen; and it gave birth to a Robespierre and a Marat, and other such political monstrosities, just as the Masonic lodge may be said to have produced a Burr, a Breckenridge, and a Davis.

It was among the women that one of the principal tyrants of the Jacobin clubs found an executioner. It was Charlotte Corday who devoted herself to the scaffold in order to put an end to the bloody career of the monster Marat; and if secret societies are ever to be destroyed in the United States it will not be on the Jeffersonian plan of allowing them to die out, but it will be through the active agency of women, whose character they wrong and oppress in every conceivable way. Women have no vote, and the more powerful therefore will they be whenever they bring their influence to bear against secret clubs which wrong them by controlling the husbands and making of themselves the slaves of slaves. An institution like the lodge, that acts in the name of charity and benevolence, and at the same time exc lude women from all its degrees, even to its highest, is an insult to her, and condemns her to an inferior position on a moral scale. She can admit of no conciliation from the lodge, like that which is offered her in the seemingly mild shape of grangerism; for the practices and principles of the lodge are death to those fine sensibilities which constitute the beauty and power of her sex. The moment a woman bends herself as the tool of a narrow secret ring, she loses that power and influence in a high state of Christian society which is due to her character; and her own respectability and happiness become the sacrifice, as well also as the safety and well-being of the Republic.

When the people finally arose against Robespierre, they rose at the same time against the Jacobinical clubs, of which he was the child, and abolished them. But it is the nature of secret organizations when suppressed under one form or name, then to assume another, and to take unto them spirits worse than the first. The snake is scotched only by popular and political action; it is never killed. The only possible way to get rid of secret societies is to raise society to a higher standard of moral principle, so that the individual will scorn to surrender the control of his actions to any secret ring of any kind whatever. Until this is done we shall not pay proper heed to the solemn warning of Washington's farewell address.

If there ever has been an occasion of especial fitness for paying heed to that address, it is now, after a war to which Masonry has lent her aid as a handmaid, both in its inception and its long-spun continuance, and on the eve of a great national centennial, when the thoughts should naturally take a retrospective turn and contemplate once more the exemplary character of Washington. It is true that Washington became a member of the lodge; and it is also true that he virtually abandoned it. Let the present generation of secret society men do the same; and let nobody of the rising generation ever enter a lodge, or promise secrecy to any, for we may rest assured that it is not against open and fair associations, of any kind, that Washington warned us, but against exclusive, secret, and unfair associations.

In conclusion, I am willing to admit that nowhere in Washington's farewell address does the word "secret" occur in connection with combinations or associations; but we claim that Washington could not have warned us against any other combinations or associations than those which are secret, exclusive, unfair, unchristian, and unrepublican, like Masonry and all its numerous progeny.—Gen. J. W. Phelps in the Telescope.

Why I Could not be a Mason.

BY J. P. TEDFORD.

In resisting the conflicting elements of life, a young man is naturally observant. If in moving onward he spies an instrumentality by which he could more easily succeed, that instrumentality will generally be brought to bear in his conflict. But not hastily should any one resort to aids with which he is unacquainted. The young lawyer, before winning his reputation, is loaded with anxiety. The young doctor is crowded nearly out, and thinks that something more than talent and knowledge must get him a case. The young preacher (alas!) sometimes feels he can not do enough for Christ by preaching the pure Gospel. The laudable desire to prove a success in their professions may prompt them to extreme efforts. The system of Freemasonry presents itself to them. Its members are men of influence, part of which doubtless has been procured by becoming adherents to the system. Even granting it wrong, here rises a fearful temptation. With all such persons I possess a common sympathy. Therefore I mean to give the following reasons why I cannot be a Mason:

I consider that the consequences of its existence impair the condition of man. Any system that would elevate a portion by suppressing a moiety of mankind should be utterly detested. We will grant here even, for the sake of argument, that we know nothing of Masonry save in its external features, which if it conceals it suppresses itself; yet we do know that such a thing exists. We do know its consequences. We do know that the invalid, infirm and impaired, by wound or other wise, are prevented from fellowship with them. Taking the facts that are undeniable can we not condemn the institution? Granting with its own members that one is advantaged by their fellowship, do we not condemn it? While one is advantaged, another is laboring under a disadvantage, being prevented. If enveloped by their secrecy an advantage to man is concealed, they do err in not displaying it to the world. Life is one continuous battlefield. All mankind have the same enemies to contend. Behold, contending in one furious battle the numerous armies of men against a fearful enemy. The conflict rages. A certain division of this army makes a wonderful discovery by which the enemy is partially routed. They conceal this discovery from the whole army's view. They draw a line of separation among their own ranks. Their unity is impaired, hence their strength weakened. So man is worsted by this system. I could not conscientiously aid a system which thus draws irrespectively of moral attainments a line of demarcation among men. It would appear to me in accordance with right and equity to exalt, irrespectively of race, color or condition, all men to a common level. And anything which obstructs this I consider detrimental to the interests of man in general. Such undoubtedly is Masonry.

Again, there is no call outside of selfishness, for any man to be a Mason. On our way through life we behold towering a boastful system stamped with the name—Masonry. A particular feature of which it boasts is, that it is wrapped in a cloud of secrecy. Men go in and out. We know not whether they are conspiring against the eternal principles of right and justice or not, for men that would do this very thing would indeed wrap themselves with clouds of utter darkness. We know nothing much of their laws and government, yet what glimpses we have caught reveal them filled with blasphemy and tainted with paganism. Now does duty call me there? Does a desire to do a great work for my fellow man call me there? Does Christ call me there? Must I enter there to exercise the hand of charity? No indeed. Common sense tells me no. God certainly never in His wisdom so arranged the nature of things that man must, in order to work more acceptably for Him, be bound by oaths of strict secrecy. We hear Christ's example, "In secret have I said nothing." I could not be a Mason because the boasts and promises of the system are Satanic. When our Savior was on earth, "The devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and showeth him all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. And saith, all these things will I give thee if thou will fall down and worship me." Masonry, to-day, is no less boastful, no less promising. Its language is "The offices of the republic are mine. Positions of honor are mine. The esteem of the world is mine; the glory mine. All these things will I give thee, if thou will fall down worship me." We should all have the moral courage of our Master to say, "Get thee hence Satan. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve." How it boasts of its immortality! Some of its orators eloquently declare, "It will stand while sun and moon endureth." They do not consider, I suppose, that He who permits their existence could sweep it with the breath of destruction. Various other reasons arise that would prevent me from becoming a Mason. I consider the system anti-Christian, anti-republican and anti social and may have at some future period more liberty to enlarge on the subject.

Jefferson was not a Freemason; John Adams was not; John Quincy Adams says: "The use of the name of Washington to give an odor of sanctity to the institution, as it now stands, is, in my opinion as unwarrantable as that of my father's name." James Madison says: "I never was a Mason." Chief Justice Marshall was a Freemason, one of the most eminent jurists the country ever produced. His character for integrity was above suspicion; his fame was world-wide. Freemasons cannot say that he was not a competent witness. He says: "The institution is not productive of any good, that might not be accomplished better by open means." Benedict Arnold was a Freemason; infamous as he was he committed no breach of the Masonic code, for the Master Mason swears "all secrets committed to me by a brother, as such remain as inviolably in my breast as his own, murder and treason excepted." The Royal Arch brother adds: "Murder and treason not excepted."—S. L. Morse.

Does Sabbath Work on Railroads Pay?

The following testimony from high railroad authorities should be in the hands of all friends of the Sabbath:

The Superintendent of the Northwestern Railway of England, reported that after tabulating the performance of over twelve hundred locomotives for several years, it was manifest that the continual unresting working of an axle so crystalizes the iron that costly and dangerous accidents from sudden fracture necessarily result.

"I do not believe the running of Sunday trains is profitable to the company; and that it is a positive violation of Divine law none can doubt."—Hon. Abram Murdock, President of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

"It is for the interest of the company to allow our employees the rest of the Sabbath."—E. B. Phillips, President of the Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Railroad.

"Many years' experience and observation more and more convince me as a railroad man, that even in an economic point of view there is no more profitable rule for us to follow than 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.'"—Col. George A. Merrill, Superintendent of the Rutland and Burlington Railroad.

"I have long been of the opinion that it is to the interest of the railroad and steamboat companies to suspend operations on the Sabbath, as it demoralizes the men and makes them reckless, and so is the cause of many accidents. I believe railroad companies would be much more prosperous if Sunday running was entirely suspended. I suppose there are employed on the railways of the United States, on the Sabbath, thirty thousand men."—S. Ruth, Superintendent of the Richmond, Fredericksburg, and Potomac Railroad.

CHARLES WILSON, G. C. E. of the BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS, at their Tenth Annual Convention in Philadelphia, said: "Many of our members are anxious to be relieved from Sunday running. I am convinced that the main managers would willingly abandon all freight-work Sundays, if they could keep their freight houses and roads clear by running six days in the week. I am still confident that with the new lines completed and a more systematic plan of handling and moving freights adopted, railroad men can have the Sabbath for rest and worship.

"We are under great obligations to many prominent men and societies for the interest they have taken in our efforts to abolish Sunday work on railroads.

"We believe that it is a sacred duty incumbent on all religious men to use their utmost endeavors to stop this Sunday traffic. We know that the influence of a president or director of a railroad company will exert an immense influence upon the whole board if rightly used, and we cannot understand how a president or director of a railroad company can be a consistent Christian, and willingly allow a large share of his employees to labor on Sunday. We believe that our deliverance from Sunday work can be accomplished by the churches alone, but our members feel a deep personal interest in the matter, and they will willingly render all the aid they possibly can to accomplish so desirable an object."—Christian Statesman.

What Sayest Thou to These Things?

THE CONCLUSION OF OUR REVIEW.

RESPECTED BROTHER DUBS:—In this our last, we will state some reasons based on Scripture truths, why members and churches who adhere to secret societies should be called to repentance; and also review some objections that are made against such a procedure. In the first place there is nothing else in the economy of grace by which man can be brought to see the true nature of sin. Without true repentance, wrought by the spirit of God, through the Gospel of his own Son, man is unable to abhor the evil as he should. By this course, individuals and churches who have gone astray from the true path are brought back to a state of grace and into the liberty of the spirit of God, and are reunited to Christ our living head, by which they are enabled to abhor the evil as Christ abhors it, as he says, "Which things I hate," and are by it better qualified to oppose the evil influences of sin and Satan in this world. In the church is no so called "latent power" to do and perform this great work, as little as there is in individual members. It is alone the life-giving power of our Lord by his Spirit and Word, by which alone he prepares us to testify against all the evil influences of Satan and the world. When churches and members allow the evil to take the rule in them, it separates them from this life-giving power. Though such a body may boast of its riches and popularity, but in his sight this makes it the more loathesome and abhorrent. See Rev. iii. 17.

In the second place repentance from this evil is necessary, as all who hold to it, have sworn allegiance to a strange master who is not Christ, and have therefore sold themselves for naught. Again, as professing Christians they give a bad example to the world and the church, by adhering to this evil. They by their example corrupt the churches; the more exemplary they seem to be, the more they recommend these orders to the church.

Not long since as we were conversing with a brother of a sister church on the evil influence of these orders, he answered, "I cannot believe that they are so evil, because there are as good men as I know of in the church that belong to these societies, and even some of our bishops are Freemasons, and they say nothing against it." Was not this otherwise good Christian brother led astray in regard to these things. by the ministers of his church, and does not their example recommend the evil to the rising generation?

In professing to be embassadors of Christ, can they at the same time recommend those orders by their example? I trow not! Paul says, "I have espoused you to one husband, that I might present you as a chaste virgin to Christ," and how can they do this so long as they remain in fellowship with these orders? Are they not one with the harlot? and are they not partakers of the sins of the whole organized body of the lodge? Do they not thus defile the church of Christ over which they are officially set to watch that it may not be corrupted? And do they not strengthen the hands of lodgemen to destroy the good character and name of those who witness against the evil, and thus help to drive them from the Gospel work? Do they not thus advance Satan's cause, "and like him are transformed as ministers of righteousness?" 2 Cor. xi. 14, 15. They may not intend that their course shall have this effect; but this will not alter the case. It will finally have this result; the legitimate fruits will be in the end those of the carnal mind; and its reward will be this unless repented of. "For like begets like," this is an unchangeable law in the moral, as well as in the natural world. Christ the fountain of all truth says, "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." "By their fruits ye shall know them." A church when once under the dominion and rule of these orders, cannot become pure and accepted of God but by true repentance. If this, after faithful warning, does not follow, "He will fight against it by the sword of his mouth."

It has always been the case of those churches that have been corrupted by evil influences and have thus departed from a pure spiritual life, that they have been afraid of those whom God sent to them to warn and call them to repentance from those corrupting influences; and this is the case to-day with those churches which harbor this lodge evil. Are they not afraid of the testimony of those in their own communion, both of the membership, and ministry who bear testimony against those things? These are facts which are staring us in the face at every point. Some of them we might relate here, if space would admit, that would make the ears and heart of every child of God ache.

In conclusion we will take into consideration some of the objections that are made against such a procedure.

It is said, we dare not do this; it would cause a schism in the church. This is admitting that the evil has an effective influence in the body. On the other hand it admits on its face that those that adhere to this evil, are not willing to subject themselves to this Gospel rule. Let such remember that without repentance from these things there is no forgiveness, nor purification from sin. See 1 John i. 9. And for that very reason such should be placed outside of church fellowship as they are such already according to Gospel rule and principles.

In the second place it is objected, it would condemn some of our best men who have done a great deal for the church and are still zealous for its welfare.

But we answer that no matter how good these men are, or seem to be, there is no other course left for them but to repent of this sin. How was it with Peter the Apostle and Barnabas, when they for the sake of pleasing man, were led into dissimulation, were they not reproved by the apostle Paul and did they not repent of it? See Gal. ii. 11 17.* They were good men who had put their lives in jeopardy for the testimony of the Lord Jesus. No good man will refuse this when convinced of his error.

Again it is objected if this course is followed it would hamper the missionary cause, it would close the door for us in the cities. What! must the church court the friendship of the world? Would not God in the end bless the missionary cause more abundantly if it was carried on with an open and direct testimony against this evil, regardless of the displeasure and favor of man? This is as I understand it to be the great principles of the Gospel of our blessed Lord, on which he ordered his disciples to go to a gainsaying world, to preach his Gospel and extend his kingdom, and as long as this was done by his followers the church remained pure, but no sooner did the ministry compromise with evil influences, then the church became corrupted, and it turned the religion of Christ into an engine for Satan.

It is often said, "We do not know enough of those orders to justify us in proceeding in this way; we might wrong and condemn the innocent." Is there not enough written and known about those orders pro and con to enlighten all who will be enlightened? and is not the teaching of these orders self-condemning when measured with the Gospel rule? The testimony of those who seceded from them has never been refuted, but the more corroborated by the action of lodgemen against such.

We have carefully and prayerfully reviewed this matter as we believe in the light of the Gospel of Christ, and without any antipathy. We at our best are nothing only so far as we follow Christ. Principle is all, but a compromising policy will corrupt any church body. Ever praying for your good, and continuing to labor for the cause of Christ, I am your humble brother in the Gospel of Christ.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the American people the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE INDIANA STATE POLITICAL CONVENTION will meet in Muncie, Delaware Co., on the 23rd day of May at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of putting in nomination candidates to be voted for, for State officers at the October election, and to select electors for President and Vice-president, and for transacting any other business coming properly before the convention.

The Christian in Politics.

We advance only half a step when we say that the Christian can supply the need of our national political life, because he is the man who can be relied on to put morals first.

The value of the Christian in politics is seen in the fact that he is supposed to have that temper which will never sacrifice morals to money!

The danger here arises from the revenue from sin! All know the easy argument: Men will sin and the public treasury may as well have the benefit of it. Power of money to cover sin is frightful. The monstrosity of the doctrine is awful. It makes out of Christian society a monster sucking its own blood and seeming to thrive on it! But the Christian is expected to stand steady against this betrayal of men in every form of it. The Christian in politics is just the man to put morals before both men and measures in every party organization. George William Curtis said, (October 30th, 1874,) "I am not here to counsel slavish subserviency to party. I am one of those Americans who have learned by experience that 'one with God is a majority.' We know that whenever an honest man's party deserts its principles then the honest man deserts his party." Bolting for conscience' sake is a clear Christian duty. Loyalty to God and truth must be first. In this view of the case, a part of the Christian's value in politics depends upon his being aggressive in his peculiar function. All other political factors are in theirs! They are persuaded in their tenets. They believe them to be good in themselves and at least not bad for others. They hope for success, and the greater the odds the more earnestly they fight. So must the Christian act who knows and feels that morals ought to be first. These interests are dearer to the real Christian than temporal interests can be either to him or to other men. He is assured they are for the good of others, and will not injure himself in the long run. He may hope because his hope is in God, who cares for such issues. Thus the Christian is certain of the ground he stands upon, and can go on securely. Nor must the Christian be turned away from politics because of its difficulties and uncertainties. By no means. Christ was not sent into the world to do only the easy work of the conquest; neither did he send us that way into the world. There must be robust thinking and heroic acting to carry this great means of good for God and the good of man. Shall the devil have the kingdom of the world forever? What true ring have the brave words of Vice-President Wilson, (spoken to the young men of New York only last January,) "Here is the mission of the Christian in politics, its possibilities and its responsibilities. But those opportunities, open to the young men of this age in America of all nationalities, bring with them high responsibilities. These responsibilities must be bravely met by the Christian young men of this city and this broad land. That robust Christianity which shrinks not from the turmoils, strifes and conflicts of laudable endeavor should grapple bravely with the evils that poison and corrupt. Public life needs reforming; private life demands purification. Drunkenness, that blighting, withering curse, must be extirpated. Ignorance must be enlightened. Society and the government must be carried forward and upward, so that this Christian nation and its free institutions shall be an alluring and guiding example for the nations."—Christian Statesman.

Ring Rule Broken in Ligonier, Ind.

LIGONIER, Ind., May 2d, 1876.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Yesterday was a day long to be remembered in the history of Ligonier. The people here have been under the lash of a ring for several years, whose ruling grew more severe from time to time, until the people would bear it no longer. They arose in their might and in a quiet and lawful manner ejected these men from power and sent them back to enjoy the pleasures of a private life again. It is said that crape was hung out in token of sorrow. Nevertheless the people elected an entire new board except the assessor. Truly a change was needed, for Ligonier has felt to the full the proverb, "When the wicked bear rule the people mourn."

Respectfully, J. M. FRY.

Vote for Your Candidate!

GERLAW, Ill., May 3rd, 1876.

BRO. KELLOGG:—The N. Y. Witness announces that they desire all who are subscribers of that paper, to send the name of their favorite candidate for the next President on a postal card, and at a certain date the votes are to be counted and announced through both the weekly and daily. Each person who votes is to write his name and address on the back of the card, the edition of the paper to which he is a subscriber, and the name of his favorite candidate for President and Vice President. Now here is an opportunity for the friends of our reform to bring out their man. Many of your readers are also subscribers to the Witness, and if each one who is, will just vote for Mr. Walker, it will serve to give our cause and candidate a prominence not easily attained in any other way.

Let every friend of the cause who is a subscriber of the Witness send on his vote at once. And if there are readers of the Cynosure who are not subscribers of the Witness, let them send for the daily for a month or for the weekly for three months, and they will be entitled to vote. John Dougall, 2 Spruce street, New York, is the address.

Yours for Walker and Kirkpatrick,

Gen. Phelps at Philadelphia.

His plan for the distribution of millions of leaflets at the Centennial—Shall it be carried out?

General J. W. Phelps of Brattleboro, Vermont, has been in Philadelphia for a week or two past, trying to interest those opposed to the lodge in a scheme for putting a tract into the hands of every visitor to Philadelphia, during the next six months. He proposes, that to start with a million little one page leaflets be printed, provided Philadelphia friends will bear the expense distributing them. He suggests that the work of distributing be given in charge of an energetio Christian woman, who can employ half a dozen reliable girls to hand these leaflets out either at the Centennial grounds or at the various depots as passengers arrive in the city.

This plan does not in the slightest degree interfere with Elder Freeman's work in the Main Building and if Philadelphia friends will distribute them we believe persons will be found to pay for the tracts. The tract proposed is very small, and in great quantities will cost but a trifle per thousand.

I met General Phelps for the first time at the house of Dr. Barr in Philadelphia, on Wednesday, April 26th, and was delighted to find him so earnestly laboring in this cause. His plan for the tract-work is certainly perfectly practical, and he is willing to contribute of his own means to help carry it out, if it is adopted and a fund raised for that purpose.

Reform News and Notices.

EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY of the National Christian Association will be held in Farwell Hall, Chicago, June 20 to 23.

A Convention of the Indiana State Christian Association opposed to the lodge will be held in Muncie, Delaware county, Ind., beginning May 23d, at 10 A. M. Let all auxiliary associations and friendly churches be represented. This meeting is called by the State Executive Com.

—The General Agent returned last week from Connecticut in time to attend the first meeting in the new Publishing House—the organization of the Chicago Christian Association, auxiliary to the State and National bodies.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman after attending the Iowa State meeting as his correspondence shows, visited and spoke in West Branch, Charleston and Montrose.

—Bro. Hitchcock's interesting account of the meetings in Montrose, Iowa, prior to the State convention, we are reluctantly compelled to lay by for want of room this week.

—Bro. J. G. Mattoon writes of his efforts to secure a series of lectures in West Unity, in Williams, the northwestern county of Ohio. Rev. John Levington visited the county, during the last of April and gave six lectures at various points, besides preaching four times. He then went on to Fulton county adjoining on the east.

—Elder Barlow has removed his family to Fenton, Mich., and friends will address him accordingly. He expects to be present at the June Anniversary, and adds, "I have not had time to say how thankful I am that the Publishing House is secure to us for the present. The Lord be praised for all His goodness! I hope to be able to do something on the next $10,000"

—B. Bartow read a paper on the follies and other evils of the grange, at a late meeting of the Literary Society of Franklin township, Fulton Co., Ohio. This was followed by a debate on the question: "Resolved, that the community is not benefited, socially, financially or morally by the grange." Among the speakers on the affirmative were J. G. Mattoon and A. Jones.

The Connecticut State Convention.

As the Secretary's report of this influential gathering did not reach us in time for the present issue the readers of the Cynosure will be temporarily satisfied with the following brief report from the Hartford Daily Courant of May 1st:

The second annual meeting of the "Connecticut Christian Association," opposed to secret societies, or more properly called an "Anti-masonic Convention," was held in Hotchkiss hall, Waterbury, on Wednesday last, extending over to Thursday, holding sessions morning, afternoon and evening of each day. J. A. Conant, of Willimantic, president of the society, presided at the meetings. Wednesday forenoon Edmond Ronayne, Past Master of a Masonic lodge in Chicago, who now regards the order as desperately wicked, made an address against Masonry, and Elder J. P. Stoddard showed charts illustrating the various Masonic degrees and oaths, and denounced the institution generally, as did the others who followed him. In the afternoon Elder Stoddard spoke upon the anti-christian and anti social character of Masonry. In the evening Mr. Ronayne conducted ceremonies intended to exhibit the initiation of a candidate into the first degree of Masonry, and to reveal the inside work of a lodge—occupying two and a half hours in the performance. Thursday evening the third degree ceremonies were given in City Hall, the hall where most of the meetings were held being insufficient to accommodate the audience. Thursday forenoon officers were elected as follows:

J. A. Conant, president; D. J. Ells worth, secretary; C. T. Collins, treasurer; delegates to the National Convention, Francis Gillette, Hartford, J. A. Conant, Willimantic, F. Dunbar, J. M. Russel, Waterbury, D. J. Ellsworth, Windsor.

Resolutions denouncing secret societies were passed. Thursday afternoon Elder Stoddard lectured again, this time upon the despotic and treasonable character of Freemasonry. Letters were read from Hon. Francis Gillette of Hartford, and E. J. Chalfant, of York, Pa. That of Mr. Gillette expressed sympathy with the organization in its antagonism to secret societies, which he characterized as belonging to the dark ages, and "antagonistic to both Christianity and freedom, to civilization and progress. pestilent exotics to us in this nineteenth century; plants which the Nather hath not planted and therefore they must be rooted up."

The National Convention to which delegates were chosen, is to meet in Chicago, June 20th to 23rd.

From the General Agent.

En Route for Conn.—Greetings at Willimantic, Putnam, and Waterbury.—Trying news from Home.—The Convention.—Followed to New York.

After enjoying good cheer and being refreshed in body and soul at the sanctum and house of Bro. Stratton, I continued my journeyings eastward, reaching Springfield, Mass., soon after day light. After a short delay I took passage for Hartford, where I was again delayed for a short time, and thus had an opportunity to visit the new State House, not yet completed, and a few points of interest in this truly beautiful city, where a little over a year ago the Connecticut Anti-secrecy Association was organized. Arriving at Willimantic about 11 o'clock A. M., I soon found Bro. Conant, "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," and "ready for every good word and work." In his office I found Masonic and Anti-masonic books and periodicals in abundance, and tracts by the thousand ready for distribution.

In the evening we began a reconnoissance of the field and were glad to meet with some who were friendly to our reform; but they do not openly take sides with Christ against his sworn enemy, the lodge. It was thought advisable that I should make a hasty trip to Putnam, for consultation. Here I found Bros. Buck, Williams, and others with their faces set against the works of darkness, but for want of sufficient time no meetings were attempted at this point. Bro. Williams is keeping the work of the craft in that immediate locality before the people, which is not without good results. I met two persons during my two hours stay in Putnam, who had become disaffected and virtually though not publicly severed their connection with the order. Reaching Willimantic at 8 P. M., I met Bro. C. at the depot, and we repaired immediately to the church where the faithful had gathered for prayer. The meeting was spirited, the occasion deeply interesting, and the prayers fervent. Several participated who had recently been brought from the darkness of sin into the light and liberty of Christ. To me this was a joy of heart, and far exceeded any benefits I could have derived from association with Jews and infidels in darkened attic under sworn concealment.

The day following I visited Hon. Francis Gillette at his home in Hartford, and regretted to find his health somewhat impaired, so much so as to render it impracticable for him to attend the meeting at Waterbury. His interest in our reform is unabated, and his very able and timely letter to this convention will be read with interest by all the friends. At nightfall, I found myself the guest of Bro. and sister J. M. Russell, in Waterbury. Although I had never before seen either Bro. or sister R., yet I have seldom if ever received a more hearty greeting or been more happily cared for in all my journeyings. It affords me great pleasure to acknowledge their kindness and for their prosperity I shall ever pray. I visited the Baptist church in the evening, and took part in the prayer-meeting. At its close the pastor and several of the members greeted me cordially, and I returned to my lodging grateful that there was a sanctuary that might be entered by the "blood of the covenant," where no "grim tyler" stood to collect the "pass" and drive away all cowans who could not give the shibboleth of the clan to his liking.

The day following (Saturday) I visited the pastors in the forenoon, and although I found them all anti-lodge men, received but very little encouragement of active co-operation. Returning to the post-office and calling for my mail, I was rejoiced to receive a letter from my wife, the first since leaving home. Opening the letter as passed along the walk I read:

"Byron, Apr. 18, 1876.

Dear Husband:—Our house is gone, but God is left. Our dwelling is burned, but our children are safe."

I said, "It is enough," and could scarcely restrain myself from falling on my knees upon the pavement and thanking God. "The children are safe," and what are houses compared with the safety of those we love. At best these earthly tabernacles must soon be dissolved, but the life of a child if given to God, has a value beyond computation. May we who have been thus mercifully saved be able to say at least, "Father, here are thy servant and hand-maid, and the children thou hast given us, all 'saved by grace,' and 'washed in the blood of the Lamb.'"

I spent a profitable Sabbath in W. making the acquaintance of a number of Christian workers, who only needed a little information to become active opponents to the lodge. Monday and Tuesday were spent in preparing and circulating notices and awakening an interest in behalf of our convention. Several friends arrived on Tuesday evening, and we were all rejoiced to meet the man who "dares to beard the lion in his den," E. Ronayne. The first meeting in Hotchkiss Hall was small, but full of interest which increased steadily until it culminated in a grand enthusiastic gathering of two thousand in City Hall on the last evening of the convention. The secretary will give you a report of the convention proper, and if it seems necessary I will add other incidents when time permits.

Pittsburg Depot, Pa.,
Apr. 29, 1876.

Dear K:—I snatch a moment while waiting for the train to say to the friends through the country that the spell which bound the good people of Waterbury, Conn., is broken, and our reform work now fairly inaugurated in the State. The evidences of victory were everywhere apparent in shop, store, and on the streets after our convention, and on leaving for New York, the day following I found myself the "cynosure of many eyes." There were three rough, profane fellows who after endeavoring to provoke a quarrel with me amused themselves by watching me constantly, and pointing me out to passengers as (I know not what) but suppose as a thief or worse. It was a trifle annoying to be thus gazed at, and to have people coming into the cars for the evident purpose of seeing some desperate fellow, and having seen the monster for a time, retiring. The thought struck me that they were endeavoring to get up a sentiment against me, and might perhaps have me arrested on arriving at the city. I endeavorep to forestall anything of the kind by going among the passengers, and from car to car and making known my sentiments. I very soon found friends and was relieved from the annoyance.

J. P. Stoddard.

From the Illinois Agent—A Trip Across the Border.

Walker, Iowa, Apr. 27, 1876.

Dear Bro. Kellogg:—Our General Agent, Bro. Stoddard, feeling it to be his duty to attend the State Anti-secret Convention in Connecticut, requested me to fill for him some appointments in this State and to attend the State meeting at Western.

I left home on the 19th and at 9½ P. M. reached Montrose in south-eastern Iowa. I was here most cordially by Bro. H. W. Hitchcock and other good brethren, and arrangments were made for me to lecture on the 21st and 22nd in the Presbyterian church.

Montrose is a pleasant village on the Mississippi river, of about 1,500 inhabitants, with four churches, Methodist Episcopal, Protestant Episcopal, Presbyterian and Mormon.

Nauvoo the former seat of Mormondom is on the opposite side of the river and seems to be a town of considerable importance and prosperity.

No previous lecture had been given in the place and people seemed to be filled with wonder that any one should dare to question the authority of Masonry, or that the Presbyterian church should be opened for such an object.

The first meeting was quite well attended and excellent attention was given. At its close a reply was invited and responded to by a learned doctor who said Freemasons never condescended to defend themselves and he would not affirm or deny anything that had been stated, which the people seemed to think was a good reason for believing that it could not be denied. Quite an excitement was the result and Masonry became the leading topic of conversation. On the second evening we had a good audience and a brief reply to the same effect. On Sabbath evening I preached in the Presbyterian church, and on Monday eve lectured in the Baptist church in Charleston to a good audience assembled on half an hour's notice.

I contrasted God's great system of benevolence with the Masonic plan, which excludes all old men, young men, cripples and women. A prominent Mason asked if fools were not also excluded from the lodge. I told him that was so, but that in the King's Highway a fool should not err therein, and that there was ground for hope even for him and myself.

A horseback ride of eight miles after 10 o'clock P. M. brought me again to Montrose where I took the cars at 6½ A. M. for Western and the State meeting. Of that meeting I need not speak except to say that the blessed Lord was with us, and that the desire for lectures indicated that a State agent would be well sustained.

From thence I came to Walker in the north-western corner of Linn County, where a new Wesleyan church has been erected and where an earnest Christian people under the pastoral care of Rev. Mr. Balch is combating a strong, Masonic and Satanic influence. I spoke last night to a good audience and offered opportunity for any denial. No one chose to reply, but I find this morning that the wrath of the fraternity was stirred to its depths, and that I am affirmed to be a liar, and to have misquoted Masonic authors; and at the same time I am told that no true Mason will have any controversy with the "profane." In other words they have no arguments, but slander, falsehood, and abuse; but thanks be to God there are thousands of hearts like the souls under the altar that continue to cry, "How long, O God, just and holy, dost thou not avenge the blood of them who cry unto thee." Yours in the Lord,

H. H. Hinman.

The Iowa State Convention.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

We the members of the State Anti-secret, Christian Association of Iowa, assembled in State convention, deeply impressed with the importance of the Christian religion, and true Republicanism, as essential to the happiness of mankind, and the prosperity of our nation, and believing that the secret orders are in their nature subversive of both Christianity and Republicanism, do hereby call upon all good citizens to unite in opposing them; because,

1st. Their secrecy is suspicious and is a source of discord and jealousy both in the church and state.

2nd. They make men uncandid and untruthful, requiring them to pretend that to be secret which has been fully revealed, and that these pretended secrets are of great value when they know that they are worthless.

3d. They bind their members by obligations which are never communicated to the candidate until after they are assumed thereby enslaving his conscience and destroying his spiritual freedom.

4th. They establish a pretended system of benevolence which has none of the elements of Christian benevolence and is inconsistent with its demands.

5th. Freemasonry perverts history, and by its pretended traditions contradicts the plain teachings of God's Word.

6th. It requires the taking of extra-judicial, illegal and profane oaths.

7th. It binds its members under oaths of partiality to each other, requiring them to conceal crime and espouse the cause of wrong doers.

8th. It teaches a religion in which there is no mediator, and no recognition of Christ, or of the Holy Spirit.

9th. It enjoins ceremonies which are at once childish, immoral and profane.

10th. For these and other reasons, it becomes the unmistakable duty of all good citizens, and especially of all watchmen on the walls of Zion to lift their warning voice, ere the sword come, and men perish in their iniquities.

11th. It is the manifest duty of all Christian churches at present, that, extend fellowship to adhering members of secret orders, to withdraw and withhold such fellowship, and that after faithful labor and due admonition, it is the duty of the friends of this reform to withdraw from such churches as refuse to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

12th. That humbly invoking the blessing of God on our work of Christian reform, we greatly rejoice in the manifest tokens of his presence, and with renewed courage we engage in this great work until victory shall crown our endeavors.

13th. That the thanks of this convention be extended to the Hon. J. B. Walker of Wheaton, Ill., to Rev. H. H. Hinman, State agent of the Anti-secrecy Association of Ill., and to other speakers for their able and timely addresses, and for their words of counsel and encouragement.

14th. That the munificent donation of Philo Carpenter Esq., of Chicago, calls for fervent gratitude to God, and to the donor.

15th. That we earnestly commend the Christian Cynosure, the able and fearless organ of the N. C. Association and we heartily endorse and approve of all the other papers which are faithful advocates of this reform.

16th. That the thanks of this convention are hereby tendered to the citizens of Western, for their generous hospitality, and to the authorities of Western College for the free use of their commodious Chapel.

A FLYING TRIP TO PHILADELPHIA.

Reminiscences of Army Life fifteen years ago—Guarding the Baltimore & Ohio R. R.—Stonewall Jackson's first Great Raid—The 39th Illinois Infantry met him—The Rebel estimate of their number—Sixty men whip fifteen hundred Rebels—The Rebel Stonewalls' attempted "Game of Bluff," and General Lander's characteristic reply to his demand—The Great Raider lost much and accomplished nothing of note.

Monday evening at 5 o'clock eight minutes, I left Chicago on a flying trip to Philadelphia, for the purpose stated in my last letter.

Although leaving home very reluctantly, on account of the time and expense necessary for the trip, I still anticipated and enjoyed

A TRIP OF GREAT INTEREST.

By taking the Baltimore & Ohio R. R., I would ride over a hundred miles of territory where I had fought rebels fifteen years ago, and could visit the city of Washington, which I had seen only in the dim distance, from a spot near Alexandria. From Wheeling, West Va., to Harpers Ferry, Va., almost every road or footpath has been traversed by hostile armies. My own regiment, the 39th Illinois Infantry, guarded this R. R. from December 1861, to the evacuation of the Manassas Gap Batteries and the surrender of the terrible "Quaker Guns," that had kept the brave (?) McClellan at bay all winter. Our regiment garrisoned Hancock, Sir John Run and Great Cacapon Stations on this road and also Bath, which was occupied as an outport, just over the mountain towards Winchester, Va., where there was a large rebel force. Here, in January, we met the afterwards notorious rebel General, Stonewall Jackson, in his first "Great Raid," in which he lost more men in battle and by exposure in the mountains, than the entire number of the Federal force that met him. So well directed was the fire of our men in these engagements that the rebel official report, as given in the rebel papers, estimated our Regiment, then about 600 strong, at about 10,000 and the 60 men of my own company (G) was given at 1,500. According to this rebel account they were met by a heavy force on the top of Great Cacapon mountain and were repulsed. That force was twenty-one men under Lieutenant Rudd of our company. This was early in the afternoon, and at night-fall they again advanced, without resistance 1,500 strong with a section of artillery (two cannons) to the R. R. bridge and ford of Great Cacapon river, where they were met by sixty men of our company, and were so badly whipped that they left their artillery and ran clear back over the mountain to Bath and did not venture back there again until the next day, when we were many miles away in obedience to orders.

At Bath, Sir Johns Run and Hancock Station, they met with brave resistance and as stated they officially reported our force at fully fifteen times what it really was. At Bath was a section of artillery, two companies of our regiment, and the day before the rebel attack they were re-enforced by a Penn. Regiment (84th I think) who had that day received their muskets, not one tenth of which were in order for use, and on the approach of the rebles they could do no better than to observe that discretion which is the better part of valor. The artillery did fine service, and when with our regiment they were reluctantly forced across the Potomac, they continued to shell the rebels with such effect as to prevent them from following. When the brave General Lander, an officer in the Mexican war, who had a bullet through one lung, from which he never fully recovered, arrived (from Frederick I think) with slight re-enforcements the next day the rebels were still at bay, and the great raider failed to effect a lodgement on the Maryland side. Repeated efforts were made to throw a pontoon across the river, but they all failed.

The rebel General Jackson's attempted "Game of Bluff," was for a long while considered a good joke among us. Seeing he could not make his men ford the rivers, or put their pontoons across under our effective fire, he sent over under a flag of truce, Colonel Ashby, afterwards famous as a cavalry raider, with a demand for the surrender of the town (Hancock, Maryland) and a threat to shell the town after allowing a short time to get the women and children out.

Hancock Station is on the Virginia side, but the city of Hancock is across the Potomac in Maryland.

Colonel Ashby in charge of an officer of our regiment was blindfolded, rowed across the river and taken to General Lander, with his demand and threat.

"Tell General Jackson that he may shell the town as soon as he pleases; I will fight him till I have but ten men left, and if they start to run, I will shoot them," replied the old veteran.

He shelled away with little effect, and not long after withdrew to the South, having lost heavily, particularly by exposure, and accomplished nothing of any note.

This account may seem to some exaggerated and bombastic, but it is the simple truth. Its explanation is to be found in the fact that while the rebels were undisciplined and poorly armed and many of them conscripts, our regiment was composed of well drilled and splendidly armed PATRIOTS, who "never knew when they were whipped," and hated rebels so bad that they were determined to "shoot them at sight." Besides this, at some of the points, we occupied breastworks of some kind which gave us an advantage decided for while concealed ourselves, the rebels were plainly observed even in the night attack, by their voices and the flash of their guns.

A few months after this we again met the rebel Jackson's army, in a very hotly contested fight at the

under the command of Gen. Shields, also formerly an officer in the Mexican war (Gen. Lander had in the meantime died from his wound received so many years before.)

Although the rebel army greatly outnumbered us, this battle resulted in a glorious Union victory which was closely followed up, my own regiment, with the cavalry leading the advance, in the chase after him, away up the Shenandoah Valley to Harrisonburg. After this battle of Winchester, we gave the great raider the prefix of STONEWALL, because his army stuck to the stone walls running through the battlefield with such tenacity, only a fierce charge drove them from its cover. The rebels had some other reason for the sobriquet. While acknowledging the fact that Stonewall Jackson succeeded admirably as a "raider," by making remarkably quick marches and pouncing on to some outpost, numbering a tenth of his force, I always believed that we could whip him in a square fight with half his number. And I surely would not mention any of the horrors of our late war, but to recall the goodness of God in preserving our nation and verifying his promise that "One of you shall chase a thousand and two shall put ten thousand to flight." Leaving Chicago at 8 o'clock eight minutes P. M., Monday, we were CLIMBING THE ALLEGHANIES on Tuesday, drawn by two powerful locomotives, at a rate of speed truly wonderful, amid the grandest scenery I have ever beheld. There may be some still finer scenery in the Yosemite Valley, but this will answer admirably to begin with. The scenery around Harpers Ferry and Point of Rocks is sublimely grand. For many miles the railroad bed was made by blasting off the side of the mountain, into the edge of the river, and is therefore remarkably crooked and occasionally a high perpendicular wall of stone supporting the railroad bed runs to the water's edge below. Sometimes it leaves the river bed for a few miles, now crossing a deep gully, then through as deep a cut, then across another gully, and a moment after we plunge into Egyptian darkness through a tunnel under the mountain. There are at least half a dozen of these tunnels varying from a few rods to seven-eighths of a mile in length. Up, up, UP, we go, now making a sharp turn to the left towards the river, then to the right by as sharp a turn, then again to the left, and the next moment our iron horses seem making for the rear of the train by a short curve like a kitten chasing her tail. At last we reach the summit of the Alleghanies, one of our engines shoots ahead out of sight in a twinkling, to re-appear on some curve beyond and is soon lost in the distance. Down go the brakes and we come thundering after it in a hopeless chase.

Warning to Young Men.

It is the duty of those who have learned what a horrid thing Freemasonry is, to admonish all young men who contemplate joining this ungodly society. Is it possible, that those young men who have already entered into this devil's snare, comprehended what kind of a system it was? They would undoubtedly not have entered, had they understood it before-hand! Like a mouse, seeing the trap and bait thereon, goes forward not heeding the danger, until it is fastened therein. Keep out of this dangerous trap, and come and partake of the love of Jesus, for he will give you a home of eternal life; but in the devil's trap, Freemasonry, you will lose your soul. We cannot be saved only through Jesus; but this Freemasonry rejects the blessed name of Jesus, and how can they who love it be saved? Therefore, young men, you must think of your soul's welfare. Flee from these horrible secret societies; flee to Jesus, the only true Master who can save you.

LEVIN JOHNSON.

Odd-fellowship in a Religious Sense.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I got a copy of your publication named "Odd-fellowship Illustrated," giving the degrees of the lodge and the ladies' degree, intending to give it to a gentleman but I first undertook to mark the omissions of Christ's name in their forms of prayer, so that his attention might be especially called to that as one of the barriers which ought to prevent any Christian from taking part in any such religious worship,—for I hold prayer to be worship—and worship without Christ, what Christian can justify? I found it far worse than I had believed; for example: the addresses found, or base the hope of eternal life upon the practice of faith, hope, and charity, and ascribe not to Christianity, but to Odd-fellowship the hope of renewing this world, and binding mankind of any or every sort of religion together—all equally entitled to go to the lodge above if they are faithful.

Then again, they draw their emblems from any source; Jewish, heathen, Christian, or Mohammedan; spice the strange mass of smooth words with quotations from the "Book of Books"—a fine bait to catch minnows (ninnies) with—and while advising the practice of morality specially to their members, they have a grand hodge-podge to mix all together or a mill to grind up into dust every religion amid a grand uproar. Yours,

SENEX.

Some Cases in Law.

GODRICH, Mich.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—You will find enclosed some money for tracts. I want to circulate them. I want to do all the good I can towards helping along in this cause of reform, for I do want people to open their eyes and see the evil that is committed by Freemasonry throughout all our land.

Several cases I could cite of crimes committed here in Genesee Co. within a few years. One or two I will mention.

One man named Bush was arrested and examined and put in jail for murdering an orphan girl, and was bailed out (by Masons no doubt) and then had his trial in the circuit court and convicted of murder in the second degree. This was two years ago, and he is yet running at large, and has never had his sentence and no new suit depending. He is a Master Mason, and belonged in Goodrich Lodge. The Masons say they have punished him. How? O, turned him out of the lodge! But the fact is, it is another Ellen Slade case exactly; but we did not have Daniel H. Whitney for Judge; that's what's the matter.

And now, since E. Ronayne was here our deputy post-master named Oaks, has slipped off, taking with him all the registered letters and all the money there was in the post-office, and then as the Freemason newspapers say, went into a saloon and got a bottle of whiskey and then wandered aimlessly away, and near night-fall found himself near the city of Lapeer. He went to the Abrams House in a half crazed condition, and in the morning his conscience upbraided him so, and his feet was so badly frozen and swollen that he announced his intention to the proprietor of the hotel to return to Flint. In the afternoon the marshall of Lapeer took him back to Flint and lodged him in jail, and then he was bailed out (as the Mason papers say) by six of the best men in Flint, his bonds being put at $3,000. Oaks was a high Mason, I have been told by good authority. The Freemason papers say he has been examined by several physicians, and they pronounce him hopelessly insane. So you can see the Freemasons intend to clear him through insanity.

I have come to a full conclusion never to vote for another secret oath-bound man. Yours for the truth and right. M. Liscomb.

Moral Courage Needed.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

When I commenced to take your excellent paper I had great faith that all our church people would need would be but a reading of it to make them eager to take it, but I find that although our church discipline condemns secret societies and although we have a large and wealthy society here, I cannot prevail upon a single member to let it be known that he is opposed to secrecy, and in fact if they read anything on the subject it is done in secret, and if they are forced to speak about secret societies in public they will invariably, with but one or two exceptions, palliate and encourage them. This course utterly astonishes me. A large and wealthy church like ours taking a bold and honest stand for truth would have a great influence for good, but when they will truckle and hide their light under a bushel, and let scattering individuals bear the curse and suffering enforced upon those who oppose them, I must say I feel ashamed of my connection with such a church. Let Christians stand up to their profession or deny their Master and done with it. I know I am made to suffer every day of my life because I have scattered some tracts among my neighbors against the craft, and my taking the Cynosure is also an evil, and I am made to suffer in my property and character in consequence; but I cannot be two-faced in this matter. I must say I am quite ashamed of the course the U. P. church of Martin takes in regard to this great evil.

I am greatly rejoiced that you have secured the Carpenter building and it does my heart good to see God is prospering you in your work of love. It is truly a stupendous work you have undertaken, but I know you are in the right and God will certianly cause you to succeed at last.

I believe the great injustice done by secrecy in courts of justice will yet be the great means of their overthrow, for they fully carry out their sworn obligations in courts so that the guilty are freed and the righteous are condemned every time as I have had thoroughly proved to me in my own case; but God has said, "Though hand join in hand the wicked shall not go unpunished."

I don't wish to charge that all members of even the Freemasons are evil-disposed or bad men. Far from it; many of them are gentlemen whom I respect, and who are worthy the respect of good men generally; but the evil is in the fact the bad men who get into the society can accomplish so much evil under cover of their secrecy and the better class must sustain them under their oaths and penalties to uphold their brethren of the craft, right or wrong.

Yours very truly, L. Monteith.

Children that Cause Shame.

Sullivan, O., April 17, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I send you this in order to let you and the readers of your very excellent paper know of the charity of Freemasonry, as exercised by the sons of an aged father. The father has been a life-long Anti-mason, and opposed to every other kind of wickedness; preaching, lecturing, and speaking against them whenever an opportunity offered. His sons also embraced religion while yet at home, but afterwards left the religion of Christ altogether by swearing allegiance to the man of sin, Freemasonry. One of those sons has since died, and before his death appointed his brother executor, and directed him in his will to take a certain amount of his estate and put a monument to his grave, with a Masonic emblem engraved thereon. The estate being insufficient to enable the executor to do this, he applied to his father to aid in getting said monument, which the father could not do conscientiously, but agreed to help get, or get it himself, in case the emblem was omitted, stating that it was bad enough to have the son preach Masonry during life let alone helping him preach it from his tombstone. The father had repeatedly admonished them to quit the lodge, that it would ruin their souls. This incurred their displeasure, and made them treat the old man with disrespect. But upon his refusing the above request, caused the son, and his wife helping him, to denounce the old man as an ungrateful, unloving and unfeeling father; charging him with hatred to his children, and un-Christian conduct; severing every natural and religious tie, which caused the father to leave his unnatural son's house forever, with a heart bowed down with grief. Can a tree bearing such fruit be good? The Saviour said that by their fruit you should know them. Now this son, no doubt, thinks that he is doing God and the lodge service in thus opposing his father, for he is a deacon in a church where he and his wife still retain their membership, having a form of godliness, but denying its power, by practicing lodge religion, and defending it against everything that is good. How long, O God, until men shall cease to prevent the right ways of the world's Saviour, and man's Redeemer, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ! O God, for Christ's sake, turn aside the councils of the wicked formed against thee, thy Son, and thy people. I remain yours truly, J. B. Cressinger.

Mrs. M. T. Bullard, Columbia City, Ind., writes:

"I delayed sending thinking I might get at least one subscriber to your paper, but trashy novels are generally preferred by the people. If they would aspire to something higher than spending their precious time with novels, and devote it to good, moral reading and reflection, they would be better informed in that which is truly righteous and would be more fully prepared to discern good from evil doings. When thus informed they can more easily see the wrong there is in secret societies and other kindred evils."

M. R. Britten, Vienna, Wis., sends one dollar and twenty cents handed him by a new convert to our cause, for the Cynosure, who gives it to convert a friend, and writes:

Lesson for May 21.—Christian Fellowship.

SCRIPTURE,—Acts iv. 23-37. Commit 31-35; Primary Verse, 31.

23 And being let go, they went to their own company, and reported all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them.

24 And when they heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea and all that in them is;

25 Who by the mouth of thy servant David hath said, Why did the people rage and the heathen imagine vain things?

26 The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ.

27 For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel were gathered together,

28 For to do whatsoever thy hand and thy council determined before to be done.

29 And, now, Lord, behold their threatenings, and grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word.

30 By stretching forth thine hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus.

31 And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together: and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness.

32 And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things in common.

33 And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all.

34 Neither was there any among that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold,

35 And laid them down at the apostles' feet and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need.

36 And Joses, who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas, (which is, being interpreted, The son of consolation,) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus, 37 Having land, sold it, and brought the money and laid it at the apostles' feet.

DARKNESS PUT FOR LIGHT.

A Roman Catholic paper which carries at the head of its editorial columns the endorsement of five Popish Bishops, one Arch-bishop, and one Cardinal copies from one of our editorials, and comments as follows:—

"'The grandchildren of the men who taught theology at Andover and Lane, are becoming ritualis s and Roman Catholics', says an exchange which looks upon that process as an evidence of a 'general apostasy from Christ and his atonement.' Why not rather regard it as a proof that the punishments which God threatens to extend to the third and fourth generations of those that hate him, and forsake his law, are now giving place to the rewards promised to the thousandth generation of those that love him? The ancestors of 'the men who taught theology at Andover and Lane' three generations back, were doubtless devout Roman Catholics who earned the late reward which these days of conversions give them."

One of the grandchildren referred to above was a drinking, swearing, self-conceited nephew of H. W. Beecher, whose head was slightly grazed with a minnie ball, and he was taken to the hospital. The doc or told him the wound might be dangerous if inflammation set in. This scared him and he sent for a popish priest, who hailed this returning lamb to the Romish fold, and told him it would be necessary for him to confess. Fred, (for that was his name) mustered up a confession that in one very hot battle, "the boys tell me I did swear terribly." "Wel, poor boy, you coulo'nt help it could you?" replied the old priest, benignly, laying his hand on Fred's head.

Can it be possible that talented, well-read men like the editor of the Catholic Review can hail such conversions, with the blasphemous farce which this priest enacted, as proofs of God's favor to their church! Or have these talented men made lies their refuge, "deceiving and being deceived?" What is to become of the future swarming millions of this country when such ribald shams of the confessional and the lodge shall govern it! "If the light that is in them be darkness, how great is that darkness," said our Saviour to a similar set.

"HONOR TO WHOM HONOR."

The Religious Telescope handsomely obeys the above just precept in its notice of the Publishing House (I wish it were called our "House of Prayer") and of its donor Mr. Carpenter. We give its remarks below:—

Anti-secrecy Publishing House.—The conditions upon which the National Christian Association were to have possession of the Philo Carpenter building in Chicago have been met, and the Association will henceforth have the use of the building and all rents coming from the same, they paying the taxes and keeping the building insured. When a sufficient further amount is raised Mr. Carpenter will give a full title to the property, donating a large share of the value of the building. Mr. Carpenter is known in Congregational circles as being one of the most benevolent and one of the very best men in that church in all the West—so regarded by those not partial to anti-secrecy principles. The Association, within about seven years, has made such progress in its publishing interests, as well as otherwise, as to very greatly gratify and encourage the friends of the anti-secrecy cause. Mr. Carpenter has been a host to the anti-secrecy cause financially and morally.

The Telescope partly misconstrues Mr. Carpenter's proposition however. He not only proposes to donate "a large share of the value of the building," but the whole of it from basement to roof and the large lot on which it stands. Let our friends only do their part.

THE CHICAGO AUXILIARY.

The successful organization of a local society in Chicago, opposed to the lodge, is an interesting event in the progress of this reform. No auxiliary association has been founded under such hopeful circumstances. The National Convention soon to meet gives it immediately a good work to do which is always the life of any good society. Questions of entertainment, and securing a strong local interest in that convention bring it into immediate activity. It has the use, too, of a pleasant room in the Carpenter building, free of rent.

A goodly number responded to the call through the Cynosure and daily press on Tuesday evening of last week. Our General Agent was present and conducted appropriate religious opening exercises, in which a delegation of students from the Union Park Theological Seminary rendered efficient help in way of song. Mr. E. A. Cook was elected temporary chairman, and Rev. W. I. Phillips, Secretary. A constitution and by-laws was presented by Rev. J. W. Bain, which the meeting adopted with little change and elected as permanent officers: President, J. W. Bain; Vice President, Philo Carpenter, Mrs. C. N. Holden and C. R. Hagerty; Secretary, Mrs. M. E. Cook; Treasurer, J. B. Blank. Remarks were made in the course of the evening by Judge Zearing, J. P. Stoddard and Rev. J. W. Bain; and the new association entered happily upon its mission, which will no doubt be one of toil, but also of faith, courage and zeal for the truth.

—A correspondent of the Telescope suggests the circulation of a petition to Congress embodying the following request: "We are persuaded that it must be especially dangerous to liberty where the army of the country is permitted to enter into a covert league with the Masonic lodge; and we therefore pray your honorable body to call on the Secretary of War for the names of all officers of the regular army who are in active membership with the Masonic lodge, or any other secret organization, in order that the information may be made public for the benefit of the people." The success of the former petition so far is encouragement enough to follow it with another. Keep hitting in the same place and something will break.

—The latest Masonic joke turns up in connection with the unfortunate Charlie Ross abduction. A dispatch from Sedalia, Mo,, says:

A boy said to be Charlie Ross is now at Sherman, Texas. He answers every description except the supposed size. He recognized his father's and mother's pictures. He was first heard of in Texas last January, at Burlington, and was followed to the Indian Territory, and taken from a woman named Ross. She says his name is Hiram Abiff. The boy gives nothing of his parent's residence.

If the Masonic fraternity will follow up this clue they may find an answer to their melancholy question, "Where is our Grand Master Hiram Abiff?"

—Rev. W. W. Knipple of Saybrook, Ill., finds an opening in the Bloomington Pantagraph to answer a base attack of the secretists upon him and the United Brethren church worshiping at Mt. Hope Chapel. Papers open to free expression of opinion against the lodge are increasing in number. Let the day hasten when there are no others.

—The great Masonic temple in New York answers well its purpose as a center of secretism. Other lodges than Freemasons find shelter there as some dark cavern conceals wild colonies of bats, vipers and savage beasts. Several lodges of disaffective carpenters' unions met in its halls to inaugurate a strike last week.

—Elder Finney and Bro. Dorcas present some of the necessities of the reform in a way to reach many hearts, and, we hope, some pockets that have not been blessed in making a donation for the cause. We should be encouraged that there is need of such efforts to carry on the reform. It shows the vitality in it.

—It is proof enough of the vitality of the issue with secretism to read the references to Mr. Moody's remarks in New York and Philadelphia. The Christian Instructor quotes this from one of his closing discourses in New York on walking with God. Let every professing Christian read:—"With the Bible open before me, I cannot see what right any child of God has to go and yoke himself with unbelievers in business, or in secret societies, or in any other society. If you say it is to do good, you can do more good without them than you can possibly do by identifying yourself with them. Abraham had more influence over Sodom away up in Hebron than Lot had there in Sodom." And while in Brooklyn also Mr. Moody gave his testimony for the efficiency of the church in contrast with the partial and pretended charity of the lodge. May God uphold him in these noble words.

The Centennial Exposition.

The Great Buildings—Palatial display by Foreigners—Unfinished Work—Elder A D. Freeman and Tracts in South-east part of the Main Building—Machinery Hall—Horticultural Hall—The Woman's Building—Woman's Inventive Genius and Mechanical Skill—Immense Hotel Accommodations at Reasonable Rates.

Four great structures in Fairmount Park, seven or eight miles from the central portion of Philadelphia, comprise the Centennial buildings. The largest of these known as the "Main building" is of immense proportions. Those who have leisure to do so can spend a whole week in the Main building alone in examining specimens of the useful and the beautiful from a score of foreign countries, besides an almost endless variety of wonderful things made in our own land. One half of this great structure is assigned exclusively to foreign countries and each of them seems to vie with the other to see how grand a palace be can built in which to show the wonderful and the useful in art, literature, manufactures, designs for great public works with maps in endless variety. As most of the grander establishments had signs such as "Keep out," "No Admittance," "Hands off," etc., it was impossible to see a hundredth part of the wonders to be displayed here.

Let none of our Cynosure subscribers forget to find Bro. Freeman and the Cynosure tracts and books in the south-east part of this building.

In merely passing hurriedly along I see prominent places occupied by England, France, Spain, Russia, Belgium, Sweden, Denmark, Brazil, Canada, Switzerland and the Netherlands.

Machinery hall is full of wonders, and here as in the Main Building it will be found that foreigners put to a severe test the claims of American inventors. Here I saw a monster sugar crusher for use in sugar refineries, and the engine connected with it I should think at least of one hundred horse power. This was brought direct from Scotland. By the side of it men were putting up a large ten cylinder printing press, from London, invented by one of the proprietors of the London Times and made for them. This, like the celebrated Bullock press, feeds from rolls of paper and prints ten papers at a time, cutting them just after each is printed. This press prints newspapers "by the mile." They expect to print a New York daily, probably the Times during the Centennial. Besides several engines for special purposes there is a monster of fourteen hundred horse power for running all the ordinary machinery. Among the multitude of novel machines some silk looms particularly interested me on account of the beautiful flowers woven as if by magic into the shining black silk in the same color.

Here as in the Main Building there is yet a vast amout of work to be done before all are ready for the opening, and those who come to the grand opening ceremonies, May 10th, will need to stay at least a week or two to see all that will be exhibited there.

Horticultural Hall and the Woman's

Building will have many attractions for those who are interested in the beautiful in nature and the handiwork of women, and all will be astonished at the proofs of the inventive genius and mechanical skill there shown.

Besides the vast sums invested in these Centennial buildings the temporary buildings for the hotel accommodation of exhibitors and visitors are estimated to have cost from one and a half to two million dollars. One of these hotel buildings the proprietors claim cost a full half million dollars, but I am told that this included $100,000 for furnishing it. The rates for hotel accommodations here it is said will be quite reasonable. Many of them charge $1.00 per day for a good room for lodging, and restaurant board costs about what your appetite may demand and your means allow, as you pay "by the piece." E. A. C.

Let us Rebuild.

A letter from the veteran Elder John Finney of Mansfield, O., says the right thing in regard to what is due our General Agent at this particular juncture. He writes: "I expected to say that although the adversary has had the house of Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard burnt down, still our Agent is in the field and his family are all alive, thanks to the God of heaven and earth for all his kind mercies to us. Shall we not pray that God may make Bro. Stoddard a second Luther in the work in which he is employed; that he may have all wisdom necessary, and the meekness of Moses. Let the friends of the reform build again a house for our Agent and keep him in the field. I am willing to do my share. What richer legacy can I bequeath to my children than the overthrow of all oath-bound secret societies."

All donations to the General or Lecture funds or payments of interest on Publishing House Fund can be applied in paying what is due Bro. Stoddard from the National Association. Let all aid in this work of justice and mercy.

Finish the Pub. House Fund before we Adjourn, that's the Word.

SHILOH, Iowa.

DEAR BRO. K.:—As I do not often trouble you, will you allow me a little space in the Cynosure to express the heart-felt gratitude that I feel in the prospect of having a Publishing House of our own in Chicago, clear of encumberance. I would be glad to see the entire amount made up before the National meeting adjourns, and I intend to do what I can to accomplish that object. Having with a few others at the late State Association at Western, pledged Cedar county for $100, for the Carpenter fund; myself having agreed with Bro. Hinman to raise $60 of it, while the friends west of the river agreed to raise the $40. On my return home I spent one day in soliciting donations in subscription, to raise the amount. I intend to spend all the time I can spare between now and the 20th of June, in securing funds for the Publishing House fund and I would like to say to all the friends of the cause throughout the country, and especially in Iowa, let us take hold of this work with a will, and the work will be done. Canvass your neighborhood, towns and villages, take whatever any man or woman is willing to give, state clearly the object for which you ask their support, and you will succeed in many cases where you did not expect to.

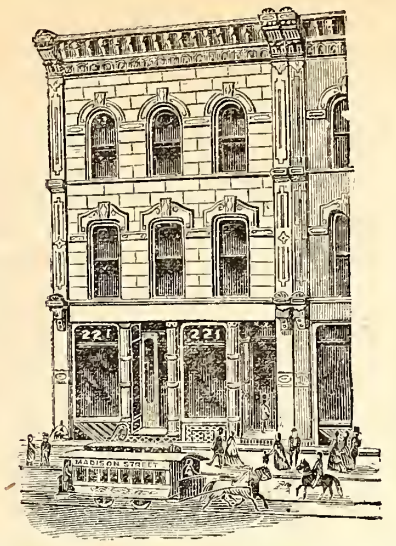
Let us pray that God may give us access to the hearts of the people, and that the hearts of God's people may become united in pushing forward this work of reform and that the kingdom of darkness may be overthrown, and that Jesus Christ may rule king of nations as he now rules king of saints. As you will have full reports of the State meeting, I will only say that it was a success, but there should have been more of the friends there in person, or by delegation. Let the friends of the cause remember this and be on hand at the next State meeting. JOHN DORCAS.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. J. P. Lytle of Ohio has undertaken the responsible agency of raising an endowment fund of $30,000 for Muskingum College.

—Miss F. E. Townsley, a former student of Wheaton College, who has been laboring with great success as an evangelist in New England, preached on a recent Sabbath to large audiences in the College Chapel and M. E. church, Wheaton. Last Sabbath she spoke to the prisoners in the penitentiary at Joliet, Ill.

—The Congregationalist says: "Do you not know how a church fair works? The principle is a very ingenious one. Some ladies borrow money from their husbands, buy materials, and make up fancy articles, which they give to the fair. Then they change places, borrow more money, and buy the articles back again."



—The American Board reports a shrinkage of $35,000 in receipts the first half of the present year, compared with the same period last year. Owing to the failure of crops, financial pressure, etc., most societies have fallen off in their receipts.

—A correspondent of the Evangelist has a proposition "to make a Centennial Offering to the Lord Jesus Christ of every Presbyterian church in the United States, free of debt, by or before the end of this year."

—The first Christian newspaper ever published in Japan has just been issued at Kobe. It is in Kana characters, which all the people can read.

—Mr. Moody is spending a short time in Augusta, Ga., recruiting and speaking occasionally, Some 5000 attended a recent discourse. He is to attend a Sabbath-school convention in Illinois in June. His next series of revival meetings will be held in Montreal.

—The Methodist Episcopal General Conference began its quadrennial meeting in Baltimore, on the 1st inst,, and will continue probably nearly or quite through the month. On the 4th Bishop James read the address of the bishops. During the past four years 73, 6 674 members of churches, and 47 ministers have died. In the same tim the net increase has been 160,460 in ministers and people. The total number of church-members at present is 1,642,456, served by 10,923 pastors. The whole number of churches reported is 15,033; estimated value, $71,-550,230, an increase of 1,193 churches, and $14,441,384 in valuation.

Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The Home Circle.

God's Eternal Goodness.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

I dimly guess from blessings known
Of greater out of sight,
And, with the chastened Psalmist, own
His judgments, too, are right.

I long for household voices gone,
For vanished smiles I long,
But God hath led my dear ones on,
And he can do no wrong.

I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

And so, beside the Silent Sea,
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from him can come to me
On ocean or on shore.

I know not where his islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond his love and care.

Testing the God of Jacob.

"When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the Lord will hear them; I the God of Jacob will not forsake them." Thus spake our compassionating, gracious God, by his servant Isaiah. And innumerable instances, in all ages of the world, prove that this promise, to the very letter, he has abundantly fulfilled. Let the following facts strengthen our faith in Him who is "the same yesterday, to day, and for ever."

The late Rev. Edward Parsons, of Leeds, some forty years ago, frequently supplied the pulpit of Tottenham Court Road Chapel. One Monday morning, after the fatigues of the previous Sabbath services, he took a sauntering walk with a view of recreating his mind, when a gentleman accosted him: "You appear to be taking a walk, sir; have you any objection for me to walk with you?" "Not the least," was the reply. They therefore walked on together. The stranger freely conversed with him on various topics, until they came to a certain house, when he said to Mr. Parsons, "This is my house, sir; would you like to walk in and rest yourself?" He made no objection; they therefore entered, and continued for a while their conversation. The gentleman courteously offered Mr. Parsons some refreshment, and then asked him if he would like to see over his house. To this unaccountable request Mr. Parsons consented, and was shown over a large, well-furnished residence.

When they returned to the drawing-room, the gentleman asked Mr. Parsons if he did not think his conduct strange. "To tell you the truth, I do," said he. The gentleman's reply was, that he had a design in thus treating him. He then related the following remarkable facts. Many years before, he had come with his wife from Scotland to London, and for a time had full employment as a mechanic. But when his work became slack, having no provision for such an emergency, he was obliged to part with some of his furniture, and take a smaller house. Still his temporal circumstances grew worse and worse. His health also failed, and he was necessitated to part with more and more of his furniture, until he found himself, wife, and family, driven to reside in a wretched cellar in St. Giles's. One day, after having parted with every article of furniture he could possibly spare, and being without food or the means of obtaining any, he resolved that the next morning he would drown himself in the New River, and accordingly started early to carry out his dire resolve. It was the Sabbath morning. As he passed through Tottenham Court Road, on his way to the New River, a little before seven o'clock, he found himself moving on with a throng of persons who were entering the Tabernacle. In a sullen mood he entered with the stream of early worshipers, still resolved to carry out his terrible design to commit suicide. The Rev. E. Parsons was in the pulpit. The hymn, the reading of the Scriptures, and the prayer struck the miserable one, and made him say to himself, "This man seems to feel what he says." But when Mr. Parsons gave out his text, which was, "When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I, the Lord, will hear them; I, the God of Jacob, will not forsake them," it seemed so truly for him, that the poor starving man could not help stopping through the sermon. At its close, Mr. Parsons asked, "Have you put the God of Jacob to the test?" The question was repeated and pressed, and the poor man said to himself, "I have not put the God of Jacob to the test," and consequently, with half a resolution to do so, he returned to the miserable cellar. There sat his wretched wife on a low stool, and there were his starving children, crying for the food which he could not supply. A short period of pensive sadness, and then he said to his wife, "I think we might read a chapter." Poor woman! the remark opened up the well-spring of her heart. She burst into tears. The thought of her early training at once rushed upon her mind. She looked for the Bible, but it had been pawned; she, however, found part of an old copy, out of which her husband read a chapter. "We have not put the God of Jacob to the test. Shall we pray?" said he. This more surprised the poor wife, but at once they knelt down, and did then put the God of Jacob to the test. Still the day passed without their being supplied with food.

Next morning, however, the postman, who rarely entered that poverty-stricken street, brought the man a letter, post-paid, from a fellow-workman, who had heard of his ill-health and loss of work. The letter contained information concerning a large firm in London which had an extensive contract, and was requiring a number of hands, and advised that he should apply to it for employment. It also contained a one-pound note, as a loan, which he immediately employed in obtaining food for his family and in delivering his best coat from the pawnbroker's. He then applied to the firm named, and obtained employment; and being a clever workman, his services were secured for a permanency. At length he was appointed foreman, and as the business extended had a small interest given him in the concern, which was in the hands of two brothers. When one of them died, he was made a regular partner; and as in the course of years an ample fortune had been realized by the remaining brother, he gave up the business to him. With grateful acknowledgements to the Lord, he then told Mr. Parsons that the style of his house fairly represented his temporal circumstances; and that he had also been enabled to the God of Jacob to the the test with reference to the wants of his soul. He had sought and found salvation, and "streams of spiritual comfort," so that he could set to his seal that God was true, and that "when the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, the Lord will hear them; the God of Jacob will not forsake them." Before Mr. Parsons left, he pressed him to accept a handsome present, as a token of his gratitude and the Lord's faithfulness; but he declined to do so. He, however, received from him a small tea-caddy, which is now in the possession of his son, the Rev. James Parsons, of York, who has verified the main facts of the statement. Some of its other details are given on the authority of the late Rev. Edward Parsons himself, as communicated by him to a fellow-passenger in a stage-coach.—Phillip's Answers to Prayer.

Doubtful Expedients.

Occasionally we find a liberal-minded Rev., or D. D., advocating the following games as innocent amusements for the young and even for church members, viz.: dancing at home and in select and social parties, billiards, croquet, cards, etc. A once very eminent minister of the Gospel advocated the introduction of billiard tables into the reading rooms of the Young Men's Christian Associations in our cities, as a means of inducing other young men to enter in and keeping others there who otherwise would go to play billiards at saloons where they would be thrown into bad company. The same gentleman lately recommended to Christian mothers the teaching of dancing to their sons and daughters, instead of cramming them with the catechism. If he were the only advocate of such things, we might overlook the matter and remain quiet; but since then other divines follow the same trail, and I think it is time for some one to raise a dissenting voice. When such men as President McCosh, of Princeton College, ask for donations of billiard tables to place in his college, and a merchant responds by sending him five such tables as a donation, it is high time for other ministers to raise their voices, and use their influence against any and all of such measures, as being certainly productive of much evil. Do those learned gentlemen suppose that young men whom they teach and who love to play billiards will play only in the college hall or rooms? Will they not also play at the saloons and other questionable places of resort? Will not some young men through these means learn to play, who otherwise never could have learned, and being expert in playing, can they refuse the temptation and bantering of others who play at saloons for drinks and cigars? Is there not danger of leading innocent young men into those very breathing holes of hell, gambling saloons and other bad places, out of which these learned men desire to keep them, by the introduction of these expedients into the colleges and Young Men's Christian Associations?

I tell you, brethren, you are directing immortal souls upon the wrong track and train—a track beset with many dangers, snares and temptations—a train that will lead to ruin and carry them to the depot of everlasting death! Life is too short and real to trifle away thus. It is not so much amusement our young men need or want, as proper training. Inculcate religious principles into their hearts; teach them the real beauty and worth of the Bible and religion, and they will not thank you for your croquet, cards, dancing or billiards. They will have no time to waste in such senseless, useless and demoralizing amusements. We have too many amusements already. They are a curse to the churches, a curse to society, a curse to thousands of young men (and older men too) out of the churches. They are sapping the churches of life and power, dimming their light, and making thousands of backsliders. If a few more eminent divines follow this trail I would not be surprised ere long to see some one recommend the introduction of billiard tables into our fashionable churches. They have their lecture-rooms, kitchens, and parlors—why not have a billiard hall? It would be a means of getting the young men in for innocent amusement, and once in, it would only be a step from there into the church.—Ev. Messenger.

Perfect in Love.

Whedon, commenting on Matthew v. 48, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect," says: "Neither St. Paul nor St. James expected that the Christians they addressed would be perfect like angels, or even ideally perfect men; not perfect performers of God's absolute law. But they did expect that the law of love might possess a perfect power in their hearts, and in that would consist the perfected character of their piety." And if the law of love—a law which lives and operates and governs only in the light and under the sanction of the recognized presence of God—does possess a perfect power in our hearts, then our repentance will be deep and thorough, and our abhorrence of sin strong and constant; and then our consecration to Christ and his work will be complete and perpetual.

It is reported of Charles XII. of Sweden, that, when he ascended the throne, he wrote on a map of Sweden: "God has given me this kingdom, and the devil shall not take it away from me." In like manner we shall be able if the law of love rules in our hearts, to write on body, soul and possessions:

"These are Christ's, and neither self or Satan shall pervert them to base and unholy uses." Then, too, faith will grasp all the promises of the inspired word, and rely with fullest confidence on the covenant love of God. Then the choice of God's way and work will be cheerful and absolute. Then all malice will be expelled from the heart, and gentleness, kindness, forbearance, patience, and resignation will dwell there like angels. Then service and sacrifice for Jesus and his cause will be rather sought than shunned. Then hope will be exultant, the victory over sin and Satan constant, and the confident assurance of a final triumph over death and hell an abiding and glorious experience.—Selected.

Low Life in Egypt.

From my window, in what I believe to be the most southern hotel in all Africa above Cape Colony, at Minien, in Upper Egypt, writes a correspondent from Egypt, I looked down into the interior of the houses of many of the agricultural laborers, if houses the simplest structures can be called. They consist of a clay enclosure, of irregular shape, six feet high and ten or twelve feet square. Across one corner of this enclosure is thrown a few bundles of reeds or canes, which form a shelter from the noonday rays of the sun. The door of this enclosure opens into a similar one, but without such shelter, in which at sunrise stand a donkey and a buffalo cow and her calf. This yard opens into the street, from which it is separated by a door of plaited reeds. This structure the Egyptian calls his home. Here he lives, here his children are born, here he expects to die. The whole affair cost probably five dollars beside his own labor. In the neighborhood of the town he may rent a small plot of ground at the rate of ten dollars per acre; he also possesses the buffalo cow and her calf, a donkey, and a few goats; then perhaps ten dollars worth of tools, furniture, and clothing, and ornaments for his wife and family. This ends the catalogue of Achmet's worldly possessions. Yet Achmet is the most independent man in the world, and it is just this independence that ruins him; this absolute freedom that keeps him in such abject poverty. He wants help from nobody; he shares his task with nobody. He is utterly ignorant of the great modern secret of power, the division of labor. He does not support a shoemaker, because he and his family go barefoot the entire year; nor a tailor, because his wife, Fatima, takes the cotton cloth from the bazaar, and, sewing a few seams, makes upon a similar and most simple plan all the garments of the family; nor does he need a woollen mill, for he sits at the door of his hut spinning with a single spindle sometimes all day long. Nor do his needs extend to a wagon-maker—the donkey transports everything he requires, his home-made, sun-dried bricks, his hay, himself, Fatima, and his children. He wants no miller, for Fatima, turning one flat stone upon another, grinds the corn and wheat to a coarse powder.

He needs no hatter, for he rolls his turban of white muslin himself—and this, to the European, is the most attractive work of art of which Achmet is capable. He scarcely patronizes the combmaker, because his head, for cleanliness sake, is shaven as close as the chin of a Frank. He requires no physician, because he has suspended around the necks of his family, in durable leathern bags, scraps of paper bearing magical texts from the Koran, which a scribe, who sits cross-legged at the corner of the street, is ready to write at a moment's notice; and these are the cheapest and best preventives and cures of all diseases. Even his dissipations are of his own preparation. He grows drowsy on tobacco raised on his own bit of ground, which he smokes as a cigarette, rolled by himself. He smokes or chews the hasheesh grown by stealth in his garden, and he intoxicates himself upon the date spirit which he has fermented and distilled in his primitive alembic. Fatima's entire domestic establishment has no work for a cooper, for all her vessels, except an iron-pan, are of coarse earthenware. Nor does she need a churn, for I saw her from my window use the most singular and primitive churn in the world. She brought from some mysterious corner a skin of last year's goat, which had been taken from the animal as nearly whole as possible. To each of what represented the legs of this animal she tied the end of a cord, then brought the other ends together in a knot, and suspended the whole to a peg five feet above the ground in the the wall. She now proceeded to open the skin at the neck and pour into it buffalo milk or cream from a large jar. She blew the skin full of air, and, tying the neck tightly with a string, sat down upon the ground to shake it. For five minutes she shook it with both hands back and forth, the buffalo cow herself looking on with a most knowing expression and ruminating slowly the while—then the air was let off and a fresh supply blown in from the lungs of the woman. This alternate shaking and supplying with air was continued for half an hour, when there was evidently a mass of butter rolling about within the bag. The buttermilk was poured off into the cream jar and carefully perserved, the butter squeezed into a coherent lump, and the operation was completed.—Pictorial World.

—Prayer is the key of the morning and bolt of the evening.

—Humility is perpetual quietness of heart. It is to have no trouble. It is never to be fretted, or vexed, or irritated, or sore, or disappointed. It is to expect nothing, to wonder at nothing that is done to me, or feel nothing done against me. It is to be at rest when nobody praises me, and when I am blamed and despised. It is to have a blessed home in myself, where I can go in and shut the door, and kneel to my Father in secret, and be at peace, as in a deep sea of calmness, when all around and above me is troubled.—*M. Children's Corner.

A Legend of the Northland.

BY PHEBE CARY.

Away, away, in the Northland,
Where the hours of the day are few,
And the nights are so long in winter,
They cannot sleep them through:

Where they harness the swift reindeer
To the sledges when it snows,
And the children look like bears' cubs,
In their funny, furry clothes.

They tell them a curious story—
I don't believe 'tis true;
And yet you may learn a lesson
If I tell the tale to you.

Once, when the good St. Peter
Lived in the world below,
And walked about, preaching,
Just as he did, you know.

He came to the door of a cottage,
In traveling round the earth,
Where a little woman was making cakes,
In the ashes on the hearth.

She made a very little cake,
But as it baking lay,
She looked at it, and thought it seemed
Too large to give away.

Therefore she kneaded another,
And still a smaller one;
But it looked when she turned it over,
As large as the first had done.

Then she took a tiny scrap of dough,
And rolled and rolled it flat,
And baked it thin as a wafer—
But she couldn't part with that.

For she said, "My cakes that seem so small
When I eat them myself,
Are yet too large to give away,"
So she put them on a shelf.

Then good Saint Peter grew angry,
For he was hungry and faint,
And surely such a woman
Was enough to provoke a saint.

And he said, "You are far too selfish
To dwell in a human form,
To have both food and shelter,
And fire to keep you warm.

"Now you shall build as the birds do,
And shall get your scanty food
By boring, and boring, and boring,
All day in the hard dry wood."

Then she went up through the chimney,
Never speaking a word;
And out of the top flew a woodpecker,
For she was changed to a bird.

She had a scarlet cap on her head,
And that was left the same;
But all the rest of her clothes were burned
Black as a coal in the flame.

And every country school-boy
Has seen her in the wood;
Where she lives in trees to this very day,
Boring and boring for food.

And this is the lesson she teaches:
Live not for yourselves alone,
Lest the needs you will not pity
Shall one day be your own.

Give plenty of what is given you,
Listen to pity's call;
Don't think the little you give is great,
And the much you get is small.

No, my little boy, remember that,
And try to be kind and good,
When you see the woodpecker's sooty dress,
And see her scarlet hood.

You mayn't be changed to a bird, though you live
As selfishly as you can;
But you will be changed to a smaller thing—
A mean and selfish man.

A Sermon to Girls.—Sincerity.

By sincerity I mean very much more than mere truth-telling. I know people whose word can always be trusted, and who never break a promise, yet who are not through and through sincere. Sincerity in character is like transparency in crystal. It is character without a flaw to hide, with no desire to appear better than it is, and it is not afraid to let itself be open as the day, for the day to shine through.

Absolute, rigid, uncompromising principle in all essentials is the rule of the sincere. Courteous consideration, generous self-forgetfulness, and kind approbation, is equally the rule of the sincere.

I cannot refrain from warning my readers against gushing. Think when you are writing that letter to that beloved friend, whether you mean all you say. Say nothing you do not feel sure you mean. Too many ardent intimacies burn themselves out, too many lifelong friendships grow cold, through the fierceness and fervor of the sentiment on which they are built. They are like fires of chips or brambles, not like deep smouldering furnace heats.

"Faithful," says the Holy Book "are the wounds of a friend." It is the kiss of an enemy that is deceiful. I believe that between the best friends there are times when plain speaking is necessary, but when there is a solid foundation of mutual trust, it will never give offense.

"Sine cera—without wax. Being in reality what it seems to be—not hypocritical or pretended, nor simulated.' So says the lexicon Please look up the word for yourself, with all its synonyms.—Sunday School Times.

Bible Acrostic—Faithfulness.

BY DORA A. RITCHEY.

G–od is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.

O–nly believe, be not faithless but believing, for he is faithful that promised.

D–epart from me, all ye workers of iniquity, for the Lord hath heard the voice of my weeping.

I–f God be for us who can be against us, have "faith in God."

S–eek and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.

F–or every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth, and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened.

A–nd Jesus said unto the centurion Go thy way; and as thou hast believed so be it done unto thee: and his servant was healed in the self same hour.

I–f we believe not, yet he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himself.

T–herefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

H–erein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.

F–ollow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.

U–nto you first, God having raised up his son Jesus, sent him to bless you in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

L–et us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised.

P. S. I wish to say that I am a reader of the Cynosure, and like it very well. I am down on all kinds of secret societies. I think and believe they are one of the greatest swindles and curses of the earth. I hope that your paper will have far greater circulation than it has, and that it will be blessed in lifting the dark vail of ignorance off of the blinded Freemason. I remain your well-wisher and friend, Huntsville, O. D. A. R.

Temperance.

—Mr. Thomas E. Doutney of Providence, R. I., a reformed liquor-seller and drinker, gave a series of temperance lectures at Wheaton lately to crowed audiences. His labors resulted in a reform club for the improvement of young men who are just begining the downward path. Mr. Doutney is a marked example of the wonderful grace of God, to rescue the human soul from fearful bondage. His lectures were eloquent and effective.

PROHIBITION LEGISLATION.

Who have Enacted Prohibitory Laws and who Repealed Them.

LANCASTER, PA., Aug. 23, 1875.

Rev. T. Jefferson Brissell, Chairman Ex. Com. Publication Party of New York.

MY DEAR SIR:—At Sea Cliff, you requested and I promised to furnish you with the dates of the passage of the Prohibitory laws in the several States, with the political party complexion of the several Legislatures enacting and the Governors approving the same. Frequent calls from home with the accumulation of business cares which absence occasions, have prevented the fulfillment of my engagement until now.

The following table will furnish the dates you desired, and the subsequent remarks will trace the history of these laws, and the course of Legislation upon them. I have, for the sake of compactness, excluded the numerical strength of parties in the Legislature at the date mentioned and also the numerical votes by which the laws were passed, giving only the political status, as indicated by the party majority in the Legislsture passing and the Governors approving, as stated in Greeley's Whig Almanac:

Maine has the honor of being the first Christian commonwealth to prohibit the traffic in intoxicating drinks, having enacted a law in 1846 forbidding sales for such purpose with ordinary fines as penalty. Experience having demonstrated that rumsellers were not deterred by fines whilst their stock of liquors were left to them undisturbed, Gen. Neal Dow drafted and persistently urged before the people and legislature a law now known as the "Maine Law," containing seizure and destruction of liquors illegally held for sale, with fines, and imprisonment for illegal manufacturers and sellers. This law was enacted as stated above in 1851, by a vote of more than two to one, was repealed in 1856, Morrill, Republican, Governor, Legislature Democratic, and stringent license substituted. Two years of experience was sufficient to show the contrasts in effects upon crime, pauperism, and public peace between the "license" and prohibitory policy; and in 1858, Morrill, Republican Governor, Legislature Republican, a prohibitory enactment was again passed, submitted to the people and ratified by a majority vote of twenty-two thousand, nine hundred and fifty-two, and has remained since that date.

Delaware has the honor of being the second State to place a prohibitory liquor law in 1847 upon her statute book, which was submitted to and ratfied by the people the same year, but declared unconstitutional in 1848 by the Supreme Court because of such submission. The law was re-enacted in 1855 as above stated.

RHODE ISLAND.—The law of 1852 declared unconstitutional by Judge Curtis of the United States Court in 1853 was amended in 1853; Allen, Democrat, Governor and Legislature Democratic. The law ratified by a direct vote of the people remained until 1863, when it was repealed under Sprague, Union Republican, Governor, and Legislature, Union Republican, and license substituted. In 1865 Local option to Town Councils and Boards of Aldermen to grant or refuse license was passed; Smith, Republican, Governor, Legislature Republican. In 1874 the license clause was repealed and Prohibition re-enacted, Howard, Republican, Governor, with Legislature Republican. In June, 1875, the Prohibitory clause was again repealed under Lippet, Republican, Governor, and Legislature Republican, although at the election in April, 1875, the highest vote for the three candidates for Governor was given to the Prohibition candidate. The Legislature elected the present Governor by the union of Liquor Republicans and Democrats.

MASSACHUSETTS.—The law of 1852 was declared unconstitutional in 1854. A new law was passed in 1855—Gardner, American, being Governor, with a Legislature American, and remained until 1868, when repealed and license substituted, Bullock, Republican, Governor, Legislature Republican; but was again restored in 1869, excepting cider, however; Claflin, Republican, Governor, Legislature Republican. In 1870 the law was further opened so as to allow "the free sale of lager beer, ale, porter and strong beer in every town of the State in which the citizens did not vote to prohibit it," Claflin, Republican, Governor, with Legislature Republican. In 1871 the law was again changed "so that malt liquor could not be sold in towns without a vote in favor of it," cider still exempt, Republican Governor, Legislature Republican. In 1873 the "beer-clause" was repealed, thus restoring Prohibition of sale of both "malt" and "spirituous" liquors, but in allowing apothecaries to sell, the Prohibitory law of 1855 and 1857 is not restored in its full integrity, Washburn, Republican, Governor, Legislature Republican. In 1875 the Prohibitory clause of the law was again repealed and license substituted, Gaston, Democrat, Governor, Legislature Republican.

VERMONT.—The law of 1852 remains.

MICHIGAN.—In 1850 the people of Michigan made Prohibition of the liquor traffic a constitutional provision. Article 4, Section 43 of her State Constitution says, "The Legislature shall not pass any act authorizing the grant of license for the sale of ardent spirits, or other intoxicating liquor." This was one year before the Main law. The Prohibitory law of 1853 was ratified by the people by nineteen thousand and thirty majority. The act of submission was declared unconstitutional in 1854 by an equally divided court. The law was re-enacted in 1855, Bingham, Republican, Governor, Legislature Republican, and has been changed seven times, three times in the interest of temperance and four times in the interest of the traffic. In 1875 the Prohibitory law was repealed and a tax law substituted, Bagley, Republican, Governor, Legislature Republican.

CONNECTIOUT.—The law of 1854 was repealed in 1872; Jewell, Republican, Governor, and Legislature Republican.

INDIANA.—In 1853 a Prohibitory law was passed. Wright, Whig, Governor, Legislature Whig; submitted to and ratified by the people, but the Supreme Court decided it unconstitutional, because of the submission. In 1855 the law was again enacted as stated above, upon the constitutionality of which the Court was equally divided, and the law again fell.

IOWA.—The law of 1855 with modifications removing the Prohibition of fermented drinks remains, retaining its "no license" feature. The German beer sellers through party aid are endeavoring to secure its repeal.

NEW YORK.—The law of 1855 was in 1856 declared unconstitutional and fell.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.—The law remains.

ILLINOIS.—The law of 1855 failed of approval by the people by one thousand four hundred and six votes.

From the table you will notice that no Prohibitory law has been enacted since 1855, and that not in a single State or territory has the Republican party enacted such law, though loudly claimed by its partisans to be the especial friend of Prohibition. The claim is without support. Investigation of its history on this question will show that by platform declaration in 1872, in favor of taxing rum and tobacco, and against Sunday and Temperance laws, as well as by repeated acts in the States, and by sentiments expressed by leading papers, some of which are collated in the Living Issue of August 19th, the Republican party is fixedly hostile to the Prohibition policy.

Although five of the States named in the foregoing table have had their Prohibitory laws passed by Democratic Legislatures and administrations, it must not be inferred that the Democratic party would now, as then, favor Prohibition, or that that party is more favorable than the Republican. The fact is, both are hostile and hate Prohibitionists more than they do each other, and will on this question, as in Rhode Island, throw old party hate aside and unite against Prohibitionists. The Democratic party is the avowed friend of license, the Republican is equally such, though not so pronounced. The Republican party has had the control of most of the States for fifteen or more years, and must be held responsible for failure to enact or execute, as well as for the repeal of the laws she found upon attaining power, but which have been generally weakened or removed. We cannot rely upon either the Republican or Democrat party to remove, or aid to remove, the curse of the rum traffic, but must organize independently as an educator, and trusting in God and the right, fight on until in the good time coming,

"When the drink of the land, Shall skeddadle before Prohibition."

In this faith and work, truly yours,

JAMES BLACK.

Home and Health Hints.

Save Your Strength.

HOW SOME WOMEN WORK.

Monday. Rise at four o'clock, wash, make yeast bread, get breakfast, clean the kitchen floor, churn, get dinner, iron the calicoes, work over the butter, get supper, and then darn stockings until every one else in the house is in bed.

Tuesday. Rise at four and go to ironing, get breakfast, make pies and cake for the week, finish ironing, and if there are any other big jobs of housework, do them all up as far as possible, and have the remainder of the week for sewing or visiting or doing nothing at all.

Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. Rise at half-past five or six, according to the time when breakfast is required, and as soon as the work is done up, sit down to the sewing and work with might and main; do just as little housework as possible, driving on the sedentary work until nine or ten o'clock, or even later, and, perhaps, sitting up on Saturday until midnight in order to have the job done and "out of the way." She exhausts nerve and muscle in the everlasting hurry to get through, giving herself no rest until outraged nature takes the matter in hand and lays the worker up with a long fit of sickness, and not unfrequently with the long rest, right in the prime of life. A dear friend of mine has just run this course, and left her children when they most needed a mother's care.

HOW THE WISE WOMAN WORKS.

Monday. She rises at the usual hour, which is fixed to suit both personal needs and surrounding circumstances. She looks over her work for the week, and, so far as possible, she arranges a certain amount of heavy work for each day, and a certain amount of sedentary work. If baking or churning or both must be done on Monday, she puts off her washing until Tuesday, which gives her the opportunity of putting her clothes to soak over night. Then she has the ironing for Wednesday, baking again for Thursday, sweeping for Friday, and cleaning and some baking, and perhaps churning on Saturday. Then the next week she can wash on Monday, if she prefers. If possible, she has the same jobs for each day every week; but if not, she finds some way of changing, so that she gets no more exercise than a fair proportion each day. If she gets too much any way, so much the more need of careful management. Her sewing is selected, and the wants of her family so well foreseen that she has that done first which will be most needed, though many a time she lets an old garment be worn rather than break in upon her hours of nightly repose. She has some light work (if any) for the evening, has her hour for retiring, and keeps it, allowing herself the time for rest which she knows from experience to be necessary. She gets some time out of doors every day, even if she has to take her work with her. She takes things calmly, does not waste her nerve power, stops and rests if she feels exhausted, and lets the extra jobs go to the wall rather than make herself sick with trying to do them. If she really has too much to do, she studies devices for "slighting" her work, especially that part of it designed for show. If still there is too much to do, she hires help for the heaviest jobs and for the sewing, and saves money to pay for it out of the next doctor's bill. She puts some of her vitality into vivacity and companionableness for her family and friends, instead of laying it all out on their backs or for their palates. She gives them wise and sound companionship during a long, pleasant life. She makes them wiser and happier than they would have been without her; she bequeaths vitality, calmness and power to her children, who rise up and call her blessed, and her husband also praiseth her, and at last in their ripe old age they go home together.—Science of Health.

News of the Week.

—Chicago was visited by a distructive tornado and rain storm on Saturday soon after 5 P. M. The track of the terrible visitor was from the southwest passing to the south of the main business part of the city and losing itself in the lake near the tunnel crib. A number of buildings were more or less demolished, the steeple of Grace church blown down, and the upper portions of several large hotels injured. Several persons were injured, and one life is reported lost. The storm is traced to Kansas. At Leavenworth, great destruction was made, and at various points in Missouri and Illinois the work was continued; a passenger train on the Illinois Central road near Neoga was blown from the track and a number of passengers injured.

—The President last Thursday sent to the House a message in reply to the resolution requesting him to inform the House whether any executive officers, acts or duties, and, if any, what have within a specified period been performed at a distance from the seat of government established by law, etc. The President questions whether the House have, under the Constitution, any right to make such a request. He, however, proceeds to give a full and specific account of his official acts elsewhere than at the Capital.

—Telegraphic communication with Europe is at present in the hands of the Direct Cable Company, all the others being broken.

—The latest advices from Tucson, Arizona, give information of a recent outbreak of the Chiricahua tribe of Indians on April 10th. Several whites were slaughtered and a great many cattle driven off and houses burned. It was the same tribe, under the noted chief Cochiset, which committed so many murders a few years ago. The citizens are under arms and preparing to resist their attacks.

—A party of Black Hillers, who have just returned, say that there is not feed for cattle in that country, and the stock is dying off rapidly of starvation. The grass is not yet started, and in many places snow still covers the ground to the depth of a foot. In Custer City this party counted the carcasses of four hundred animals that had recently died of disease and starvation. It is reported also that the road from Fort Laramie to Custer City is strewn with wagons belonging to parties who had been attacked by Indians. On April 10th, a party of the latter came up within one hundred yards of Custer City and ran off thirty head of horses.

—A serious riot took place in Salonica, European Turkey, Saturday, between Christians and Mohammedans. The trouble arose from the fact that a Christian girl wished to become a Mohammedan. She was forcibly taken from her Turkish friends by Greeks. During the riot the French and German Consuls were assassinated by Mohammedans.

Testimony for Church Purity.

MR. EDITOR:—I fully endorse the reform movement. I think it perfectly right to make war on secret societies until they are driven from this government, for they are detrimental to good government, and ruinous to the cause of Christ. I have been a reader of the Cynosure since Feb. 1, and I heartily endorse its teachings. I left the M. E. church some five years ago because I could not support ministers who were Masons. I connected myself on leaving the Methodist with the U. B. church, in which I expect to remain and labor as long as it excludes those dark mystic orders. I look upon Masonry as being a child of the devil brought up in the blackness of darkness, and one of the worst enemies of man and a curse to the church of Christ.

I shall do what I can to circulate your noble paper. The reform has my prayers and best wishes. Yours truly,

REV. C. T. HUSSONG.

Levington's Key to Masonry.
This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:
"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diaholical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."
The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:
"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."
This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pagenes,

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hnndreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." A lady sent us fifteen dollars several weeks ago for a club. She said that she had fifteen dollars which belonged to the Lord, and did not know of any way to use it more for his glory than in circulating the Cynosure. Our receipts are altogether smaller than they should be now, and we are trying to find out whose fault it is. If we are to blame we will try to do better. If you think you are, will you?

Is not forwarding a new name for the Cynosure with $2 20 the easiest way to obtain fifty cents' worth of our publications? Phelps Book, the Booken Seal, John Quincy Adams' Letters and Ronayne's Hand Book cost but fifty cents each.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED DURING WEEK ENDING May 6th, 1876, from—M Z Andrews, J L Andrus, Mrs. M F Bullard, S Bingham, S F Clark, P W Clark, A J Cook, W Easton, W Fenton J C Graham, A Hard, H H Hinman, G Hays, D T Hartwell, R Johnson, T E Kennedy, Prof. Lumry, T J McHenry, M Moss, P Meese, C J Millard, Mrs. N Marker, W Nickle, E D Olmsted, B T Park, J Pixley, P Persons, E M Perkins, H Rowley, L Reeve, C L Stoddard, J Seger, P Smith, J Smith, J P Stoddard, M STelfotd, J S Whitney.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Topics of the Time.

A straw showing how the Republican party is taking the political wird In the Essex district, Mass., it was expected that the poet and noble citizen Whittier, would be sent as delegate to the Cincinnati Republican Convention; but instead G. B Loring, the ring politician and Knight Templar, whose greedy and spiteful opposition to the Hon. Charles Francis Adams has been more than once the subject of remark by the press, was elected. Loring is for Blaine, while Whittier with a large number of the most eminent citizens of Massachusetts are pronouncing for Bristow.

Whether Secretary Bristow is connected with any secret society has not appeared in the brief campaign notes of his life and public services. But at least in attempting last week to become a member of a prominent order in New York city he was blackballed, and saved one connection which, however it might help his prospects in the Presidential race, would not have increased his popularity with the people. The Union League Club, two of whose members got up the blackball vote from personal grudge, is not held to be much of a secret society, but it bears the main characteristic of the lodge and is nothing but a political machine for pipe-laying.

The great Exposition opened promptly as arranged on Wednesday last. The day was fine, the grounds and buildings in comparatively good order, the crowd was immense, the enthusiasm at its highest ebb, and the "Spirit of '76" ruled the hour. The gates opened at 9 o'clock and the hundred thousand visitors poured through them. President Grant was attended to the main stand followed by the Emperor of Brazil, members of the Cabinet and of Congress, the Supreme Court, foreign representatives, and retainers of the official host, while the splendid Thomas orchestra played national airs and Wagner's great Centennial March, composed for the Woman's Commission. Then Bishop Simpson led in an impressive prayer and the orchestra and vast chorus of a thousand voices raised the noble psalm of Whittier. The formal presentation of the buildings, and the singing of the cantata, the words by Sidney Lanier and music by Dudley Buck, followed. Gen. Hawley, president of the Centennial Commission, then in a neat speech presented the Exposition to the President of the United States, who responded amid an enthusiastic outburst of the big crowd. As he closed, at a signal the furled flags were hoisted on all the buildings, cannon bellowed salutes, the bells began ringing, the orchestra and thousand singers struck up the "Hallelujah Chorus," chimes began to ring various airs, and amid the roar of the multitude the Exposition was opened.

The adherents of Mr. Beecher are making as good use of their pennies as Oakes Ames did of his Credit Mobilier stock. Plymouth church lately contributed to the funds of the American Home Missionary Society $1,487.09, and forthwith used the donation as a privilege for appointing forty-nine conspicuous members of its own body as life-members of the Society. This action has naturally roused considerable criticism. The New York Daily Witness says of it: "If they are assuming the aggressive and trying to capture the Home Missionary Society, and thus gradually to Beecherize the Puritan churches of the country, it is high time to oppose them. That such a deplorable result is possible the late Advisory Council and Yale College have rendered only too apparent; and yet a greater calamity could hardly befall the country."

It is safe to prophesy the ruin of any business man or public officer who frequents the rum-bar and the gambling hell. Von Hollen, a German politician of Chicago, who has served as city collector for several years, has followed this course, and the sure result has overtaken him: he has fled to Europe, leaving defalcations of over one hundred thousand dollars for his bondsmen to settle. An old and successful merchant used to discharge promptly on Monday morning any clerk he might have seen pleasure-riding on the day before. Ours is a badly arranged political system that does not give the people a power as prompt and effectual.

Whittier's Centennial Hymn.

Sung by the great chorus under Theodore Thomas, to music by Prof. J. K. Paine o' Harvard, at the opening of the Centennial Exposition, May 10th.

Our fathers' God! from out whose hand
The centuries fall like grains of sand,
We meet to-day, united, free,
And loyal to our land and thee,
To thank thee for the era done,
And trust thee for the opening one.

Here, where of old, by thy design,
The fathers spake the word of thine
Whose echo is the glad refrain
Of rended bolt and falling chain,
To grace our festal time, from all
The zones of earth our guests we call.

Be with us while the New World greets
The Old World, thronging all its streets,
Unveiling all the triumphs won
By art or toil beneath the sun;
And unto common good ordain
This rivalship of hand and brain.

Thou who hast here in concord furled
The war-flags of a gathered world,
Beneath our Western skies fulfill
The Orient's mission of good will,
And, freighted with Love's golden fleece,
Send back the Argonauts of Peace.

For Art and Labor met in truce,
For Beauty made the bride of Use,
We thank thee; while, withal, we crave
The austere virtues strong to save,
The honor proof to place or gold,
The manhood never bought nor sold!

Oh! make thou us, through centuries long
In peace secure, in justice strong;
Around our gift of Freedom draw
The safe-guards of thy righteous law,
And, cast in some diviner mold,
Let the new cycle shame the old.

The Remedy.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

[Second Article.]

That Christianity is the Divine remedy for all moral and social evils is doubtless apparent to all Christians. Our main object is to show that it is the only remedy and to induce both the church and the world to give up every other so-called remedy as simple quackery, which lures but to destroy.

How then shall the Gospel be shown to be the remedy for the oppressions of the rich upon the poor? How shall it preserve the equilibrium between capital and labor? And how shall it meet and relieve all those transient cases of want and suffering, so that there shall be no even seeming propriety for the so-called benevolent secret organizations? I answer, 1st; Not by neglecting the church and conceding that it has failed, and must fail to meet the wants of the world in this respect and that other organizations are necessary. This is to admit that the Gospel is a failure and to make men infidels.

2nd, Not by co-operating with the world in any kind of benevolent organization that shall be outside of, or independent of the church. This is being yoked together with unbelievers.

But 3d, By a cheerful and earnest recognition of the duty of regarding and caring for the physical and social, as well as the moral and spiritual welfare of all of our brethren in Christ.

In other words, let the church be the nursing mother of all her children. Let her not abandon them in their poverty and affliction. Let her not turn them over to the care of the lodge or state, but rather make it apparent that "Hereby perceive we the love of God; because he laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren."—1 John iii. 16.

Let the obligations of mutual aid in all circumstances of necessity be incorporated into the covenant of every church, and let it be regarded as the duty of the deacons of the church to do now what they were required to do in the primitive church, enquire for all cases of need, to supply that need if practicable, and if not, to kindly and delicately bring each case before the church for instruction and aid.

Let the regular collection on the first day of the week be appropriated as far as necessary for this object. This was the original purpose of this collection, and we have but to return to the original principles and practice of the primitive church and our whole difficulty is solved.

I may add that in theory this is recognized by the church and that many of the Protestant organizations incorporate this plan as a part of their discipline. Among these are the Protestant Episcopal church, the Society of Friends and the United Brethren in Christ, and these two last quite consistently forbid membership, in the secret societies.

It may be said in objection, that the church is already burdened with the greatness of its work, and finds much difficulty in providing for its financial engagements. This is true, and the cause is two-fold; first, great and reckless extravagence in church expenditure on needless things; and secondly, a great want in real, practical benevolence. If any innovation on the usages of the church should make it necessary to have greater economy, and more willingness to give, such a change would be an incalculable blessing.

Again it is objected that such a system would encourage idleness. I answer that it did not in the primitive church. It does not in the Society of Friends and would not where the obligations of the Gospel are faithfully taught.

Again, it would draw to the church all the poor and dependent classes. I think so, and this is just what we want, for "God has chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, to be heirs of salvation." The crying need of the times is a poor man's church. Such once were the Methodists, and God gave them great power; but alas! they have written Ichabod on their walls. Their glory has departed with their plain meeting houses and simple, unworldly attire, and the seething masses of the poor in our cities are living in the main without the Gospel.

We shall never be able to grapple with the great moral problems of today without a revival of primitive piety and return to primitive practice. Christ, the Good Shepherd, must be our model, and the New Testament our guide. Secretism could no more live in an atmosphere of Christian holiness than drunkenness or adultery. We must purge out the old leaven of selfishness from the church, and she will be the pillar and ground of the truth.

Symbolism of the Masonic Heart.

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

The Ritual informs us that the candidate for the privileges of Masonry, is first prepared in heart to be made a Mason, which statement seems to be based upon the declaration he is called upon to make in the preparation room prior to his admission. The declaration is to the effect that he seeks such privileges unbiased by improper solicitation of friends, and uninfluenced by mercenary motives. That he freely and voluntarily offers himself a candidate for initiation by reason of a favorable opinion conceived of the institution, and a desire for knowledge. That if admitted he will conform to all the ancient usages and established customs of the order. Upon initiation he is charged to keep sacred and inviolable the mysteries of the order, as these are to distinguish him from the rest of the community, and mark his consequence among Masons. He is also instructed to conceal all the secrets of Masons in Masonry, as secrecy is the guard of their confidence, and the security of their trust. He is warned never to let any motive swerve him from his duty, make him violate his vows, or betray his trust, but to remain true and faithful and imitate the example of that celebrated artist, Hiram Abiff, Masonically fabled to have preserved his integrity at the expense of his life, and who in the scenic fiction of his death, is personated by every Masonic candidate raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason.

The heart being the receptacle of all Masonic teaching, becomes the objective point at which all precepts are aimed, and is thereby made the foundation stone for Masonic character. Its importance in its relations to a secret institution, can therefore be very readily conceded. It symbolizes:

1. Silence, Secrecy and Circumspection. In this regard it is to the Masonic institution what the Sphynx was to the mysteries of Isis—a series of riddles to the outer world—understood and interpreted only by the initiated. It is in its Masonic relations under a bond always to hail (hide) ever conceal and never reveal any of the arts (secrets) parts (lectures) or points (duties) of the hidden mysteries of ancient Freemasonry except in the constitutional way and then only to those who are legally authorized to receive. It dictates to its possessor that for the preservation of his honor and integrity Masonically, "he must speak sometimes one way, and sometimes another, but so as never to contradict himself, and so that with respect to his true way of thinking or acting, he may be impenetrable." It admonishes him to be "always cautious in his words and carriage, that the most penetrating stranger may not be able to discover or find out what is not proper to be intimated, and sometimes to divert a discourse and manage it prudently for the honor of the worshipful fraternity." It instructs him "to beware of giving secret hints of knowledge, to bridle his tongue, to place a watch at the door of his lips, to post a sentinel at the avenue of his actions;" and "to exclude every treacherous thought, word, and deed."

> As men from brutes distinguished are,
> A Mason other men excels;
> For what's in knowledge choice and rare
> But in his breast securely dwells:—
> His silent breast and faithful heart
> Preserves the secrets of the art."

Silence, secrecy, and circumspection are therefore the Alpha and the Omega of Masonic power and craft, without which these advantages over mankind in general would dissipate like earthly vapors before the noon-tide blaze of a meridian sun. Hence the Mason must be faithful to his trust.

2. The scrutiny of the All-seeing Eye. This eye in its relation to the membership pertains not merely to the Worshipful Master and his two wardens as a Triune Deity, but to the whole craft as well. God is all eyes, says Pliny, and on this principle is every Mason made the surveillance of every other Mason throughout the immensity of the Masonic universe.—

> "Each eye forming a part of one stupendous whole, > Whose body the brethren are—and the Triune God, the soul."

Through this system of universal espionage is treason checked, impropriety of conduct instantly detected and offending craftsmen brought to condign punishment—and thus are the inmost recesses of every Mason's heart pervaded by this All-Seeing Eye and he rewarded or punished according to his merits.

This eye is one of never ceasing vigilance, and in the choice of material for the erection of Masonry's spiritual temple, looks well to the internal qualifications of every applicant offering himself for Masonic privileges, and this, that neither treason nor other disturbing elements should ever be built into the walls of the heavenly Jerusalem lest they crumble. Masonry in eschewing all semblance of treasonable material in the construction of her spiritual edifice, designs it when completed to be a household of one heart and one mind—pre-eminently true and trusty. While this eye is ever watchful over the craft and their concerns, it is no less vigilant over the outer world and their affairs. Its surveillance is a never-ceasing menace, and its existence a source of eternal hostility to all without the pale of Masonic fellowship.

3. Judgment reserved for sin. Sin is a word which Masonically signifies the violation of Masonic covenants, duties and trusts. It has not in Masonry the meaning that appertains to it in the outer world, and hence to be properly understood in its Masonic use it must be taken in its Masonic sense. And one of the greatest sins in Masonry is secret-breaking. It arouses the vengeance of the whole fraternity at once. The ancient charges contemplating the enormity of this and other Masonic crimes expressly declare that "it is a great evil for a man to foreswear himself upon a book," and if guilty of such offense, require that he should amend "principally for the dread of God," meaning the Triune God of the Blue Lodge degrees, who is solemnly sworn to preserve and perpetuate Masonry intact, and to punish crime, agreeably to ancient custom and usage, in proportion to the degree of its turpitude. These charges also enjoin upon the Mason "to be true to this God, and the Holy Church," meaning by the term "Holy Church," the fraternity at large. They likewise warn him "to use no error or heresy by his understanding, or by wise men's teachings." He must know the law and knowing pursue. He is not permitted to plead ignorance of its provisions in mitigation of his offenses. If he offend he must stand to the award and due punishment of Master and fellows. There is no help or redress for him. He has sworn the full performance of all the duties of Masonry, inviolable secrecy inclusive, under no less penalties for violation than:

In the first degree: "having his throat cut across, his tongue torn out by its roots and his body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours."

In the second degree: "Having his left breast torn open, his heart plucked out and given as a prey to the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air," or as others have it: "His left breast torn open and his heart and vitals taken from thence and placed on the highest pinnacle, there to be devoured by the vultures of the air;" or still others: "His left breast torn open and his heart and vitals taken from thence, thrown over his left shoulder and carried to the valley of Jehosaphat, there to become a prey to the wild beasts of the field and the vultures of the air."

In the third degree: "Having his body severed in twain, his bowels taken from thence and burnt to ashes, and the ashes scattered before the four winds of heaven."

All of which penalties are to be inflicted for any wilful violation of any essential part or parts of the solemn oaths and obligations of an Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, or Master Mason.

The barbarity of these penalties cannot be excelled. To use the expressive language of John Quincy Adams "No butcher would mutilate the carcass of a bullock or a swine, as the Masonic candidate swears consent to the mutilation of his." Horrid as these ideas are, they are probably all borrowed from the physical heavens, Perseus cutting off the head of Medusa, undoubtedly gave paternity to the idea of the first Masonic penalty of "having his throat cut across"—this penalty being embodied in some of the forms and oaths administered in the mysteries of Sabaism or ancient sun worship, whence Masonry has derived her light, forms, oaths, and ceremonies. Judgment reserved for sin, therefore admonishes the Mason "to keep the heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life," and

> "Silence directs him never to disclose
> Whate'er his brethren in his breast repose."

Freemasonry vs. Protestantism.

The following extract from the Banhutte, an official organ of Freemasonry in Germany, is interesting to the opponents of secretism in showing the views of the lodge in Germany on religious questions. I call attention especially to the insulting opinion expressed of Evangelical Protestantism as a theological system:

"Protestantism, unable to extricate itself from that slavish subjection to the letter as opposed to the spirit in which it remains hopelessly imbedded as in a quicksand, and lacking completely all the motive power of a vigorous and progressive intellectual life, has of itself crumbled away into multitudinous sects, all utterly powerless against others and divided among themselves, so that now it can be considered only in the light of a dead letter. * * If therefore we desire to be true Freemasons, and to further the cause, to the advancement of which we have pledged ourselves, we must, without reserve or hesitation, adopt as our own the words of Strauss, and proclaim aloud: 'WE ARE NO LONGER CHRISTIANS, WE ARE SIMPLY FREEMASONS; nothing less and nothing more.'"

What say those men who profess to be Bible Christians, and who still remain in the chains of the lodge. Here the mask is thrown off, and the object of high degree Masonry proclaimed. The organs of secretism flippantly refer to the "progress and enlightenment of the human race. These pretentious declarations amount to nothing, for they were the prayer used by the infidel Jacobins in a French revolution of 1289, by their modern descendents the Freemasons of the Communistic France in 1871, the Carbonari of Italy under the leadership of Garibaldi, one of the great Moguls of speculative Masonry.

It is amazing to me, how free American citizens, who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and His holy Bible, can degrade himself by kneeling half naked, hoodwinked and a rope around the neck, taking illegal oaths in a Masonic lodge, the observance of which would require a violation of the law of God and his country. E. T. M.

—The Holy Spirit should be the great subject-matter of all our prayers, and the chiefest work of faith in this world is this asking the Spirit of God, in the name of Christ, either directly or indirectly or immediately, or under the name of some of his fruits and effects.—John Owen.

[Our Far West Letter.]

Santa Clara Valley and Surroundings.

This fertile and beautiful valley comprises about one half of Santa Clara, as well as a part of some other counties of California. Its greatest length is parallel with that of the coast mountains. It is triangular in shape, and is inclosed on two sides by mountains, whose summits rise above San Francisco bay from two to five thousand feet.

The mountains which partly surround Santa Clara Valley do not rise from their base rocky and barren, but are covered with fertile soil. This rich soil extends nearly to the summits of their highest peaks. The mountains east of the valley are comparatively treeless; but are rich in pastures and grain-fields. Although timber is not a characteristic of these mountains, yet more than a sufficient of the finest live oak than is needed for the cultivators of the soil, grows in their ravines. As this oak grows in the ravines, it is not visible to any great extent from the valley. Those west of the valley are covered with a dense growth of underbrush, many kinds of oak, and the giant red-wood. It is from the redwood tree that the material for fence and house building is obtained.

The mountains west of the valley, although covered, for the greater part, with a heavy growth of timber, have large tracts of open land, which is capable of yielding and has already yielded the finest fruit. These mountains contain numerous springs of living water, and almost every ravine has its brooklet, where the finest of trout may be hooked. These mountains serve as a faithful and successful bulwark against the cold sea winds, that sweep many of the California coast valleys. Mountains do not consist of one single ridge, like the roof of a house, extending in a given direction for miles and miles. They consist of a number of parallel ridges culminating in a grand central axis summit. The ridges parallel to the summit are cut by numerous other ridges, which form various angles with the central ridge, but which have a common general direction. Thus like the wires in a sieve, these ridges form an irregular network of mountains; and yet they have a consistency of structure not at all at variance with the irregularities. So is it with these Redwood Mountains. They extend nearly north-west and south-east. The transverse canyons of this range take their rise in the shape of small ravines or gullies, near the summit, and extend on the one side to the valley, and on the other to the Pacific ocean.

Standing on these sand-stone summits, one has a grand panoramic view of Santa Clara valley, with its highways, water-courses, grain fields, farmhouses, orchards and vine-yards, hamlets and towns. Sometimes the valley fills with fog from the bay; but from these high altitudes, one far above the mist and luxuriating in the glorious sunshine can look down on its shifting clouds, a scene that rivals and resembles an ocean, tempest tossed. Look towards the Pacific. Filled are these ravines and covered are these mountain-sides with giant redwoods. They stand thick and massive and tall. No dwarfed forest pigmies, they measure their stature by the hundred feet! No slender stems support them, they measure the circumference of trunks by the yard! Their branches are few, but they stand out stiff and straight, the lowest of them a hundred feet above the reach of man! Like some of our aged and eminent men, the tops of nearly all their trunks are dead. The reason which scientific men have, (and scientific men settle all the grave questions now-a-days), after a great deal of research and contemplation upon this subject, assigned as the cause of this, is, that they are so tall that when a late spring occurred many thousand of years ago, there was not sufficient time during the following summer for the sap to travel so great a distance as from the roots to the tops, and so the poor things died of starvation! Such is the remarkable and onward march of science! It still solves the mystic problems of the future, unlocks the mysteries of the past, and makes the dead to speak again.

When one peers down from these summits, he seems to look into the shades of night, for the sun's rays never pierce the dark canopy of the green-leaved redwood. Far beyond lies the calm and glittering bay of Monterey, and further still is a white, thread-like line; it is the serf beating against the rocks of Monterey point. Beyond all this lies the blue and tranquil ocean, the grand old ocean, so vast and so vague in its dim outlines.

"Man marks the earth with ruin, his control Stops with thy shore."

The mountains east of the valley rise much higher those on its western boundary. Far away to the north, the dim outlines of Mt. Diablo may be seen, but directly east of San Jose, Mt. Hamilton rears its rocky summit nearly five thousand feet above San Francisco bay. Owing to the clearness of the air its top seems within rifle-shot, yet is distant twenty miles. The pines on nearer mountain ridges are dwarfed to seeming shrubs, by the distance. Mt. Hamilton wears its cap of snow for two months, but during the rest of the year its rocky top lie brown and bare.

Standing on this peak one has a magnificent and lovely view in every direction. Toward the west and north lies the placid waters of San Francisco bay, and its surrounding mountains. Below is the western portion of the valley. The Redwood Mountains, too, with all their defiles, ravines and canyons, with their rocks, their grassy openings and their dense forests; all wrapped in the hazy mantle of distance, rise before the vision. Far beyond all this the Pacific once more meets the eye.

To the eastward and extending both north and south are the great San Joaquin plains, once a wilderness, but now a grain-field. Beyond this the well defined and stately peaks of the wild and snow-crowned Sierras stand out in glistening and silent grandeur.

With fifty-one miles of length and thirty-four of average breath, Santa Clara valley lies nestled among these mountains. Running through the greater extent of this valley, and fertilizing its already rich soil, are several large creeks. The most important of these are the Penitencia, Coyote, Guadalupe, Stevens and Los Gatos.

The Penitencia creek rises in close promimity to the northern limit of Mt. Hamilton, (which may be found on any ordinary map of Cal.,) and finds an outlet to the valley through a wild and romantic mountain gorge, known as Penitencia Canyon. Located near the mouth of this gorge are several white sulphur and a number of other mineral springs, as well as the famous Alum Rocks, so named from containing large quantities of alum. This spot has now become a fashionable resort for tourists and pleasure seekers.

The Coyote, so called from the numbers of these animals that formerly infested its willow groves, is the largest of the creeks of Santa Clara county. It finds its head near the southern limit of Mt. Hamilton, extends through the greater length of the valley, waters the eastern portion of San Jose and finally mingles its water with those of San Francisco bay.

The Los Gatos is, by far, the most important of these creeks. It commences in the Santa Cruz or Redwood mountains, far to the south-west of San Jose, and after rippling its cool way beneath the branches of laurel and evergreen oak and in the shade of the dark-leaved redwood, it purls round great bowlders, continually gains strength by numerous unions with small tributaries, sweeps gently through a crescent mountain valley, which gives every indication of being the womb of an ancient glacier, rushes and plunges and roars among the immense rocks and down the declivities of a wild magnificent mountain gorge two miles in length; and at last it sweeps into the main valley, a stream of waving crystal, moistening orchards and grain-fields, and insuring ample harvests to the dwellers on its banks. It is this stream that furnishes the city of San Jose with its healthful and bountiful supply of water.

Large supplies of water are obtained from artesian wells, as well as from these streams. In fact, nearly all the irrigation is carried on with artesian water. The stratum of water that secures flowing wells which never fail, is from twenty to three hundred feet below the surface. The artesian water of this valley is excellent for every purpose.

The greater part of the soil of this valley is composed of a rich sandy loam, somewhat light in color. Most of this land is composed of washings from the mountain sides. It is not so black as the prairies of Illinois, because not formed of vegetable mould. Its thickness is from two to six feet. There is no barren land in the valley and most of the soil rivals the far famed river valleys of the orient in productiveness.

Within a short time I will endeavor to continue this sketch, and in so doing will treat of the productions, climate, manufactures, railways, secret societies and whatever I think will interest the readers of the Cynosure.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS FOR 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick,
of New York.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally we demand for the Americanpeople the abolition of the Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE INDIANA STATE POLITICAL CONVENTION will meet in Muncie, Delaware Co., on the 23rd day of May at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of putting in nomination candidates to be voted for, for State officers at the October election, and to select electors for President and Vice-president, and for transacting any other business coming properly before the convention.

—Walker and Kirkpatrick had up to May 8th received as many votes in the New York Witness ballot as Senator Morton of Indiana, one of the leading candidates for the Republican nomination.

—Secretary Bristow leads this list thus far by many votes, showing his popularity with the people, while Conkling and Morton, who are put forward by the politicians are far behind —A "Bristow club" has been organized at Boston. The energetic Secretary of the Treasury appears to be quite popular in Massachusetts.

—A National Prohibition Convention is to meet in Cleveland O., this week to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States.

—The Religious Telescope says of the nomination of Gov. Hayes of Ohio:—"The only argument we have yet seen in favor of Hayes for president is from an eastern paper, and is to the effect that he will be a strong compromise man. He has no positive political strength, and it is thought that he might be elected if nominated. We see nothing bad in the governor, but we see little that will make him a first-class president. He is not persecuted enough for our choice."

Reform News and Notices.

The National Christian Association, which has for its especial object the removal of those despotic, idolatrous and deistical associations commonly called lodges, will hold its Ninth Anniversary in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Ill., June 20, 21 and 22, 1876; the opening session being at 8 o'clock on the evening of June 20th.

The business meeting of the Association will be held in the Carpenter Building, 221 West Madison St., at 10-30 o'clock of June 20th. Members will find the office on the second floor at the head of the stairs.

The Board of Directors have selected Saturday, June 3d, as a day of fasting and prayer for the overthrow of secret associations. Those who observe it are especially requested to remember the Convention in prayer. Ministers of the Gospel of that Saviour who is shut out from these secret lodges are requested to preach on the subject of Secretism on Sabbath, June 4th.

A Convention of the Indiana State Christian Association opposed to the lodge will be held in Muncie, Delaware county, Ind., beginning May 23d, at 10 A. M. Let all auxiliary associations and friendly churches be represented. This meeting is called by the State Executive Com.

—The report of the Connecticut meeting will be read with interest. Pres. Conant intends to be in Chicago as delegate. We should be glad to welcome all the others. The letter of Ex-Senator Gillette will not be without its due effect in Connecticut and throughout the country.

—Bro. Hinman's report takes us with him back to Montrose and Charleston, Iowa. At the latter place he spoke Monday evening, 8th inst. to a large audience in the M. E. church. While speaking a mob of ruffian Freemasons burst yelling into the room and from one of the crowd a missle was thrown striking Bro. Hinman in the face, but providentially without serious injury. The auditors turned on the mob and put them down and the meeting proceeded. Such an assault could only be instigated by desperate and bad men and Freemasons. All who know the Illinois State agent will believe this. On Tuesday he went to Springdale.

—Rev. L. N. Stratton of the Wesleyan is expecting to speak at points in Canada, Michigan and Indiana on his way to the National Convention. Friends along the route will do well to correspond with him at Syracuse.

—Mr. Ronayne speaks on the 15th, 16th and 17th at Hartsville, Bartholomew Co., Ind., the seat of Hartsville University, and spends the following week at the State Convention at Muncie, Delaware Co.

The Connecticut State Meeting.—Secretary's Report.

WATERBURY, April 26, 1876.

Members of the Connecticut Christian Association assembled in Hotchkiss Hall, at 8 o'clock A. M., for a prayer meeting, led by Elder J. P. Stoddard, General Agent for the National Christian Association. Convention called to order at 9 A. M. by the President, J. A. Conant. Minutes of the first annual meeting called for and read by the Secretary and report accepted.

Voted, that Wednesday and Thursday evenings be devoted to the public working of the first and third degrees in Freemasonry.

Voted, that the afternoon session of to-day begin at half past two o'clock.

Voted, that the Secretary be a committee on enrollment. J. A. Conant and J. M. Russell of Waterbury appointed finance committee.

Messrs. U. B. Swift and I. J. Gilbert of Derby present and expressed an interest to hear upon the subject of Freemasonry. Edmond Ronayne, Esq., Past Master of Keystone lodge, Chicago, present, was called upon by the chairman to make a few remarks, and responded in very earnest words to the convention in relation to the object of our being assembled together, and the wickedness of the institution against which we are contending. Elder Stoddard exhibited a chart showing the course of Masonic degrees from lowest to highest, with the number of oaths taken and the despotic power of the highest or supreme council over all below it, and their influence exerted over minor societies, also their attempts to get control of the literary institutions of our country, to educate and enroll our young men into secretism. C. T. Collins of Windsor, gave some experience of his conflict with Masons and Masonry during the past year. I. J. Gilbert spoke of opposition and persecution he had met with in contending against Masonry, and alluded to his former experience years ago in holding Anti-masonic meetings. Geo. A. Fenton of Windsor gave his experience and spoke at length of the tests he had applied to assure himself of the truths of the revelations of Masonry. J. S. Perry of Thompson spoke at length of the corrupting influence of the system. Elder Stoddard next related a few incidents. After a few remarks by the chairman the convention adjourned to meet at half past 1 P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Afternoon session opened with a prayer meeting led by the Secretary, after which Elder Stoddard delivered a lecture on the anti-Christian and anti-social character of Freemasonry, which occupied one hour, and was full of vital facts against Masonry.

Convention adjourned to 7½ P. M.

In the evening the hall was crowded to witness an exhibition of the initiation of a candidate in due and ancient form in the first degree of Freemasonry. The audience was held spell-bound, as it were, for two and one-half hours, while the inside of the lodge-work was unveiled with all its ridiculous, blasphemous and heathenish rites and ceremonies. Mr. Ronayne is a host in himself and gave abundant and unquestionable proof that he was thoroughly acquainted with lodge work, and was decidedly a "bright Mason." The evening passed off pleasantly for those of us upon the stage who wore the white apron, although the "Captain" had to give all the orders and also execute them himself. I hereby wish to commend the citizens of Waterbury, there assembled, for their very good behavior during the whole evening under the trying circumstances.

THURSDAY, APRIL 27.

Prayer meeting at 8 A. M. led by Bro. Collins of Windsor. Convention called to order by Pres. Conant at 9 o'clock for the transaction of business and election of officers for the year ensuing. Elder Stoddard and A. L. Dearing of East Glastonbury, were appointed a Committee on Resolutions. Report of treasurer called for, read and accepted. C. D. Rice of Middletown was added to committee on resolutions. Convention proceeded to election of officers. J. A. Conant was unanimously re-elected for President; D. J. Ellsworth, Secretary; C. T. Collins, Treasurer.

Voted, that four delegates be appointed, one for each Congressional District in the State, to attend the National Convention to meet in Chicago, June 20 to 23:—1st Dist., D. J. Ellsworth; 2nd Dist., J. M. Russell, 3rd Dist., J. A. Conant; 4th Dist., Dea. F. Dunbar; Hon. Francis Gillette of Hartford afterwards added.

A committee of three consisting of J. A. Conant, J. M. Russell, and Ariel Mitchelson, were appointed to confer with the janitor of City Hall, in relation to the Association occupying the hall Thursday evening.

Resolutions were read by Elder Stoddard, and a discussion followed by members of the Convention. It was voted that the resolutions be taken up singly and voted upon and accepted. They were taken immediately to office of Waterbury American for publication, but only one was inserted. The Secretary could not procure them Friday morning, but arranged with a brother to get and return them. The following only we have in hand:

Resolved, That we rejoice with gratitude and thanksgiving to God at the success which has been obtained in the effort to secure a home and headquarters for the anti-secrecy reform, and that we will continue to pray and labor for its complete consummation.

Elder Dearing occupied the remainder of the forenoon in relating his experience in becoming an Anti-mason, and his labors with clergymen in reference to the subject.

Convention adjourned.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

Convention called to order at 2 o'clock. Pres. Conant in the chair. Elder Stoddard addressed the audience upon the "Despotic and Treasonable Character of Freemasonry."

Interesting letters from the Hon. Francis Gillette of Hartford, and E. J. Chalfant of York, Pa., were read by the Secretary. The following from Mr. Gillette to Bro. Conant with permission to use it, will be of especial interest to the Anti-masons of Connecticut.

HARTFORD, Ct., Apr. 24, 1876.

Mr. Conant, Pres. Ct. Christian Association:

DEAR SIR:—I very much regret the necessity of declining your invitation to attend the annual meeting of your association at Waterbury this week. I should be most happy to be with you on that interesting occasion would circumstances permit. My sentiments and sympathies are with you in your antagonism to secret societies. They are repulsive to me in every respect, and utterly unsuited to the age and country in which we live. They belong rather to the dark ages, before Christianity had widely promulgated the law of universal brotherhood, or liberty had gained recognition among the nations. They are antagonistic to both Christianity and freedom, to civilization and progress—pestilent exotics to us in this nineteenth century; plants which the Father hath not planted and therefore they must be rooted up.

"Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick, and it giveth light unto all that are in the house." Good and true men choose light and illumination; secretists love darkness and obscurity. They hide their light, if light it be, and leave the outside world to darkness. They claim to conceal something highly valuable to mankind, and suited to make the world wiser, better, happier, and assume to be very benevolent. How then can they persist in withholding the healing balm of secretism from the world's wounds and sorrows!

What would be thought of Joseph if after having filled his granaries in anticipation of the seven years' famine, he had refused the hoarded grain to the starving Egyptians and coolly seen them dying for the want of it? The unanimous verdict would be, that he was no better than his treacherous brothers who sold him to the Ishmaelites, and might as well have been left to perish in the pit. How much better than this supposed conduct of Joseph is that of our modern secretists, who claim to have the corn garnered in their various lodges which would alleviate human woes and fill the world with food and gladness, but cruelly withhold it under a cloud of mystery, and thus leave the sorrows which they might mitigate or cure to rage and intensify! Could any phase of human conduct be more selfish, cold-blooded and despicable?

In the dawn of time the great Creator said "Let there be light." But secretists in contravention of this organic decree, say, Let there be darkness. In secret have I said nothing, said Christ; but secretists, as such, say everything in secret. Christ opened blind eyes and filled them with light. Secretists shut seeing eyes and fill them with darkness. Christ is the light of the world. Secretists are its darkness, and nestle with owls and bats.

Secret societies are fraught with peril to the Republic. They have been justly characterized by one who knew them well as a virtual conspiracy against both church and state. Who can adequately measure their power for evil, bound together by bloody and barbarous oaths, as are the chief organizations, and intent upon ambitious schemes and self-aggrandizement! In the hands of reckless demagogues what fearful political engines! Already this force has shaken the Republic. The late secretary Seward, forty years ago in a public address, said: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government it cannot control." Amid the many perils impending over the future pathway of the republic, secret societies culminating in Freemasonry, and potential through it, are among the most menacing and formidable. Church and state must resist the onward march or be trampled under their feet.

Possibly Masonry and its kindred affiliations may have some secret virtues unknown to outsiders, but so far as we are permitted to know the character of the various secret organizations, they tend to evil continually, and should be destroyed. Let them perish and the darkness which envelopes them deepen into sepulchral gloom. When the Califf Omar was besought not to burn the Alexandrian library, he answered, "If these books agree with the Koran they are useless. If they disagree with the Koran they are pernicious. Either way they should be destroyed. Let them burn." So of Freemasonry and its kindred fraternities. If they agree with the Bible they are useless. If they disagree with the Bible they are pernicious. In either alternative let them perish in their congenial darkness. Over their dissolution humanity will rejoice and the answering heavens will respond Amen! I am, dear sir, faithfully yours, FRANCIS GILLETTE.

The following were chosen Vice-Presidents for the several counties: Hartford, Philip Bacon; New Haven, J. M. Russell; Litchfield, C. R. Williams; Windham, Geo. Buck; New London, T. L Gardner; Middlesex, J. D. Baldwin; Tolland, L. S. Goodall; Fairfield, I. J. Gilbert.

Convention adjouurned to meet in City Hall at 7½ P. M.

In evening City Hall was filled, there being 1600 to 1800 present. The lodge was opened upon the third or Master Mason's degree, and the candidate of the previous evening was "put through" in due and ancient form. I need not attempt to describe the effect and manifest impression which was made upon that intelligent audience, who for three long hours sat in that hall as witnesses to the exposure of the most abominable, heathenish and accursed institution that ever gained foothold upon this habitable globe. Let it suffice for me to say that excepting Masons and their jacks, the citizens of Waterbury there assembled were shocked and appalled at the damning revelation. Ronayne was in his element, standing like a hero to the work, and near the close, advancing to the front of the stage, he avowed it as his determined purpose, to go on with the work from city to city, and from State to State, and see this vile institution uprooted and destroyed from this American nation. So mote it be.

In conclusion I would assure all our friends that our meeting was a grand success. Let the name of the Lord be praised for his help! Our prayer meetings were seasons of interest and refreshing.

To the General Agent, Bro. Stoddard, for his faithful labors, assistance and counsel, the hearty thanks from all the friends in the State are due. Also to Bro. Russell and wife, for their generous hospitality and kind attention to members of the Convention, we record our hearty thanks. Much seed has been sown for our Heavenly Father to water and increase, and much hard work done. The expenses of the meeting have borne heavily upon four or five and something like $30 or $40 more is needed. We hope that the friends of the cause in the State will not forget the privilege they have of helping forward this work by their contributions. D. J. ELLSWORTH, Sec'y.

Windsor, Ct., May, 1876.

Southeastern Iowa.—Montrose Meetings.

MONTROSE, Iowa, May 1, 1876.

BRO. KELLOGG:—Some time in Feb. I wrote to the General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, inviting him to come here and give us two or three lectures against Masonry. Bro. Stoddard was recommended to me while visiting in Michigan in January last, where he had labored so successfully in dispensing Anti-masonic light to the tearing down of the strongholds of sin, as being the man well adapted for our place, because he was wonderfully convincing in argument, and was hardly susceptible of becoming so irritated by any influence that might be brought to bear against him as to lose his self-control. While negotiating with him he was called to attend a State Convention in Connecticut, but wrote me upon starting there, that if we were impatient we could get Bro. Hinman by immediately writing to you. While we were pondering this thing in our hearts H. H. Hinman put in an appearance early on the morning of the 20th day of April. After introducing himself and his work, it was soon decided that he should lecture twice in Montrose Presbyterian church, Friday and Saturday evenings, April 21st and 22d.

All work upon the farm was immediately suspended; we were soon seated at our table, not "to fare sumptuously," but to write out notices of our meeting. These were soon distributed through the town and country, which produced the happy effect of giving us a good audience, in which was a fair representation of secret men.

The exercises were commenced by singing "All hail the power of Jesus' name," afterward reading of the Scriptures and prayer, when the speaker planted him on the side of God and the truth. He first spoke of Masonry being unscriptural and antagonistic to Christian religion, showing conclusively that the Bible does not sanction, but rather reproves all secret societies; that speculative Masonry was neither free, ancient, honorable, benevolent, Christian, nor a republican institution; but begotten by the devil, the father of lies, propagated by lies. After the lecturer had finished he gave opportunity for any one to ask questions or respond to what had been said. Dr. Anderson, a Mason now for thirty years, made a very few remarks foreign to the subject; threw a little dirt by saying the lecturer didn't know anything about Masonry, therefore there was no chance for argument, and no argument to answer.

A certain lawyer said to me at the close of the first lecture: "That was an able discourse and unanswerable by Masons." After the benediction a Mason came to me and said, "If that is the best timber you can bring here, I would advise you to frame him into something but a lecturer." He remarked that he had told more than twenty lies. I took hold of his arm inviting him to go with me and present them singly to Mr. Hinman, and if he could not find a solution we would let them rest on the speaker, otherwise I thought the remark entirely out of place. He would not go forward, but the reverse, until we got out upon the door steps when he whispered in my ear, "I believe he is a perjured villian." This is the testimony of one who is a Mason, to wit, that Masonry had been proclaimed by the speaker. He said much that was true and convincing, for he held his audience in profound silence for better than two hours.

The second evening was taken up with "What do you Know about Masonry?" Evidently Masonic inquiry or question to those who are not Masons. And again, "How a man is made a Mason." Here again the lecturer was indeed master of his subject, and went through the whole proceedings without "any equivocation or mental reservation;" without the slightest mistake, or even bothered by the repetition of a word. I could read it in the countenance of two or three Masons that what was being said was well said, and true, and seemed pleased to find him so well posted in what is called "the lecture."

A friend of mine (a young man of truth and candor) overheard two Masons talking upon a boat about the second lecture.

"Were you out to the lecture last night?"

"No; were you?"

"Yes."

"Did he speak the truth?"

"He did."

So we have the testimony of two Masons, one for each evening that what was said is true; notwithstanding the assertion of one that he told more than twenty lies.

At the close of the exercises second evening, I remarked, "There will now be given an opportunity for any Mason to respond to what had been said. Last evening one remarked to me that the speaker had told more than twenty lies. I hoped if there were any such present they would be manly enough to state it publicly, naming the accusation. If not I desired they should hereafter hold their peace." Dr. Wilson said I seemed anxious that some one should reply. He said that Masons were silent on such occasions, not because they could not say anything but prudence was one of their virtues, and Masonically they could not answer; then sat down. Bro. Hinman merely remarked he should hate to belong to an order he could not defend.

He went to Charleston, a small country town eight miles back from the river to lecture on Monday evening. Got there after sundown and found that the lecture had not been given out; one Odd-fellow very anxious to hear the lecture. I said to him, "Do you want to hear it bad enough to go over to the Baptist church, ring the bell and light up?" He responded he did. So I got on my pony and rode through the street crying, "Free lecture to-night at the Baptist church. Subject secret societies—opposition to them." We succeeded in bringing out about 50 or 60 who listened, I think, profitably to a discourse two hours long. He left Montrose early Tuesday morning for Iowa State Convention at Western, Linn Co.

Bro. Hinman is the right man in the right place. We feel like saying to him as to our old friends, come again.

Yours ever, W. H. HITCHCOCK.

Bro. Hinman at Walker, West Branch and Montrose.

CHARLESTOWN, Lee Co., May 8th, 1876.

DEAR BRO. K.:—After a second lecture at Walker, Iowa, to a full and attentive audience, but in the face of a most bitter and malignant opposition, I left, May 1st, for West Branch, Cedar county, where I met a warm reception from the Society of Friends. On the 2d and 3d inst., I spoke to full congregations in the Friends Meeting House. This place has been for years a center of reformatory influence. It was here that John Brown brought twelve fugitives from slavery. Here they found rest and aid on their journey.

Unfortunately, some of the Society of Friends here have become connected with the grangers and Good Templars, and there are some nominal Friends who belong to the Masons. Most of those who have joined the Good Templars have withdrawn, but there is just enough of Masonic influence in the society, together with a strong outside influence, to create quite a heated discussion in the community. Wherever such a discussion takes place there results both good and evil. The virtuous are confirmed in their course and some persons are converted to the truth; while on the other hand some are driven into hypocrisy, and lying. I know a professed minister of the Gospel, who when certain unprincipled and profane men denied that either Masonry or Odd-fellowship had been revealed, and appealed to him to sustain them, gave his reluctant and hesitating, yet hypocritical and lying assent. Such instances are multiplying all over the land. Surely this reform is like Him who is the living embodiment of all reforms:—"Set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel, and for a sign that shall be spoken against."

After organizing an association for the western part of Cedar county, I came to Vicle station, Lee county, and walked seven or eight miles through a drenching rain and wading swollen creeks to reach this place just too late to meet the people who had assembled for a lecture. From here after a night's rest and an excellent visit with Father Cassidy, who is one of the veterans in the cause of reform, I went to Montrose, and on the evening of the 6th inst., quite a fair congregation met in the Presbyterian church and listened to a lecture on the government of the lodge, and its relation to civil society.

From there I came to this place, where I preached last night in the M. E. church, to a full and attentive audience. I expect, D. V., to lecture in the same place to-night, and have just called on the Baptist minister and asked him to attend. He told me he thought me a disturber of the public peace, and would not any way give me countenance. He says he is a Mason, and is willing to swear that there are at least eighteen lies in the Honeywell tract. I asked him if Dr. Colver was a good and truthful man, and he said yes, but Dr. Colver was mistaken in what he said about Masonry; and when I suggested that Elijah troubled Israel a great deal more than I did, and for a similar reason, he became quite angry, and further discussion became impracticable. How long shall devilish affrontery be taken for truth, and lying hypocrisy for piety? How long O Lord, how long?

A Day in Washington.

The Wonders of the Great Capital—How to "do" Washington in one Day—The Botanical Garden, Smithsonian Institute, Department of Agriculture—The "White House"—The Treasury, State, War, and Navy Department—Corcorans Art Gallery—Dinner in the Capitol—Wonderful Paintings and Statuary in the Rotunda, Old Hall and Stair Ways—A Peep into the Hall of Representatives and Senate Chamber—The Guerrilla Rebel General Albert Pike—Loyalty and Patriotism at a discount in Washington—Another War.

I left Philadelphia for Washington half an hour before midnight Thursday April 27th, in order to spend Friday there and get home Saturday. On my way I asked a pleasant appearing gentleman if he was acquainted in Washington, and knew a respectable hotel there, where prices were reasonable. He evidently took pleasure in giving the desired information, and said: "I will tell you how to 'do' Washington in one day." I replied, "That is just what I wish to know, for I have but a single day to spend there." The information he gave me enabled me to see double the amount that I could otherwise have seen, besides telling me what was to be seen. As recommended, I went to the St. James European Hotel, Pennsylvania Ave., where pleasant room and lodging cost one dollar per day, and meals can be procured in the building or at any restaurant at all prices.

As the public buildings are not open till 9 o'clock, I first visited

THE BOTANICAL GARDEN,

which is open at 8 A. M. This garden is but two blocks east of the St. James Hotel, and next the grounds of the Capitol. It would take an entire botany to describe what is to be seen here, for the grounds and hot houses contain the trees, plants and flowers of every clime. Here are palms in great variety, palmettos, Spanish Bayonet, Useful Screw pine, cactus of every imaginable shape, the most beautiful ferns and the greatest variety I ever saw, air plants, the prayer plant, roses of every shape and shade ever seen. I next visited our great national free museum, known as

THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE.

Almost any geography will give you a history of the origin and design of this great Institution. Although a large portion of its many curiosities have been taken to the collection at the Centennial, there is much of interest left. In the hall as we enter, are several large stone images, once objects of worship in a far-off land. Here are skeletons of monsters from both sea and land, stuffed birds and fish from all parts of the world. From a sketch of this Institution purchased in the building, I find that they have specimens of about 35,000 different species of birds, and a proportionate number of animals, shells, etc. There are bows and arrows, swords, knives, war clubs and fire arms in great variety, and a stuffed Indian chief, a Japanese and a Chinese. Stuffed! Oh, no, I see, they are only "models," and the huge savage is none other than the famous Modoc chief, Captain Jack, who looks so life-like and savage with his gaudy trappings, war paint and horns, that you feel as if you had better not get too near him. Here are many curious foreign costumes, and an elegant Japanese saddle and trappings. Adjoining the lovely grounds of the Smithsonian Institute on the west are those of

THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The grounds contain a great variety of plants, shrubs, and trees, and are elegantly laid out. In the fine building near the center is a large collection of specimens of grain, seeds, vegetables, fruit, (models of the two last) woods, silk, wool, flax, minerals, soils, also stuffed fowls and birds. In the stairway is a huge Red-wood plank from California six feet five inches wide. West of the grounds is an unfinished monument to George Washington.

THE TREASURY BUILDING is about two blocks north. This is a very large, massive, handsome structure on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue. I had not time to see its interior, and so crossed to the fine grounds and elegant mansion now occupied by President Grant. But as I was not an invited guest I passed through the grounds to the vast unfinished structure now being built for the State, War, and Navy Departments. This is the largest and will be one of the finest public buildings in the city. A portion of the south wing is already occupied by the State Department. Just across the way on the north-east corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Seventeenth street is

CORCORAN'S ART GALLERY.

This is free three days in the week, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, 25 cts. admission on the other three days. This is the gift of Wm. W. Corcoran, Esq. The building, which was begun in1869, with the grounds, cost $250,000 and the pictures and statuary given by Mr. Corcoran were valued at $100,000. It is maintained by an endowment fund of $900,000. Nothing short of a catalogue will give any clear idea of the wonders of art here to be found. At the entrance of the stairway are large marble busts of Napoleon I., Marcus Aurelius, Antinous as Bacchus and Ariadne as the wife of Bacchus, the god of wine. Such a grim joke as this representation must make the fiends of the lower world laugh indeed. The artist seems to have exhausted his skill to represent a lovely, intelligent woman as the "joyous wife of the god of wine." Would any of the many thousands of women in our land who are the veritable wives of Bacchus (drunken husbands) consider this a fair representation of their condition? But there are still worse things in the "Hall of Sculpture," which I think utterly inexcusable and abominable. There are fully a score of full-sized marble statues of men, boys and women in a perfectly nude condition, and in some instances it is evident that the one object is to display "nude charms." That respectable people generally do regard these figures as vulgar and demoralizing is at least hinted at on page 16 of the Corcoran gallery catalogue. Speaking of the marble busts of "The Two Fates," the forms of which are draped, it says: "Depending upon no display of nude charms these majestic forms—particularly the recumbent figure—impresses us by the noble elegance of their poise and the graceful lines of their draperies." The fact that these nude figures are merely copies of statues sculptured when licentiousness and drunkenness were universal and bacchanalian revelries respectable, will not excuse this vulgar display. I blushed with shame to see a woman sitting in front of one of these nude female figures with a nearly completed crayon drawing of it, on which she was at work.

But there are some very fine statues, vases, bass-reliefs, bronzes, electrotypes, paintings, engravings and carvings. "The Sleeping Children" (in marble) is a marvel of beauty, and the great paintings representing the Bible account of "The Drouth in Egypt," and another entitled "The Death of Moses" are wonderful indeed, while a smaller one entitled "Charlotte Corday in Prison" is so wonderfully life-like as at first to startle you. A short ride on a Pennsylvania Avenue street car brought me to

at the foot of this Avenue. As it was dinner time I went at once to the Hall of Representatives restaurant in the basement of this building, where I got a good meal at ordinary restaurant prices. The vast proportions of this building, and its great dome are familiar to most if not all. In the stairways, old hall and by the passage ways are many fine paintings, and statues of Washington, Hamilton, Trumbull, and many other statesmen whom we delight to honor. The Congressional Library is no doubt the largest in this country. The Navy Yard I had no time to see, and spent only a few minutes in the House of Representatives, and Senate Chamber. One of the chief objects of interest is which as its name indicates, is circular in shape and is simply the interior of the dome. The ceiling 180 feet above the floor is ornamented with Brumidi's marvelous allegorical representation of Peace and though at such a great height the figures are seen with wonderful distinctness. Around the sides of the Rotunda are six great historical paintings. One represents "The Embarkation of the Pilgrims," from Defthaven, Holland. The open Bible in the foreground shows what was the foundation for our liberties, both civil and religious. Another represents the "Landing of Columbus," in October, 1492, and the third represents "The Discovery of the Mississippi," by De Soto, in May, 1541. The fourth shows as finely a canvass can "The Baptism of Pocahontas" at Jamestown, Va., in 1615; while the fifth gives a life-size and truly wonderful representation of "Signing the Declaration of Independence," July 4th, 1776, with the portraits of the signers. The sixth looks as if it could, if it would, thunder out the glad news of "The Surrender of Burgoyne" at Saratoga, N. Y., October, 1777; while its companion piece tells with equal eloquence of "The Surrender of Lord Cornwallis" at Yorktown, Va., October, 1781. The eighth and last portrays that ever memorable scene when George Washington so elequently testified his love of peaceful pursuits and his patriotism as well, by resigning his commission as Commander in-chief of the victorious American army to Congress Assembled at Annapolis, Md., Dec. 23d, 1783.

Would to God that our public men of to-day had a fraction of Washington's love of country! Alas, that the terrible lessons of our late civil war are so soon forgotten! Already loyalty and patriotism are at a discount here, and while taking these notes a gentleman at my side (a perfect stranger) says "There comes Albert Pike, the rebel general," and I turn to see a man of perhaps sixty, with long gray beard and hair, a huge pipe in his mouth, leisurely cross the Rotunda towards the Hall of Representatives. The bust of the fiend Nero, in Corcoran's Art Gallery does not show half the cunning villiany that is expressed on the face of this guerrilla rebel general, under whose command Indians murdered and scalped Union soldiers at Pea Ridge. He is evidently perfectly at home here now, making use of his great and despotic power as MOST PUISSANT GRAND COMMANDER of the Southern Masonic Jurisdiction of the U. S., to aid his old rebel comrades into power. He is mentioned even by the Chicago Tribune without so much as a word of warning. That these rebel leaders are determined to make the government pay for their former slaves as well as the rebel war debt, no sane man who will take the trouble to talk with them can for a moment doubt. A railroad conductor on a train between Baltimore and Washington, with whom I had a long conversation, not only stated part of this plan, but argued the justice of the Government paying for the slaves. Another terrible civil war is not far distant if our government officers and law-makers are to be simply tricky, heartless, grasping politicians.

Masonic Calamities.

XENIA, Ind.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

During the last fall it was noticed by the "profane and eaves-droppers," that something unusual was the matter with the "old handmaid," in this place; her den appeared to be deserted. At last it was known to "cowans," that her mighty paw and grip had fallen upon her own offspring; closed and locked the entrance to its sanctum and altars, took its life (its charter) and poor, deluded child, it died. The disease was said to be too much gorging of Masonic "refreshments," which caused a disability to help support the dam that suckled it. This was the first great calamity. Some of the inmates who were thus thrust out of their den, did'nt appear to care much, but seemed to be as Bob Morris says a demitted Mason is, "Like an amphibious animal, can live in the water, or out of it; and don't look graceful in either element."

The next calamity is still worse. Some two months since, about 12 o'clock at night the inhabitants of the city were aroused from their slumbers by the alarm of "Fire! Fire! Fire!" The printing office was in flames. The deserted child of the "handmaid" was close by; the flames spread rapidly. No exertions were made to save Hiram's body from the furious element. It was lying unconscious under the rubbish where his brethren had laid it. No exertion to save! Though one bad Mason (a pretty good man) told the writer that "he was there in time to have saved all, carried the jewels down in his pocket, &c," but every thing of the child had been confiscated by its old dam (the Grand Lodge.) The decree appeared to have gone further. The temple with all its locked up sacred things was consumed by the devouring elements. One of the craft said to the writer that the "Grand Lodge could now come and get its furniture if it wanted it." The next day the writer witnessed the search for the sacred jewels. A Masonic minister of the place directed the search, but Oh dear! the fire had tried the sacred emblems. But the most mysterious thing was that the aforesaid hood-winked minister did not direct any search for "dear Hiram!"

But so it is, all is lost. It is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. The heaviest loss was on the owner of the printing establishment. Hope that he may start up again. It is dry time here without a paper, even if it is a "hood-winked" thing.

A Centennial Musket.

York, Pa., May 8, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I have in my possession a single-barrel shot gun, which was used by the American army under Gen. Washington, on Sep. 11, 1777, at the battle of Brandywine. This gun was owned by my great grandfather, Philip Ottley, who lived on the battle field, his family retiring to the cellar during the battle in which 1,300 Americans and 500 British soldiers were killed or wounded. This battle was fought to prevent the British from capturing Philadelphia. The gun is a very superior one; and the barrel is so heavy that it could not be bursted by half a pound of rifle powder. It is in good condition, and has been used frequently as a bird and squirrel gun. And on New Year's morning I fired a salute of thirteen shots with it, in honor of the heroes of 1776, who believed in free government and not in Freemasonry. Believing that the Centennial at Philadelphia is managed by the secret British government, I thought it best to keep my gun at home with plenty of dry powder and some buckshot.

The battle of Guilford Court House was fought on the farm of my great grandfather Jessop. His house was used as a hospital for the wounded of both armies, his family retiring to the cellar during the battle. My grandfather once told me that the horses of Washington's and Lee's cavalry were far superior to Tarleton's British cavalry horses in this hard fought battle.

Yours truly, E. J. Chalfant.

Mr. Editor:—Since writing to you last my controversy with Yates City lodge of Masons has got into a much more satisfactory condition than it has been in before for the last three years. About two months ago I brought suit against the lodge, as a corporation to recover the amount of money paid the lodge in order to become a member. I succeeded in procuring a judgment for $25, and as the W. M., J. W. Hensley and Past Master Longdon have made themselves personally responsible for it there is a good prospect that I shall eventually recover the money. W. H. Robinson.

OUR MAIL.

J. C. Graham, Viola, Ill., writes:

"All praise to God through Christ our King for the triumphs of his truth through the agency of the Christian Association opposed to secret societies. Such boldness for the Master's cause is very nearly akin to Apostolic times. God speed the work and bless the workers."

A. J. Cook, Lime Spring, Ia., writes:

"I have read the Cynosure for the last three months and heartily endorse the reforms it advocates, also the platform of the American Party and shall vote it this fall if the State nominates electors, and I can get a ticket. Masonry is dominant in this county. I stand alone in this neighborhood and find it good to stand alone for God and the right."

J. S. Perham, Brookfield, Ill., writes:

"Dear Bro. Cook, and all that work for the glory of God in the downfall of Masonry, I want to bid you God-speed in your good work. We are three in this place who are trying to work a little, but it is hard to get subscribers for the Cynosure. We mean to keep trying."

L. A. Wickey, Franklintown, Pa., writes:

"I am trying to get our friends aroused to get either Raynor or Ronayne here to give us a few lectures. On my circuit, York Springs, there is not a member of the United Brethren church belonging to a secret society."

S. C. H. Smith, Belpre, O., writes:

"Things look rather discouraging here at present. Since Rev. Mr. Kiggins was here there have been organized an Odd-fellows lodge, a Masonic lodge, a Sons of Culture lodge, and lastly a new lodge called the Patriotic Sons of America. Two of the leaders of the last mentioned lodge are leaders in the Masonic lodge also. They all meet in the Odd-fellows Hall. We are building a ten thousand dollar school-house, containing a public hall, which will be completed in September, and I hope we can make some arrangment to have Mr. Ronayne come and give us some lectures. I would like so well to have some of the Masonic proceedings checked and severely rebuked."

Satan goes about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. Christians are not always fully awake to this fact. We must all watch and pray.

Edson M. Perkins, Parishville, N. Y., sends two new subscriptions and writes:

"You may send me as premium two copies of Ronayne's Hand Book."

We are glad to send any of our publications as premiums, and hope there will be a great many called for.

Nathaniel C. Moore, Worcester, Mass., writes:

"I rejoice to know that you have so many good people in Chicago, and hope the number will increase who stand up for the Christian Sabbath and for the Bible in the schools. . . . Our Worcester paper abounds with flourishing notices of the doings of secret societies, their famous processions, with famous banners inscribed with famous mottoes, but are very cautious about saying anything to prevent men from going into the dark to inquire for Masonic light; but we are still on praying ground for which I thank God and take courage, and say, "Let there be light." And as your paper has done more than any other to warn us against secret societies and the danger we are in from the encroachment of popery in our beloved country, I now say and shall continue to say while God is willing, God bless the Cynosure, and the men who started it and still manage it, and may they never suffer for lack of material aid to carry out their purposes, which I believe is to oppose sin and promote holiness. . . Perhaps I had better stop writing until I know what you charge for reading the letters of unlearned men. Please to let us know through the Cynosure when it suits your convenience."

We never weary of reading sensible letters, and do not stop to inquire concerning the education of those who write them.

Lesson for May 28.—Lying unto God.

SCRIPTURE.—Acts v. 1-11. Commit 1-6; Primary Verse, 4.

1 But a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession,
2 And kept back part of the price, his wife also being privy to it, and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apostles' feet.
3 But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land?
4 While it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God.
5 And Ananias hearing these words fell down, and gave up the ghost: and great fear came on all them that heard these things.
6 And the young men arose, wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him.
7 And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.
8 And Peter answered unto her, Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much? And she said, Yea, for so much.
9 Then Peter said unto her, How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? behold the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out.
10 Then fell she down straightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghost: and the young men came in, and found her dead, and carrying her forth, buried her by her husband.
11 And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things.

—Ananias and Sapphira were snared in a golden net—a net in which so many are being snared to-day. Judges have decided for rewards, God's servants have taught for hire merely, his prophets have divined for money, for thirty pieces of silver Christ was betrayed, and for the sake of money men are now lying to the Holy Ghost. "The love of money is the root of all evil." Prov. xxx. 8, 9; Mic. iii. 11; Matt. xxvi. 14, 15; 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10; Tit. i. 11; 1 John ii. 16.

—The service of God is not compulsory upon any one. We choose whom we serve. Inasmuch as it is a service voluntarily chosen we ought to bring no divided heart into it. Fowls and their Feed.

1. In nine cases in ten White Leghorns will give the best satisfaction as egg-layers. These are small, purely white, with yellow bills and legs, large single combs deeply notched, regular, and handsome. The hens lay a good sized, pure white egg, rarely set before they are two years old, and frequently not even then. They fly "like larks," so to speak, are hard to keep within bounds, and are as poor eating as any among the chicken tribes, nevertheless tolerably good. If it be necessary to confine them, the yard must have a fence nine or ten feet high, or one wing must be cut. Chicks just getting their plumage may be "pinioned," that is have one wing cut off at the last joint. Thus they become manageable.

2. The best fowls for eggs and for the table are probably the Houdans, a French breed of comparatively recent introduction. They are much larger than the Leghorns, are non-setters, lay large white eggs, and a goodly number of them; are of a quiet disposition, fatten readily, and are excellent eating. It is not difficult to confine them, but they are less hardy than the rugged little Italians, shorter lived, and require more care. They are deformed by a fifth toe, which is regarded by fanciers as an essential point; have blotched, black and white plumage, and black and white leg scales, moderate top-knots, and a forked or double-branched comb.

3. The best feed for chickens is a variety—corn, buckwheat, and barley for grain, and pork-scrap cake for meat. It will rarely pay to buy wheat screenings. That from Winter wheat containing many broken kernels is best. Sound grain is generally cheapest. It is well to throw chickens all they will eat at night, Summer and Winter, and when they cannot forage for themselves they should be fed early in the morning until they leave grain upon the ground. The scrap cake may lie before them all the time in cold weather. Those pieces which they cannot eat may be cracked up and fed to them, or soaked in water and chopped fine. Corn is usually the cheapest grain for chickens. Oats the dearest. Give red pepper only as stimulating medicine when chickens have colds, or when one looks drooping. It is constipating, and if used too much is not well. Pure water, a good dry dusting box containing both lime and ashes in small quantities, and broken bones and oyster shells, are preventives of vermine and sickness.—N. Y. Tribune.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1876.

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE ON THE SABBATH

LOCKPORT, Ill., May 6, 1876.

I write to call your attention to an article on the 4th page of yesterday's Tribune headed "Centennial Folly." Such an outrageous assault on the formal observance on the Christian Sabbath from such a source as the Chicago Tribune ought not to be allowed to pass unnoticed by any portion of the public press that cares a straw for our national honor or the moral law. If such absurd reasoning and argument against the Sabbath is to be propagated without rebuke, we may look for the enactment of the French Code in the time of Robespierre: "Annihilate the Sabbath and the marriage covenant and establish every tenth day for a day of public festivity, and offer a bounty on the head of every male child born." For and in behalf of our nation's honor and our common humanity, truly and fraternally yours, ISAAC PRESTON.

REMARKS.

The Tribune editorial sanctum it seems has become a sort of Noah's Ark wherein besides men and animals are all manner of "creeping things:" and it would seem to be one of these editorial vermin who writes the article complained of in the above letter of Mr. Preston. The article is commonplace in every quality but its impudence. In that it is sublime. As if these days of salary-grab, defalcation and embezzlement, which endanger our business standing with the nations, were both the standard and source of our national reputation and prosperity, this contemptable writer blackens the memory of the "Puritans" who, under God, made the nation; brands them as "bigots," and, with marked originality, suggests that they hung witches. All this because the Centennial Commissioners at Philadelphia have voted three to one to close the great Exhibition on the Sabbath. The argument of the Tribune writer, like that which influenced Judas, is—silver. Hear him:—

"There would have been more visitors on Sunday than any other day, and three-fourths of them from the working classes. Sunday trains would have run from New York and Baltimore, bringing multitudes from these cities and the intermediate towns and villages; so it is quite safe to calculate that the action of the managers will prevent two or three million people from availing themselves of an opportunity for entertainment and instruction such as they have never had before, and never will have again."

Here is a Chicago editor lamenting that the Philadelphia street hucksters and booth merchants will lose two or three million of Sunday customers; who, in their turn, will lose "entertainment and instruction." He also dwells feelingly on the "Blue Laws;" (as if there were any such laws) and with low wit and lofty malice asks:

"If the managers of the Big Show are going to enforce puritanical ideas, why are they not consistent? Why do they not carry out the Blue Laws to the limits, compel every man, woman, and child to go to church, imprison every person who is not in bed at 9 P. M., pillory every young man found speaking to a young woman, and hang a few old women as an illustration of the freedom and equality of this "great and gelorious keadntry."

Has the Tribune admitted to its corps editorial some vulgar foreigner who has escaped the laws of his own country to revile the customs of this? And is the status of the working classes in the non-Sabbath-keeping nations so much above that of our American "working classes," that we need the "entertainment and instruction" of the "big show" on Sunday to bring us up to their level?

Seriously, apart from its divine authority, which the Sabbath has if anything has, he who proposes to break down the American Sabbath with "big shows," proposes to put the laborer at the mercy of the capitalist, and is, in fact, the enemy of both. We hope the Tribune will give us better and sounder doctrine.

THE CONGREGATIONIST TRIENNIAL.

The Congregational churches of eleven or twelve States are by the constitution of the Chicago Theological Seminary, made constituents of a Triennial convention which is held in Chicago. This meeting has just taken place, and eight young men gave their graduating speeches in the First church (Dr. Goodwin's) on Wednesday evening, 10th inst. They were David R. Anderson, Eugene F. Wright, John W. Ferner, Russell L. Cheney, W. Irving Phillips, Henry M. Skeels, Henry Wilson and Hiram J. Ferris. The sentiments of the speeches were sound, and well rendered, and so equal in point of ability and effectiveness, that eight speakers will seldom be found so nearly on a level. Several, perhaps all of them have fields of labor on which they enter at once. This Seminary has something over one hundred thousand dollars invested funds, a magnificant location on a beautiful park in the heart of Chicago, and, what is best of all, imparts to its pupils sound ideas and principles concerning the redemption of men by Christ, and its cognate literature and morals.

But it is plain to ordinary observers that this Congregational denomination of Christians, is no exception to the general religious decline in this country; and that lodge-idolatry is its leprosy and curse. The general associations of the interior and western States have voted repeatedly in condemnation of secret societies. Nine years ago Prof. S. C. Bartlett wrote, and the Ill. State Association unanimously voted, that "organizations, such as Freemasonry" are "hostile to good government and the Christian religion." Three years since this same great Triennial convention voted against aiding with educational funds theological students who are Freemasons. Of course the thousands of lodge-men, with their millions of capital, distrust and hate the Congregational churches, because they are openly committed against their existence and worships. And, while thus the Congregational churches, as such, have organized and weekly drilled secret enemies in every village, hamlet, city, and neighborhood of this great country, there are few Congregational churches in the whole country, but which have Freemasons in them, who are virtually lodge-spies in the camps of Israel. Backed by their wealth, their numbers and desperation, they virtually control every church which tolerates them. They intimidate or control the pulpit. They silence the Advance, Independent, Christian Union and Congregationalist; so that members of the denomination must drop these denominational organs and take other papers, if they wish to get even the items of news concerning the great national movement against the secret orders. By suppressing current information concerning national, state and local meetings of Christians against these orders, these religious papers become the practical allies of the lodge!—clouds to keep out the light of God from their readers. And the Congregational meetings, as such, ordinarily say nothing and do nothing to carry out their own principles, and save the thousands of their young men who yearly enter into business life exposed to the harlot wiles and allurement of these dens of anti-Christ. The Triennial convention just now held in Chicago instituted no inquiry whether Freemasons are still educated for their pulpits, against which they resolved three years ago; and I noticed at least one Freemason and Odd-fellow among the ministers, members of the convention, who is an avowed champion and lecturer for the lodge, and who hailed and entertained the notorious guerrilla, Albert Pike, when he was making the Masonic tour of Wisconsin. Thus the Congregationalists are situated in relation to Masonry precisely as the Presbyterians were related to slavery, when they had a recorded testimony against it, and uniform practice in its favor? So far as we can learn, not one word was said concerning the lodges, in the late convention, except by one of the graduates, W. I. Phillips, who barely mentioned the fact that Dr. Emmons was opposed to Freemasonry. He is a pleasant speaker, and if the faculty had given him for a theme Dr. Bartlett's resolution of 1867 against Freemasonry as opposed to Christianity, he would have brought down the house, and if the programme had been published before-hand, the house would have been crowded to its utmost capacity. But to give young ministers themes which take them wide of the real living questions of morals and religion in the world around them, is to put them into the neuter gender, objective case, and governed by public sentiment. Such were not Christ or his apostles, nor such their public speaking. And unless the rank and file of the Congregationalists arise, and insist on an entire change of base, in their periodicals and seminaries, their doom as a denomination is sealed. They must return to the principles which brought out their fathers from Scrooby Manor and Delft Haven, viz: hatred of idolatrous and unscriptural titles, ceremonies, and rites. They must assail the world's evils or the world's evils will swallow them. They must cease to serve God in word and Satan in deed. For unless they go back and rescind their testimony against the secret lodges and so make their peace with them, or openly, consistently and manfully opprose them, their preaching will run shallow, and their conventions become sounding brass and tinkling cymbals.

—The Iowa Annual Free Methodist Conference recommends the Cynosure among other papers, as an exponent of the reform principles of the Free Methodist churches.

—The able editorial on the grange in the American Wesleyan of April 5th has been republished in attractive tract form by the Wesleyan Methodist Publishing House, Syracuse, where it can be obtained at the rate of one cent per copy.

—Bishop Edwards of the United Brethren in Christ, who has been so heartily connected with the anti-lodge reform, is lying very low with fever at his home in Baltimore. He will be unable to attend the anniversaries of his church to be held during the present month. His friends, through the Telescope, request the prayers of the church, and there are many others who will bear a petition for the recovery of this godly and beloved father in Israel.

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Corresponding Secretary of the N. C. A., will address the Literary Societies of Westfield College at the approaching Commencement in June.

—The last Reformer and Free Press announced its transfer from the Arnold Bros. to Rev. J. Levington and A. H. Springstein of Michigan, who have for some time acted in an editorial capacity. We have since learned that the change may not be made, but the paper will possible remain with the brethren whose efforts have brought the paper up from a small form on a hand press to its present useful position.

—The Freeman of Albany, Mo., is still a standing menace to the lodges of northern Missouri, and vindicates the judgment and pluck of friend Needels. It will bear comparison with any local paper in the West in any respect. We hope the Iowa friends will be as successful in establishing their Freeman as proposed in the late State meeting.

—Inasmuch as the Methodist Episcopal General Conference has now been sitting more than two weeks in Baltimore, and may adjourn before the end of the month, it is of great importance that the work of petitioning the body against the lodge be dispatched. Hasten forward your petitions immediately to any member of the Conference whom you can trust. A number of petitions have already been received and referred to the Committee on the State of the Church, and it will soon be announced that no more petitions will be received.

—Elder Freeman started for Philadelphia on Monday of last week in time to unfurl tha "Cynosure" banner before the grand opening day. He will keep our many readers informed of the interesting features of the great Exposition as they occur.

—The action of the Syracuse Wesleyan Conference declining to act on the recommendation of the General Conference for a change in the rule on secret societies, has been followed by the Lockport and Allegheny conferences, the latter voting to request all the annual conferences to unite in requesting and authorizing the next General Conference to extend the application of the present rule against lodge fellowship to all secret societies When this issue was first presented we questioned whether the action of the General Conference would not stand, although not enacted by a quorum. We took this view supposing from the statements that the question of a quorum was not raised at the time. The Wesleyan says, however, that it was, and the chairman decided that a quorum was present, while the records show there was not. This is to be sure an unfortunate discrepancy, but inasmuch as the question was raised and the records give the figures, the annual conferences have no alternative in deciding whether they have ground for action. Although the effort to secure this desirable action on the part of the Wesleyan churches has failed in its immediate end, the discussion at Sycamore has strengthened the denomination and given it greater power for God and truth among sister churches and in the world.

The General Agent's Loss.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., May 8th, 1876.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—I suppose all the readers of the Cynosure learned with deep sorrow that Bro. Stoddard, who has been devoting all his time and strength to the interests of the National Christian Association, has lost his house and I suppose all or a part of his furniture by fire.

Now I wish to make a suggestion to the readers of the Cynosure, that we make up this loss to Bro. Stoddard, and I believe it will not be a very hard task, if we each and all take hold together, as I believe we may in the following manner, viz: Let every subscriber send to yourself or to Ezra A. Cook & Co., for Bro. Stoddard, whatever he feels that he can, even if it is no more than ten cents, or a quarter of a dollar—but let us send something. If they can send one dollar all the better, if five dollars better yet, if ten dollars, just thank the Lord for the privilege; for we all are his stewards and whatsoever we have belongs to him, "the silver and the gold and the cattle upon a thousand hills." What say you, readers of the Cynosure, will you all respond at once and realize how much more blessed it is to give than cereive.

Well, here is five dollars from your humble servant. J. A. CONANT.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Reformed Episcopalians having converted a Masonic hall, at Millers, in Eastern Virginia, into a church, had a dedication service. A blessed tranformation.

—On the 2d inst., the First Church, Peoria, laid the corner-stone of its new house of worship. After an address by the pastor, Rev. A. A. Stevens, and a prayer by Rev. Dr. Jonathan Edwards, Dea. Moses Pettengill deposited the box of treasures. Several hundred persons were present.

—In the Reformed Episcopal churches there were no "floral decorations" and no artistic music on Easter Sabbath. The tendency there is towards devout simplicity. A most happy tendency.

—The Eighteenth General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church of North America will meet in the Second United Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, Pa., on Wednesday, May 24th, 1876, at 7:30 o'clock, P. M. The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. W. W. Barr, D. D., the retiring Moderator.

—The London Christian protests against what it calls "systematic endeavor" in the United States "to count the converts."

—A Mexican Catholic bishop has issued a letter against the Protestant missionaries, which deals with them in a very rigorous fashion and threatens any who listen to them with all the terrors.

—At the late annual meeting of the American Bible Society, appropriations were made for the expenditure of money on the Society's work in Germany, Syria, Ceylon, and South America, amounting to about $20,000; beside grants of books for circulation at home and abroad, of the value of about $8,500, including thirteen volumes for the blind. The receipts for April were $35,942; number of copies issued, 76,385.

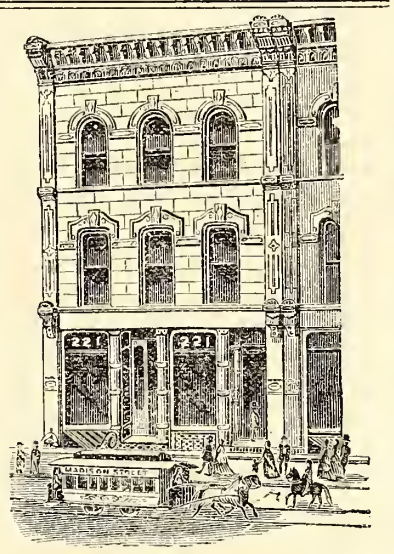
—Rev. J. E. Carroll, Secretary of National Anti-masonic Convention at Oberlin, was elected presiding officer at Millbrook, Pa.

—Rev. James Hankins the seceding Mason of Mason City, Iowa and late State lecturer has united with the Wesleyan Methodist church.

—A late number of the Herald and Presbyter contains reports from revivals in which the number of conversions amounts to 4,460. And yet there is room.

News of the Week.

—Chicago was greatly aroused last week by the efforts of Colvin, the old mayor, to hold his office against the vote of the people and the board of aldermen. He was finally defeated and the new mayor Hoyne is fairly installed in his duties.



—An extensive strike among laborers in the lumber yards threatened very serious consequences last week. On Tuesday a mob destroyed a lumber office, and several parties were injured by stones, pistol-shots and the clubbing of the police force.

—The trial of Munn, ex-supervisor of Internal Revenue for complicity in the whiskey frauds was begun here last Friday. It is believed that many facts in the ring management will be brought out during the trial. It is reported that Hesing the German "ring boss" is making a great effort with Secretary Bristow to escape the punishment plainly before him.

LONDON, May 13—5 a. m.—The correspondent of the Times telegraphs from Constantinople that a general panic prevails here. The low classes of Mohammedans are purchasing daggers and revolvers with money supplied by persons who are plotting the overthrow of the Sultan, and the government, and the massacre and plunder of Christians. The Mohammedans threaten and insult the Greeks and Americans, bidding them prepare for imminent death. Travelers are leaving en masse. European residents are sending away their families. The presence of the European squadrons and organization of volunter European militia can alone allay the alarm.

—Great freshets were expertenced in New England last week, all the tributaries of Lake Champlain were overflowed and the valley of the Connecticut river is one broad stream from Northumberland to Dalton. Travel is entirely suspended on the Boston, Concord and Montreal Railroad, between South Lancaster and Groveton Junction, on the Grand Trunk Railway.

FORT LARAMIE, W. T., May 12.—Reports from the frontier still tell of Indian outrages. Several trains have been attacked recently, but few lives have been lost. The savages have, to all appearances, abandoned the country between this place and Cheyenne, and turned toward the Black Hills.

The Home Circle.

An Old Hymn.

In "Pentential Cries," begun by Rev. John Mason, completed by Rev. Thomas Shepherd, and published in 1692, occurs the following hymn.

I

Lord! Thou hast planted me a vine
In fertile soil and air;
Now tend and water me as thine,
Make me thy daily care;
My Christ! I'm wholly thine,—direct
My wandering in the dark;
Oh! may my constant aim be straight,
Thine honor be my mark!

II.

I have observed thy sacred laws
To be exceeding wide;
Let me not from the least of them
Turn wilfully aside:
Lord! let thy word and Spirit guide
Thy servant in thy way;
May I walk closely with my God,
And run no more astray.

III.

Shall Simon bear thy cross alone,
And other saints be free?
Each saint of thine shall find his own,
And there is one for me:
Whene'er it falls unto my lot,
Let it not drive me from
My God; let me be ne'er forgot
Till thou hast loved me home.

IV.

O happy Christians! be not loth
To have a coarser fare;
Saints that have had no table-cloth,
Had Christ at dinner there.
To do or suffer I am pleased,
So long as Christ stands by;
Support me with thy constant aid,
Lest all thy graces die.

Sensible Counsels.

The following we find in an exchange, entitled "Mr. Wesley's counsels to wholly sanctified believers;" and we copy them hoping that some who may not yet be "wholly sanctified" may also find them profitable.

1. Watch and pray continually against pride. If you think you are so taught of God as to not longer to need man's teaching, pride lieth at the door.

2. To imagine none can teach you but those who are themselves saved from sin, is a very great and dangerous mistake. Give no place to it for a moment. It would lead you into a thousand other mistakes, and that irrecoverably. Obey and regard them that are over you in the Lord, and do not think you know better than they.

3. Let there be in you that lowly mind which was in Christ Jesus. And be ye likewise clothed with humility. Let it not only fill, but cover you all over. Let modesty and self-diffidence appear in all your words and actions. Let all you speak and do show that you are little, and base, and mean, and vile in your own eyes.

4. Never use the words "wisdom," "reason," or "knowledge," by way of reproach. On the contrary, pray that you yourself may abound in them more and more.

5. The heaven of heavens is love. There is nothing higher in religion; there is in effect nothing else. If you look for anything but more love, you are looking wide of the mark; you are getting out of the royal way. And when you are asking others, "Have you received this or that blessing" if you mean anything but more love, you mean wrong; you are leading them out of the way, and putting them on a false scent.

6. Beware of censoriousness——thinking or calling them that any way oppose you, whether in judgment or practice, blind, dead, fallen, or "enemies to the work."

7. Beware of crying nothing but "believe, believe," and condemning those as ignorant or legal who speak in a more Scriptural way. At certain seasons, indeed, it may be right to treat of nothing but repentance, or merely of faith, or altogether of holiness; but in general our calling is to declare the whole counsel of God, and to prophesy according to the analogy of faith.

8. Beware of schism, or making a rent in the church of Christ. Beware of everything tending thereto. Beware of a dividing spirit. Shun whatever has the least aspect that way. Therefore say not, "I am of Paul, or Apollos," the very thing which occasioned the schism at Corinth. Say not "this is my preacher; give me him, and take all the rest." All this tends to breed or foment division, to disunite those whom God hath joined. Do not despise, nor run down any preacher. Do not exalt any one above the rest, lest you hurt both him and the cause of God.

9. Beware of impatience of contradiction. Do not condemn or think hardly of those who cannot see just as you see, or who judge it their duty to contradict you, whether in a great thing or a small.

10. Beware of touchiness, or testiness, not bearing to be spoken to, starting at the least word, and flying from those who do not implicitly receive your sayings.

11. Give no offense which can possibly be avoided.

12. Be particularly careful in speaking of yourself. You may not indeed deny the work of God, but speak of it, when you are called thereto, in the most inoffensive manner possible. Avoid all magnificent, pompous words. Indeed, you need give it no general name—neither "perfection," "sanctification," "the second blessing," nor the having attained. Rather, speak of the particulars which God hath wrought for you. You may say, "At such a time I felt a change which I am not able to express, and since that time I have not felt pride, or self-will, or anger, or unbelief, nor anything but a fullness of love to God and all mankind."

Gather Out the Stones.

Christian people sometimes suffer certain stumbling stones which they might remove to remain in the Gospel pathway. As a consequence, some, perhaps many, are hindered from walking in the way of life.

There is the stone of Indifference. We rejoice to believe that there is a growing desire and expectation of a religious awakening in our land. But it is also true that very many professed Christian people have very languid desires in this direction, if they have any. They may pray in words, 'Lord, revive thy work.' They may sing, "Come, Holy Spirit, Heavenly Dove." But they have nothing that can be termed longing for the coming of Christ's kingdom.

Now this indifference is a hindrance in the way of the manifestation of the Divine power. God can of course work in spite of the coldness of his people; but it is not the rule of his providence to do this. If Christians would see the power of the Almighty displayed in the conversion of men, they must gather out all the stones of indifference to the prosperity of the Redeemer's kingdom.

There is the stone of Indolence. Spiritual apathy and spiritual laziness, indeed, go hand in hand. The indifferent Christian is the indolent Christian, and the indolent Christian is the indifferent Christian. One of the greatest obstacles in the way of a general revival of religion is the fact that comparatively few Christians put forth anything like the activity that ought to characterize them. If all would work as a few do, we should soon see the millennium.

Gather out the stones of indolence, and you will soon see indifference disappearing, and the Gospel highway will speedily be made smooth.

There is the stone of Imperfection in Christian living. To a far greater degree than ought to be the case, there is a wide gap between Christian profession and Christian practice.

Now every man must give account of himself to God, and those who stumble into hell over the faults of Christians will have only themselves to blame. But it is the duty of Christians nevertheless to remove every such obstacle in the way of any soul. It is the duty of every Christian to make his practice tally with his profession.

Gather out these stones of imperfection, that you at least may not be found with your brother's blood on your skirts.

There is the stone of Disagreement among brethren. A personal difficulty between only two members of a church has been known before now to keep the Holy Spirit at a distance. One of the most pitiable things in the world, a sight to make angels weep, is the quarrelsome spirit that professedly Christian people sometimes allow to rankle among themselves.

We may not limit the divine grace. But we may be very sure that into a quarrelsome church the Spirit of God is not likely to come. Gather out these stones, men and brethren, if you would see God by the Holy Ghost come into the midst of you with saving power.

Neighbor's Thistles.

A person was walking with a farmer through a beautiful field, when he happened to see a tall thistle on the other side of the fence. In a second, over the fence he jumped, and cut it off close to the ground.

"Is that your field?" asked his companion. "Oh, no!" said the farmer, "bad weeds do not care much for fences, and if I should leave this thistle to blossom in my neighbor's field I should have a plenty of my own."

Evil weeds in your neighbor's field will scatter seeds of evil in your own, therefore, every weed pulled up in your neighbor's field is a dangerous enemy driven off from your own. No one liveth or dieth to himself. All are linked together.

Sages of old contended that no sin was ever committed whose consequences rested on the head of the sinner alone; that no man could do ill and his fellows not suffer. They illustrated it thus: "A vessel sailing from Joppa carried a passenger, who, beneath his berth, cut a hole in the ship's side. When the men of the watch expostulated with him, 'What doest thou, O, miserable man?' the offender calmly replied, 'What matters it to you? The hole I have made is under my own berth.'"

This ancient parable is worthy of the utmost consideration. No man perishes alone in his iniquity; no man can guess the full consequences of his transgression.

What Makes Men?

"It is not the things that we call best that make men; it is not the pleasantest things; it is not the calm experience of life; it is life's rugged experience; its tempests, its trials. The discipline of life is here good and there evil; here trouble and there joy; here radiance and there smoothness, one working with the other and the alternations of one and the other, which necessitate adaptations, constitute a part of that education which makes a man, in distinction from an animal, which has no education. The successful man invariably bears on his brow the marks of the struggle which he has undergone."

The best sailors come from the roughest seas, and the bravest soldiers from the hardest fights. They who seek to avoid care and labor, who choose for themselves an easy path, are simply defrauding themselves of the noblest qualities of manhood, and making themselves like mushrooms grown in the shelter, instead of oaks which have wrestled with a thousand storms, and which still lift their giant arms and sun-crowned heads triumphant toward the skies.

It is not wise for us to seek trial of hardship, lest we miscalculate our strength and suffer defeat; but it is right for us to accept without a murmer what the Lord appoints, and calmly, bravely, and manfully meet the varied trials of our earthly life knowing that God's grace is sufficient for our every need, and assured that those things which try us most severely are wisely ordered for our benefit, and are working for our strength, our profit, and our salvation in the kingdom of our God.—The Christian.

Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.

—This I am sure of, when the soul turns inward to seek the Lord, that moment he turns to it, and smiles upon it; and if it abides with him, it will always grow. But as of a healthy child, one does not see it grow, and yet it doth. So the soul, surrounded by temptation, may not discover its growth, yet the sun does not more freely give its light and warmth to the earth, than the spiritual sun meet the seeking soul.—M. Taylor.

Children's Corner.

Please Jesus make my Tongue Better.

In talking to a little child about Jesus hearing prayer when we go to him, she looked me fully in the face with her large blue eyes sparkling, and said, "Yes I know, my mother told me that. Once I had a bad tongue and my mother told me to go and tell Jesus and he would make it better, and I went and said, 'Please Jesus, make my tongue better;' and it got better right away."

Children as well as grown persons have bad tongues; they will tell lies and say other bad things, but if they will go and tell Jesus in the language and simplicity of this little child, he will make their tongues better.

The mother can hear the cry of the child in the next room and although unseen, will answer its call. So Jesus although unseen in his heavenly mansion above, hears the cry of his children while in their earthly chamber, and will as surely hear them and make them better. W. T.

My Captain's Orders.

"How is it I don't seem to hear you speak bad words?" asked an "old salt" of a boy on board a man-of-war.

"Oh, 'cause I don't forget my Captain's orders," answers the boy brightly.

"Captain's orders!" cried the old sailor; "I didn't know he gave any."

"He did," said Jem, "and I keep 'em safe here," putting his hand upon his breast. "Here they are," said Jem, slowly and distinctly: "'I say unto you, swear not at all: neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: nor by the earth; for it is His footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.'"—Matt. v., 34-37.

"From the good old log-book, I see," said the sailor. "Ah, yes, you've got your orders."

You May be Saved.

For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved.—John iii. 17.

This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.—1 Timothy i. 15.

Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts iv. 12.

Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.—Acts. xvi. 31.

The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin—1 John i. 7.

He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him.—Hebrews vii. 25.

Scriptural Acrostic.

O—we no man anything, but to love one another; for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law.

D—raw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you; "love is of God."

I—f a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen.

S—eeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently.

The Inventor of the Wheel-Barrow.

It takes a great man to do a little thing sometimes.

Who do you think invented that very simple thing called the wheelbarrow? Why, no less a man than Leonardo da Vinci.

And who was he?

He was a musician, poet, painter, architect, sculptor, physiologist, engineer, natural historian, botanist, and inventor, all in one. He wasn't a "Jack at all trades and good at none," either. He was a real master of many arts, and a practical worker besides.

When did he live?

Somewhere about the time that Columbus discovered America.

And where was he born?

In that beautiful city of Florence, in Italy.

Perhaps some of you may feel a little better acquainted with him when I tell you that it was Leonard da Vinci who painted one of the grandest pictures in the world, "The Last Supper," a picture that has been copied many times, and engraved in several styles, so that almost every one has an idea of the arrangement and position at table of the figures of our Lord and his disciples; though I am told that, without seeing the painting itself, no one can form a notion of how grand and beautiful it is.

And only to think of the thousands of poor, hard-working Americans who really own, in their wheelbarrow, an original "work" of Leonardo da Vinci!

A Novel Treatment of Wounds.

Having noticed an account of the somewhat novel treatment recently applied in the case of a wound, we addressed a note of inquiry to the gentleman named, Mr. A. K. Smoot, a commission merchant of Baltimore, and received a reply a portion of which, with permission, we copy. Mr. Smoot says, under date of September 22d: "On the 7th of the present month I accidentally jumped from an elevation of three or four feet on to a large nail or spike, driving it about two and a half inches through my foot. This happened in the morning, and toward evening the foot commenced swelling and the pain increasing, so much so that it was with difficulty my physicians, Drs. Atkinson and Warner, could relieve me by the use of the strongest narcotics. I slept but little during the night. The next day the same treatment was continued, with the application of a hot poultice to the wound. On that day I received a card signed 'Sympathizer' stating that the smoke from burning wool or woolen rags would immediately relieve the pain and stop the inflammation. The directions were to smoke the wound twenty minutes at a time, repeating the operation two or three times. I accordingly took a piece of woolen blanket, and after making a fire in an iron pot, I smothered it with pieces of the cloth and held my foot in the smoke. This soon relieved the pain, the swelling went down, and up to the present time there has been scarcely any inflammation; a little bloody water has escaped from the sore, but this is all. My physicians approved of the treatment, and I well know that it relieved me of pain and has proved of great advantage in the healing of the wound. I am now able to walk and the wound is doing well. I applied the smoke once every day, and also by the advice of physicians continued the hop poultice. The treatment with the smoke is said to be applicable to all wounds arising from bruises, cuts, nails and the like, and I hope it may prove beneficial to others."—Herald of Health.

Do not put your plants out into the ground thinking to repot them in the fall. Either prepare your plants for the house next winter, or set the old ones out in the pots, sinking them to the rims in the earth, and closing the holes in the bottoms of the pots to prevent the roots of the plants from running through into the soil below. Such plants can be removed without danger of loss of a single leaf, and they will make a splendid show on the benches.

Never repaper a room without first removing the old paper. The moisture of the fresh paste causes a fermentation of the old paste, and hurtful gases are generated, and if the old paper contained arsenical colors the arsenic is liberated in a deadly form. Tear off the old paper and make the walls clean before applying the the new.

A good way to start slips of plants is to get an old glass fruit jar, sift nice mellow earth in it till it is two or three inches deep, or till it touches the end of the slip, then pour water over it till it is full. Set the jar where it will not be moved often. After the roots start sift more earth over, fill again with water, if needed, and so on till it is full and filled with roots, then carefully break the glass off and transplant to a pot, and you will have no trouble in starting it.

Miscellany.

—The last report of the bureau of statistics contains the figures of immigration for the last fiscal year. The arrivals in 1875 were 227,377; in 1874 313,339—decrease, 84,962. England sent us 40,098; Ireland, 37,155; Scotland, 7,308; Germany, 47,760; Austria, 6 882; Sweden, 5,573; Norway, 6,093; France, 8,315; Italy, 3,570; Russia, 7,982; China, 16,433; Canada, 18,654; born at sea, 55.

—The statistics of the city of London are alarming. London has 117,000 habitual criminals on her police register; 30,000 drunkards annually brought before her magistrates; 1,000,000 and more habitual neglecters of public worship; 60 miles of open shops every Lord's day; 73 miles of drinking houses, if placed side by side in a row; and has need of 900 new churches and chapels, and two hundred additional city missionaries.

Spain and Portugal followed France sin decrees of dissolution. Two year after the Emperor Joseph of Austria issued a series of convent laws, affecting about thirty-six thousand monks and nuns, and greatly restricting their fields of influence. In 1834 Don Pedro of Portugal renewed the contest with the priests, and abolished nearly four hundred monasteries, driving out over six thousand monks. The State took possession of their property and holds it to this day. Even Spain in 1837 closed the monasteries and seized their estates, because they took sides with Don Carlos. When the leaders of the Ultramontanes in the Prussian Parliament complain of the severity of these measures in a Protestant land, it is well to remind them of the history of the monks in all Catholic lands—to say nothing of Italy itself, which lately turned out nearly sixty thousand monks and nuns from their cloisters and confiscated a large portion of their property. A great hue-and-cry is raised in Protestant countries about a matter which seems to be a common occurrence in Catholic lands.

—According to M. Beudemoulin, if a quantity of dry sand is placed in a box of thin sheet-iron, or even in a canvass bag, and subjected to a slight compression, it forms a mass capable of resisting a pressure of fully sixty tons, without breaking the envelope. The sand however remains perfectly deviable, so that if a small hole be made in the box or bag it will flow slowly; and with so little force that a small piece of paper placed over the opening will check the flow even with sixty tons weight upon it. Beudemoulin thinks this discovery may be utilized for building purposes, since the filled boxes need merely be held in place by a framework, while being very thick, they would form a protection for a dwelling against variations of temperature. Such walls moreover, would be fire-proof. It is also suggested that for lowering heavy buildings, which by a change of street level have been left too high above the roadway, the sand-bags could be placed beneath, and their contents allowed gradually to escape, thus letting the load slowly settle down.

LETTER OF HON, RICHARD RUSH.

YORK, April 26, 1831.

HON. RICHARD RUSH,

Dear Sir: The undersigned, acting as the Anti-masonic Committee of Correspondence for York County, beg leave to address you. They, in general with the party to which they all belong, all view the present as a period of great importance in the history of this country. A large body of the freemen of these United States, deem the institution of Freemasonry dangerous to our political and moral welfare, and have united themselves in a determination to put it down. In this attempt they have been vigorously and systematically opposed by another portion, who are attached to it, and it has thus become a matter of vast importance for those who entertain the opinions which we profess, to know who are for, and who against us. Therefore, as it has, on the one hand, been stated in a public newspaper that you are a member of the institution, which has again by others been denied, we, together with many other of our fellow citizens will feel thankful for such information upon the subject as you may think proper to communicate; and likewise your views with respect to the question between Masonry and its opponents. Addressing you as we do, in the character of a public body, it is of course our desire that the reply should be public also.

With sentiments of high respect and esteem,
We remain, sir, your obedient serv'ts.

Anti-masonic Committee of Correspondence from York Co.

MR. RUSH'S ANSWER.

YORK, Pennsylvania, May 4th, 1831.

GENTLEMEN:—I have received the communication of the 26th April, which, as a Committee of Correspondence of Anti-masons of this county, you have done me the honor to address me, on the general subject of Masonry and Anti-masonry, and making some enquiries of me in relation to it. I do not know that the views which I entertain upon either topic can be of more importance than those of any other private individual, who may have taken the trouble to inform himself on the passing events of the day, and to reflect upon them. But as you are pleased to invite an expression of those views I will not withhold them. When a citizen may have adopted, on sufficient deliberation, opinions upon any public question, they seem of right to belong to whomsoever may think them worth asking for. My opinions having been made up neither hastily nor very recently on those which your letter embraces, I willingly proceed without occupying time by any further introduction, to present them to you, with the grounds on which they are founded. I see objections to secret societies, because, pursuing objects not known to the public through means not known to the public, they act under diminished responsibilities to the public If the objects be good, why not state them? if bad, they ought to be known. Our legislative halls are all open, and our courts; so are all the acts of our people that may come to affect the interests of the body political or social. Not a bridge company, not a turnpike company, no bank, scarcely an association of any kind, for whatever purpose existing, whether for the advancement of charity, or learning, religion, or any of the common business of life, and whether incorporated by the laws or not but renders its statements to the public either voluntarily or by command of the laws. If the latter do not positively enjoin publicity, a competent share of information regarding the objects of any such associations, is rarely or ever withheld, on proper inquiry being made. Societies, then, profoundly secret, by the first element of their constitution, whatever their ostensible ends, cannot be too closely watched, in a country whose primary principles of social and political action are all in the face of day. The mystery should appear to have good cause, and be free from all suspicion and abuse. If such societies guard their secrets by strong penalties; if they have numbers and antiquity on their side; if their visible outposts are but links of a chain stretching from nation to nation; if the sense of affiliated attachment and union among them is perceived to be exceedingly energetic and zealous; if their whole scheme of discipline, improved throughout ages has become in a high degree imposing, even terrifying, the operations will naturally have the more scope, and should be watched with the more care. Freemasonry is such a society. Great and good men have belonged to it, I know, and do belong to it at this moment; yet, recent disclosures in the United States, have I think shown the dangers of which the society may become the parent, through the agency of bad men. Of all governments existing, ours is the one which would be the most justified in watching, with constant and scrupulous care, the conduct of societies profoundly secret. Most, or all other governments admit the principles of secrecy, and themselves practice it, at least to some extent. Ours, never. All its operations are sooner or later laid before the grand, original, constituent body—the people—the only fountain, with us, of all influence and sovereignty and power. Those are obvious principles of our system. Freemasonry puts forth an exception to them. It is hence the right and duty of the people to exercise strict censorship over a body which moves in an element so contrary to their own. They are the higher power and entitled to the undisputed control. It is as much a general truth in morals as in government, that it is vice, not virtue which needs a veil.

In saying that the recent disclosures have shown the dangers of Masonry in the United States, let us see if I am not right. I desire to be guided by facts, and to look at them vigorously. Your inquiries are broad, and should be met broadly. But facts shall be my basis, and I wish to deal with them practically, as I have really beheld them. You apply to me as citizens, taking an actual part in the affairs around you. I am to answer you in that capacity, and as a member of the same community.

The public all know that certain trials have been held from time to time in the State of New York, for the discovery of the authors of the abduction and murder of William Morgan. Against this man's liberty and life, an extensive and formidable conspiracy had been laid, which ended in the destruction of both. He was a native of Virginia, and had removed into New York. It was there, it seems, that he committed a certain offence, not against the laws of his country, but the code of Masonry; namely, that of revealing its secrets: and this is the offence for which he was made to suffer death. The conspirators neither laid against him, nor pretended to any other. The case is therefore purely Masonic in its origin and termination. There is nothing extraneous to embarrass the judgment or lead away the thoughts.

When I remark, that the public all know of the trials, I mean that they have heard of them, generally; for I do not believe that one person in fifty knows anything more about them. I have followed up the account of them, as far as I have had the means; and especially those that have taken place at Lockport within the last few months. I have done so in no prejudiced spirit, but with an earnest desire to understand the whole case rightly. They appear to me to unfold one of the most extraordinary incidents that has ever transpired. All the circumstances considered, I know not where we shall seek for its counterpart. It is seen from these trials, that the laws of the land cannot be executed upon the authors of an audacious and bloody conspiracy although its entire theatre was in one of the most pop ulous parts of the Union, although attempts have been made to enforce them in all practicable ways, for a period now exceeding four years, although the government of the State of New York has aided, by its immediate countenance and direction, the public prosecutions, besides having issued commissions of special investigation; and, what is more astonishing than all, although the conspirators, with their aiders and abbettors are, in all probability, known to more than one hundred persons belonging to the Masonic body, if not to a larger number. That they are certainly known to a great many Masons, if to fewer than one hundred, is plain from lights that must bring conviction home to every dispassionate and sound mind.

Such is the case as it meets us on the threshold. It is startling. Under a government of laws, and in a season of tranquility, it must be pronounced an anomaly. It seems a scandal upon the trial by jury, upon the public examination of witnesses, upon our forms of presentment and indictment, upon the power of commitment for not answering legal questions, upon all the modes heretofore the boast of our judicature, for getting at the truth; all of which have been so earnestly, solemnly, yet fruitlessly resorted to. Amidst the din of arms we are told, indeed, that the laws become silent; but that they should so totally lose their authority at a period of profound peace and general good order, as they have done on this occasion, must arise from some extraordinary and portentious cause. The victory of the crime is the opprobrium of the law and should call forth a spirit of determined inquiry into the cause.

It has been said that the human bosom is not strong enough to hold the secret of a foul murder. So heavily does it press, that the stoutest heart gives way, seeking relief in the gush of its sin. Hitherto, also in proportion as the knowledge of the fact of murder has been shared by large numbers of people, has been the ease, the promptitude, we may add, the certainty of detection. But in Morgan's case we behold the frightful reverse. It stands, in this respect, alone in the records of criminal jurisprndence. The law books of ancient and modern times, might safely be invoked for a precedent. The difficulty of keeping the secret of a murder, operated as some safeguard over innocent life. It served in some degree to deter the murderer himself, by making him shrink from the fear of his own thoughts afterwards, and to obstruct his fell plans, from the like fear keeping away accomplices. As by stripes the flesh is made to quiver, so the whips and stings of remorse lacerate the heart. They are internal executioners, from whose torture the guilty cannot escape. But here we behold this safeguard of life put to scorn—one seated in the very conscience of man, and which nothing but the most baleful potions, administered, as if by infernals, could ever extirpate. Every sober-minded citizen will be anxious to arrive at the solution of this phenomenon. If a train of evidence altogether irresistible in its direct or circumstantial application, force upon his mind the belief that its entire and complicated horror is clearly traceable to the confederated and unholy contrivances of bad men who are Masons, all his right feeling as a citizen must be shocked. He must stand confounded at seeing human life and liberty so sported with by a power the more tremendous in its victory over the laws, as it rides in darkness. Good men who are Masons, will turn from such conduct with abhorrence. Candid men of the society, on hearing of the relation of it, may be disposed to ask themselves whether all the benefits of Masonry, alleged or real, can be a counterpoise for the perils which may thus spring from it, through deluded or depraved zealots, who gain admittance to its sanctuary, and who effectually silence compunction under iniquity, by flying to the misunderstood or perverted ties and obligations of the craft.

If a power shrouded from the day has been found of efficacy sufficient to interpose a fatal obstruction to the great course of public justice where guilt has been so aggravated, are we to suppose that the mischief ends here? That it is a single and insulated instance? It is impossible. He is weak and credulous who believes it. In the vast and active character and business of Masonry, in its close and diversified connections with society at large, whose movements, from behind its own screen, it can watch and follow up at pleasure, it must happen that the streams of justice will often be tainted, on occasions less conspicuous, by the same power. A danger then exists, under the highest moral and even judicial demonstration, which ought to rivet deep attention, and awake general alarm. Not only has the government of the State of New York lent its efforts in the aid of the ordinary process of law, for detecting the culprits in this audacious conspiracy. The government of Upper Canada has stepped forward in co-operation; for it is a characteristic of the conspiracy, that there were strong suspicions of its embracing depraved members of the fraternity in that foreign jurisdiction—so extensive were believed, and on rational grounds, to have been the hideous workings of its malignant sympathies. But all has been in vain. Executive messages, executive acts and proclamations, with the offer of executive rewards, like indictments and jury trials under special courts and judges, (for these, too, were added) have all fallen to the ground. THE LAW is still paralyzed by a hidden agent, that continues to prove stronger than the combined force of its machinery and its ministers; the Lodge of this agent, has become its sepulchre. There it lies a spectacle for freemen to look at.

In the whole compass of affairs to which government is subservient, there is nothing of such transcendent importance as the faithful and effective administration of justice between man and man, and by the body-politic against public delinquents. It is of daily, unceasing emergence. It blends itself with all the wants, duties, and necessities, with all the hopes and all the dangers that belong to the political and social condition of the world. It comes perpetually home to the immediate business and bosom of mankind, the remark so often repeated by Bacon, but which on this subject has its application in exact truth. Hume describes it as the sole end and aim of all government; and, certainly, if such an administration of justice be wanting, it is not going too far to assert, that the functions of government have stopped in a point that is vital. If we have laws without the power to give them effect, we are in the condition of a people having none; which brings society to a pause. The levy of ship money was among the causes that produced the decapitation of Charles I. and a change in the English dynasty. The tax of three pence a pound on tea, helped to bring on our own Revolution. How small such acts in themselves; yet in union with a quick and well understood spirit of public liberty, how vast their consequences throughout nations, and the posterity of nations! I fear not to say, that neither of them was calculated to press so destructively upon the great fabric of society, as the fact before us, of a secret combination in the heart of the republic, being able to keep the laws at bay in the case of the murderers of Morgan; so long to trample upon, so long to triumph over them. The apathy prevailing under the baffled efforts to probe and fully to punish so great an enormity, is to my mind inexplicable, among a people watchful of their rights, and who would ever be ready, it might have been supposed, to imbody the whole power of society, wherever any one of its members, however humble, was seen to be so ruthlessly struck down. Interposition should have been the more immediate and decided, as the blow was so bold and terrible; as it was given amidst concomitants so unusual, and indicative of so supreme, so insolent a contempt for the laws. If ever an event arose in the annals of any people that should have made the whole body of the public identical with the authority of the magistrate, by a burst of indignation and a concert of effort, IT WAS THIS. No other feeling ever yet kept permanently alive the spirit of public liberty, or upheld the spirit and grandeur of the laws. They both die as certainly under torpor as if crushed by an open despotism. It is one of the ways in which states begin to lose their liberties. It is a deadly opiate diffusing itself through the political system against the instillations of which the patriot heart should be roused by every consideration that can animate it to its highest duties, when the magistrates are seen with the ensigns of authority powerless in their hands, an appeal is made to the inextinguishable allegiance and generous devotion which should bind every citizen to the common weal. The love of public freedom must be shown in the inviolable maintenance of individual rights. We are degenerate republicans, we are no republicans, otherwise. Morgan's case is no common one. It is of great and inspiring magnitude. Looked at by itself, it may be called detached, or little, by those who know little how to think, or are determined not to think. But, properly weighed by its principles as well as its facts, it is momentous and appalling. It is no case for county courts. It is for the nation. That is its proper tribunal. Those who lift up their minds to an enlarged and just conception of it, instead of keeping down to a superficial and imperfect one, will see it under a connection indissoluble with a train of principles, with which are interwoven the interests, the safety and the durable glory of the nation. Let the law, that sheet-anchor of society, come to miss its grpple upon public felons banded in league together by a principle that exalts their crimes into achievements of merit, and everything is exposed to wreck and dissolution. The daring and profligate nature of the conspiracy against the liberty and life of this citizen; the inflexible and malignant vigor of purpose with which step by step, it was pursued to consummation; the cool, the systematic, the inveterate depravity of all the actors in it, have no parallel in the previous history of our country, scarcely in that of any country. I challenge the Spanish Inquisition to exceed it. I boldly invite a search into the archives of that engine of a ferocious despotism, which for four centuries in Europe crushed its unhappy victims with a vengeance so diabolical, uddr color of vindicating the holy church, to produce a case that goes reyond it. Morgans's immolation was in spirit, almost in form, an Auto dv Fe. Holy Masonry found its vindicators too. The similitude is clese and shocking. It should burn the cheek of every American who contemplates it. The iron clamps that were probably prepared for the feet and hands of Morgan, aptly compare with the chains in which the victim of the inqusition was habited, when trembling on the verge of ternity; while the pictures of devouring dogs and serpents that were hung round his neck, completely prefigure the horrid gang of murdering conspirators who plunged their hands the blood of Morgan.

This case, thus far is entirely out of the track of all events in a free and well governed community. It befits the grim depotism of dark and superstitious ages and countries. But I now to present an aspect of it still more extraordinary, still more alarming. How to present it, how to realize it, I am at a loss.

It seems a delusion. It doubles all my amazement. I would throw it off as a phantom if I could; but I cannot, and sink in my feelings as an American citizen. under the mortified and abashed consciousnes of its truth. Perhaps I ought to pause ere I advance further. That which I am about to touch, is on all sides encompassed with hazards. A saving energy it has indeed, for its friends, and knows how and when to exert it; but it can make its blasts howl about the ears of all, who, with unsanctified steps, approach its precints; blasts as from "Boreas, and Eurus, and Caurus, and Argestes, loud," If I followed the counsels of prudence, I should bend the knee in reverence and retreat before it. But I will proceed. At your call I have taken what I believe to be the cause of public order, and of truth, in hand, and that cause must be my shield. A Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20 000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND?

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." N. C. Moore, Worcester, Mass., writes: "Three cheers for the Christian Cynosure and its supporters on this Centennial year, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six."

We return thanks in behalf of the paper and its supporters for the "cheers."

When we received the publishers circular about the fac simile of the Declaration of Independence and the photograph engraving of Trumbull's steel plate "Signing the Declaration," we laid it aside. After a while we thought many, ourselves included, would like to have that picture on their walls at home, and hence we put in the advertisement on the first page of the paper last week.

The Anti-masonic children have sent in several valuable letters for the childrens' department, and one boy fourteen years old has sent one dollar for the distribution of tracts at the Centennial in Philadelphia. We are much interested in and benefited by their scriptural acrostics.

Topics of the Time.

John H. Hopkins, Representative from the Pittsburgh District of Pennsylvania in Congress, probably reached the height of his ambition when he was elected Grand Master of the Knights Templar of the country. He has lately turned away from farcical investigations on the floor of the House, to prepare for the grand representative display of shame and fustian during the Centennial season at Philadelphia—the convention and parade of his Masonic militia. This continues four days, beginning on the 30th. The celebrated Marine band from Washington, with a commandery from the same city escorts this Mr. Hopkins like some oriental nabob. Some hundred and twenty-five commanderies are expected to take part in the grand parade, and show to all the world that barbaric display, despotic systems and infidel organizations are not unknown to our new world civilization.

A Washington correspondent writes that eleven members of the present Congress are Knights Templar, sixteen are Royal Arch Masons and over thirty are Master Masons. From this comparatively small lodge ring the order has picked out two or three candidates for the Republican nomination for President. Conkling of New York is a Knight Templar, and has drank wine from a human skull, invoking a double damnation; Morton of Indiana is also a Freemason. These two are urged forward almost altogether by political rings, or in other words, by the lodge. Blaine's position is not positively declared, though, while Speaker during the Alabama negotiations, he attended a Knight Templar banquet given to Lord Ripon, the seceded English Grand Master.

Centennial correspondents of numerous anti-temperance dailies keep up a spiteful fusillade on the Sabbath regulations of the Exhibition. A convention of advocates of Sabbath opening is paraded through the press, and intimations of a change of the rule continually appear. This convention was presided over by Dr. Furness, a Unitarian preacher, and Dr. Bellows, another of the same class, was chief speaker. The Romanist Archbishop Wood was a vice-president, and G. W. Biddle, attorney of the Pennsylvania Central railway, presented the resolutions—a very significant item in the case. The German infidel associations had already put themselves on record against the Commissioners' rule, so we have now the railway corporations, Unitarians, Romanists, infidels and beer-drinking reporters to make up the public sentiment for Sabbath desecration. The soulless, moneyed corporations are at the bottom of this anti-Sabbath movement, for it is for their business,—and the "poor working man," he must always be brought forward by these men of greed to be ground between the upper and nether mill stones of controversy. If he needs anything, it is surely an unmolested Sabbath. The railways and restaurants, too, would be the only gainers by the recall of the rule, for to one Sabbath visitor, two persons of conscience would not go near the great show were it made a machine for Sabbath abuse. It is interesting to read the vote by States that ordered the closing: Yeas—Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Idaho, Minnesota, Montana, South Carolina and Washington Territory. Nays—Arizona, Connecticut, Dakota, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

The conference of leading independent voters held in New York last week was a gathering of considerable size. It was largely composed of gentlemen of great influence in all circles but the political, and this makes the gathering the more important. No hasty action was taken, but the whole political field passed under a calm review by such minds as Wm. Cullen Bryant, Theo. D. Woolsey, Mark Hopkins, Carl Schurz and others, and while preference was given to Bristow as a reform candidate it was decided to await the action of the Cincinnati and St. Louis conventions.

Freemasonry in Europe.

The Dublin Nation having published a series of articles in view of the masterly expose of Freemasonry by Monseigneur Dupanloup, (a member of the Senate and of the French Academy) was written to by a "Master Mason" in defense of secretism. The Nation replies as follows:

We are glad to receive the letter of "a Master Mason" which we publish in another column. That defense of the Freemason order is such a one as we expected, and confirms us in the conviction that no satisfactory answer is possible to the frightful charges brought against the craft. Here we have a high Masonic official writing to us in reply to our recent article on Freemasonry—articles which contained an array of facts calculated to make all honest men stand aghast with surprise and horror—and what has he to say? Does he destroy or attempt to destroy those facts? Does he grapple with such candid and damning admissions as those of M. Louis Blanc (who is still living) as to the anti-social character of the organization? Does he take notice of the declaration of such official organs of the craft as the Monde-Maconnique, that "benevolence is not the object, but only one of the characteristics, and that the least essential, of Freemasonry?" What has he to say to the project of the Grand Orient of Belgium, in 1864, to suppress all religious education, or about the declaration of the Paris Lodge—"the Rose of Perfect Silence"—that faith in God takes away the dignity of man, troubles his reason, and may lead him to the abandonment of all morality? Does he notice the declaration of the official Dutch Freemason's Almanac for 1872, that the presence of the Bible on the altars of the craft is "an empty form"? What is his reply to his fellow-Freemason Felix Pyat, who calls the craft "the Church of the Revolution," or to that other "Master Mason" Barruel, who asserts that the final object of the plots of the grade of Kadosch (which is 'the soul of Freemasonry") is "the reintroduction of absolute liberty and quality through the destruction of all loyalty, and abrogation of all religious worship;" or to the proposal of the International Congress of Freemasons at Lugano in 1872 to throw into catechetical shape the blasphemous bible of the atheist Renan, and to make that compilation the handbook of religion in the social and democratic republic of the future?

Our correspondent, notwithstanding all his official advantages, is positively silent on all these points; he abandons the field without a contest. He "emphatically denies and repudiates," indeed—for himself—the doctrine that the perpetration of a crime may be an act of virtue; but this only proves, if it proves anything, the position of Louis Blanc and other Freemasons, that a man may belong to the craft, and may even occupy a (nominally) high grade in it, and yet know comparatively nothing of its secrets.

But "a Master Mason" puts us five questions which he supposes will stagger us. As will be seen most of these tremendous queries are of such a nature that it would be perfectly allowable and entirely sufficient for us to tell him in reply to go to his books and learn something of a subject of which he appears to be so lamentably ignorant. But we prefer, for more reasons than one, not to stand on our strict rights in the matter; and we accordingly proceed to give "a Master Mason" the information of which he appears to be so badly in need. And first, when he asserts that we concluded from the expulsion of the Masonic order from nearly all the great nations that it was a very hot-bed of iniquity, we must tell him that he has a recourse to a very old and very transparent device in controversy. Setting up as your opponent's a worthless argument, and knocking it down, of course to everybody's satisfaction, is a piece of intellectual gymnastics for which there is no very general admiration.

His innocent refusal to accept our ipse-dixit as to the Masonic demonstration in support of the Commune will be found equally innocuous. He wants he says, some "reliable proof" that the object of the Masons on this occasion was for the purpose stated. We refer him to a pamphlet published in Belgium, entitled "Appeal to Freemasons of every Rite," and written by brother Thirifocq, who took a leading if not the leading part in the demonstration; who says in this very document that the Commune was "the greatest revolution which had been given to the world to contemplate;" and who explicitly declared war against the Versailles government. There are other authorities on the point, such as the official organ of the Commune; but probably brother Thirifocq's testimony will be sufficient for "a Master Mason." Then "a Master Mason" is very anxious for a confirmation of our statement that Frederick of Orange resigned his place in the craft because he was a Christian. If he will turn to the publication entitled La Franc Maconnerie dans l'etat and published in Brussels in 1859, or to Barruel (a Master Mason) in his Memoires pour servir a l'Histoire du Jacobinisme (Homburg edition, 1803), or to the Annales Maconniques (vols. II., III.), he will find that Frederick sent to the head of his lodge a statement of his reason for the step he had taken, and that his words were very clear and explicit. "I am a Christian, and will ever remain one. Everybody will understand how extremely painful it is for me to be compelled to speak of the abuse made in the Masonic legend of the teaching of my Divine Master. How could I write the story of thy life, O divine Jesus, and then call this story the Legend of the Degree of Rosicrucian? Where is the Jew who will venture to deny the crucifixion? And can it be that the brethren of the craft meanwhile regard this death as a parable, and range it with the mass of fictions which are successively set before them?" Will this satisfy "a Master Mason"? But to pass on to our correspondent's fifth question, "Where did we get the profession of faith made in the Liege Lodge in 1865, that the name of God was a word void of sense? M. Neut, the well-known Belgian, is our authority, and he has in vain challenged the Freemasons to disprove his statements; and we find it the easier to credit him when we see in the "Ritual of the Mason Apprentice" by brother Ragon, that the neophyte who is about to be received is told by his "Venerable" such things as that "Deism is belief in God without revelation or form of worship," and that this is "destined to replace all religions." Does "a Master Mason" mean to insinuate that no member of the craft has ever yet divulged any of its secrets and been dogged to his very death-bed for the offense? If he does, he must think us very simple-minded indeed.
